PREFACE TO VOLUME 8
(Annotations – May 2002)

Annotations to this volume include case notes of applicable court decisions through public domain citation 2001 MT 274, volume 307 Montana Reports page 301, volume 38 Pacific Reporter (3rd Series) page 431, volume 178 Federal Supplement (2nd Series) page 1366, volume 276 Federal Reporter (3rd Series) page 582, and volume 151 Supreme Court Reporter page 455. Digests of Montana Attorney General's opinions are provided through volume 49 opinion number 17 of the Report and Official Opinions of Attorney General. Citations to the Administrative Rules of Montana implementing or authorized by a section of law and adopted through Issue 4 of the 2002 Montana Administrative Register are also included.

Amendment notes listed under compiler's comments are intended to explain only amendments made in the year indicated and may not accurately reflect current statutory language because of subsequent amendment.

The annotations are provided as a convenience to the user and are not intended to be an exhaustive compilation of the law under a given statute or in a given area.

TITLE 39
LABOR

CHAPTER 1
DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Section Not Codified: Section 41-1606, R.C.M. 1947, transferring powers, duties, and functions from the Department of Agriculture, Labor and Industry to the Department of Labor and Industry, was not codified in the MCA. The section has not been repealed and is still valid law. Citation may be made to sec. 8, Ch. 177, L. 1951.

Part 1
General Provisions

39-1-102. Duties of department.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 inserted second sentence concerning investigation and enforcement of discrimination laws; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Case Notes

Claim for Overtime — Jurisdiction of Department of Labor and Industry: The Department of Labor and Industry had jurisdiction to hold a hearing and make a ruling on a heavy equipment operator's claim against his employer for overtime wages because: (1) it has a duty under 39-1-102 to enforce state wage laws affecting Montana citizens; (2) under 39-3-209, it must investigate alleged violations of such laws and institute actions for unpaid wages; (3) it may take assignments of wage claims in trust and maintain any proceeding to enforce the claims; (4) it may enforce the federal Fair Labor Standards Act and institute an action on behalf of an employee to recover overtime wages due and unpaid under that Act; and (5) traditional notions of jurisdiction gave the department jurisdiction, as employer and employee were Montana residents, employer's principal place of business was in Montana, the employment contract was entered into in Montana, and part of the work was performed here. To rule that since part of the work was performed in North Dakota there was no jurisdiction in the department would unduly burden the parties, would lead to an oppressive requirement that they litigate in each state a claim for wages allegedly due for work performed there, and would fractionalize employee's claim to the extent that its pursuit would not be worthwhile. Hoehne v. Sherrodd, Inc., 205 M 365, 668 P2d 232, 40 St. Rep. 1363 (1983).

Attorney General's Opinions

Authority to Issue Subpoenas Duces Tecum: This section does not authorize the Department of Labor and Industry to issue subpoenas duces tecum to compel a public works contractor to transmit time sheets and payroll records of employees engaged in public works contract work to the Department's office. 36 A.G. Op. 90 (1976).

39-1-103. Powers of department.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: Deleted (3) that provided section does not confer on Commissioner authority to interfere with matters under control of Workers' Compensation Division nor does Commissioner have duty to enforce workers' compensation laws, including safety laws. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

Attorney General's Opinions

Authority to Issue Subpoenas Duces Tecum: This section does not authorize the Department of Labor and Industry to issue subpoenas duces tecum to compel a public works contractor to transmit time sheets and payroll records of employees engaged in public works contract work to the Department's office. 36 A.G. Op. 90 (1976).

39-1-104. Cooperation with federal government.

Case Notes

Inclusion of District Construction Allowance in Base Pay for Purposes of Calculating Overtime Pay: Plaintiff employees' union sought a declaratory judgment that the district construction allowance (DCA) paid to eligible state employees should be included in their base pay for purposes of calculating overtime compensation. The District Court found that the DCA should not be included in the base pay and granted summary judgment to defendant state agency. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment. Defendant did not meet its burden of showing that the DCA fit plainly and unmistakenly within one of the exceptions to the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), 29 U.S.C. 201 through 219. The FLSA exceptions are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting them, and the employer bears the burden of showing that the employee fits within the terms of the exception. All remuneration that does not fall within one of the seven exclusionary clauses of the FLSA must be added into the total compensation received by the employee before the hourly pay rate is determined. In the present case, the expenses at issue were not incurred on the employer's behalf or for its benefit or convenience, but rather the money was reimbursement for normal, everyday expenses incurred by the employee for traveling to and from work and thus could not be excluded from the regular rate as reimbursement for travel expenses under 29 U.S.C. 207(e)(2). Further, the agency could not be relieved of liability under the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 (PPA), 29 U.S.C. 251, et seq., because under the PPA, that relief does not extend to an employer if the activity is compensable by either an express provision of a written or nonwritten contract in effect, at the time of the activity, between the employer and the employee, the employee's agent, or the collective bargaining representative, as was the case here. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 17, 287 M 229, 954 P2d 21, 55 St. Rep. 60 (1998).

State Enforcement of FLSA Claim: The Montana Department of Labor is not precluded by 39-3-408 or the Fair Labor Standards Act from seeking enforcement of the FLSA claim of an employee working in Montana, but rather is authorized by 39-3-202, 39-3-211, 29 C.F.R. 515.8, and FLSA to do so. St. v. Holman Aviation Co., 176 M 31, 575 P2d 923 (1978).

CHAPTER 2
THE EMPLOYMENT RELATIONSHIP

Chapter Case Notes

Master-Servant Relationship Between Railroad and Locomotive Service Facility Established by Common Control — Applicability of Federal Employers' Liability Act: Employees of the Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc. (LRC), sought damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51, et seq., alleging that they were injured during the course of their employment while nominally employed by LRC, but that LRC was actually the servant of Montana Rail Link, Inc. (MRL), which engaged in the business of common carrier by railroad in interstate commerce. MRL's affirmative defense was that plaintiffs could not recover FELA benefits against LRC because LRC was not a railroad and that they could not recover FELA benefits against MRL because they were not employed by MRL. The issue on appeal was whether the District Court erred when it held that plaintiffs were not employed by a common carrier by railroad for purposes of FELA. As applicable law, the Supreme Court cited Kelley v. S. Pac. Co., 419 US 318, 42 L Ed 2d 498, 95 S Ct 472 (1974). Among the factors typically considered for purposes of determining whether a master-servant relationship exists, the most significant is the degree of control that the alleged master exercises over the work of the alleged servant. In this case, a master-servant relationship was established between MRL and LRC not only by control of business practices through common ownership and directorship, but also through: (1) MRL's direct, frequent, and unique supervision of LRC employees; (2) MRL's at-will acquisition of LRC property, including land exchanges without consideration or for less consideration than full market value, when acquisition was in MRL's self-interest; (3) LRC's dependence on MRL for training, tools, equipment, and parts; and (4) MRL's use of LRC property for its own purposes without compensation, including the common sharing of physical facilities. Based on the master-servant relationship, the LRC employees were also considered employees of MRL at the time that they were injured and were thus covered under FELA. Watts v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 1999 MT 18, 293 M 167, 975 P2d 283, 56 St. Rep. 88 (1999).

Reciprocal Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Between Employer and Employee — Character of Employee Relevant to Expectation of Job Security: The Supreme Court applied the holding in Los Angeles Mem. Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 791 F2d 1356 (9th Cir. 1986), in finding that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing mandated a reciprocal duty in the employment relationship, applicable to both employer and employee. Breach by one party served to negate any breach by the other party, so that neither party was entitled to recovery. This rule applied only narrowly to factual contexts where both breaches concerned the same issue and occurred during one episode of the relationship. In the present case, an employee who breached the covenant could not then complain of unfair dealing by the employer. The District Court improperly excluded evidence of specific misconduct related to the employee's character because the alleged misconduct was relevant to whether the employee had a reasonable expectation of job security and could thus claim protection under the covenant. Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988). See also Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), and Dare v. Mont. Petroleum Mkt. Co., 212 M 274, 687 P2d 1015, 41 St. Rep. 1735 (1984).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Interfering With Freedom of Religion: The Supreme Court upheld a summary judgment dismissing a wrongful discharge complaint against a religious school that dismissed a teacher without notice or hearing. In holding that denying application of the tort of bad faith in this case did not result in an intrusion into church affairs, the court relied on the standard set out in Wis. v. Yoder, 406 US 205, 32 L Ed 2d 15, 92 S Ct 1526 (1972), that ". . . only those interest of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion". The majority of the court felt that the bad faith tort claim did not meet the Yoder standard and that to allow the lawsuit to go forward would impermissibly interfere with the free exercise of religion. Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794, 43 St. Rep. 2059 (1986).

Tort of Breach of Duty to Deal Fairly and in Good Faith in Employment Relationship — Punitive Damages Recoverable: Breach of the duty owed to deal fairly and in good faith in the employment relationship is a tort for which punitive damages may be recovered under 27-1-221 if defendant's conduct is sufficiently culpable. Gates v. Life of Montana, 205 M 304, 668 P2d 213, 40 St. Rep. 1287 (1983).

Part 1
General Provisions

39-2-101. Employment defined.

Case Notes

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Claims Involving Employment Relationship With No Written Contract: Because the employment relationship is contractual in nature, the applicable statute of limitations for claims involving employment relationships with no written contract is 5 years. Thus, for purposes of receiving unpaid wages, an employee may bring a claim any time within 5 years of the date the claim accrues. Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), applied, as to claims for payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but not wages that become due after the last day of employment, in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Temporary Employment — No Recall Rights: A labor agreement provided that an employee would not have recall rights under a seniority clause unless he was employed for 6 continuous months. A union employee was hired to temporarily replace an injured permanent employee and worked for a period 2 days short of 6 months. The injured employee returned but worked only 3 days. Twenty days later, the union employee was rehired for a period 1 day short of 6 months. The employer then hired a permanent employee to replace the union employee, who contended the contract was violated by the employer's failure to recall him for the permanent position. Recall rights were not earned by the union employee under the contract because the position fell short of 6 months on both occasions. The 20-day break in employment represented a substantial break in service; therefore, the employment was not continuous or renewable. Local 1334 v. Great Falls, 233 M 432, 760 P2d 99, 45 St. Rep. 1611 (1988).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Implied in All Employment Situations: It is well settled that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing exists in all employment situations and that although the duty arises out of the employment relationship, it exists apart from, and in addition to, any terms agreed to by the parties. Malloy v. Judge's Foster Home Program, Inc., 229 M 317, 746 P2d 1073, 44 St. Rep. 1996 (1987); Gates v. Life of Mont. Ins. Co., 205 M 304, 668 P2d 213, 40 St. Rep. 1287 (1983).

Duty to Provide Safe Working Place — Railroad Employee: In a case brought by an employee injured while working for a subsidiary of a railroad, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was owed the duty to provide him with a safe place to work. Noting that giving the jury information about the subsidiaries might well have been highly prejudicial to the defendant railroad, the Supreme Court nonetheless felt obliged to consider it in this case. The plaintiff was working directly in the operations of the railroad in every sense of the word. The railroad would not be absolved of the responsibility to provide a safe place to work for employees who are technically employed by a subsidiary corporation but whose employment is directly related to the operations of a railroad. Closeness of the businesses of the parent and subsidiary companies was a factor in the court's conclusion that both corporations owed the duty to provide the plaintiff with a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 521 near beginning, after "require", deleted "as a condition for employment or continuation of employment" and at end inserted "as a condition for employment or continuation of employment"; deleted (1)(b) and (1)(c) that read: "(b) as a condition for employment, a person to submit to a blood or urine test, except for employment in:

(i) hazardous work environments;

(ii) jobs the primary responsibility of which is security, public safety, or fiduciary responsibility; or

(iii) jobs involving the intrastate commercial transportation of persons or commodities by a commercial motor carrier or an employee subject to driver qualification requirements; and

(c) as a condition for continuation of employment, an employee to submit to a blood or urine test, except when:

(i) the employer has reason to believe that the employee's faculties are impaired on the job as a result of alcohol consumption or illegal drug use;

(ii) the employer has reason to believe that an employee may have contributed to a work-related accident that causes death or personal injury or property damage in excess of $1,500; or

(iii) drug testing is being conducted at an employee's regular biennial physical for employment in jobs involving the intrastate commercial motor carrier transportation of persons or commodities"; deleted (2) through (6) that read: "(2) Prior to the administration of a drug or alcohol test, the person, firm, corporation, or other business entity or its representative shall adopt the written testing procedure that is provided in 49 CFR, part 40, and make it available to all persons subject to testing.

(3) The person, firm, corporation, or other business entity or its representative shall provide a copy of drug or alcohol test results to the person tested and provide the person with the opportunity, at the expense of the person requiring the test, to obtain a confirmatory test of the blood or urine by an independent laboratory selected by the person tested. The person tested must be given the opportunity to rebut or explain the results of either test or both tests. In the case of an accident referred to in subsection (1)(c)(ii), the tests may not be delayed, but the person, firm, corporation, or other business entity or its representative shall, as soon as possible, make a written finding as to whether the act or failure to act is believed to be a direct or proximate cause of the accident and shall provide the tested employee with a copy of the finding. The written record of a blood or urine test of an employee who is required to submit to testing pursuant to subsection (1)(c)(ii) and whose acts or failure to act is subsequently found not to be the direct or proximate cause of a work-related accident must be removed from the employee's work record and be destroyed.

(4) Adverse action may not be taken against a person tested under subsections (1)(b), (1)(c), (2), and (3) if the person tested presents a reasonable explanation or medical opinion indicating that the results of the test were not caused by alcohol consumption or illegal drug use.

(5) A person who violates this section is guilty of a misdemeanor.

(6) As used in this section:

(a) "commercial motor carrier" has the meaning provided in 61-1-320 and in 69-12-101; and

(b) "intrastate" means commerce or trade that is begun, carried on, and completed wholly in this state."

Severability: Section 10, Ch. 521, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 358 in (6)(a), at end, inserted reference to 61-1-320; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 445 inserted (1)(c)(ii) concerning employee contributing to work-related accident; in (3) inserted third and fourth sentences concerning tests when employee allegedly contributed to work-related accident; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (1)(b)(iii) allowing blood and urine testing of employees and job applicants involved in intrastate commercial transportation of persons or commodities; in (1)(c), near end after "drug use", inserted exception clause; near middle of (2), after "procedure", inserted "that is provided in 49 CFR, part 40"; deleted former (2)(a) through (2)(f) outlining provisions required of a testing procedure (see 1989 MCA for text); inserted (6) defining commercial motor carrier and intrastate; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 20, 1991.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1)(b) through (4) (see 1987 Session Law for text); and deleted former (2) that read: "(2) This section shall not apply to public law enforcement agencies."

Case Notes

Employee Lie Detector Test Ban — Excepting Law Enforcement Agencies — Equal Protection Violated: Provision that public law enforcement agencies are not covered by law forbidding private and public employers from requiring a lie detector test as a condition of employment or continued employment violates the right of employees of law enforcement agencies to equal protection under the state constitution. (Provision deleted by sec. 1, Ch. 482, L. 1987.) Strict scrutiny test was not applied because the proper foundation for it was not laid. However, even under the rational basis test, the provision must fail because there is no expressed purpose for the classification on the face of the statute or in the statute's legislative history; thus the provision is overbroad and vague on its face. The court would have no trouble finding a rational relationship to a legitimate governmental interest had the Legislature provided any evidence that the provision was applied only to police officers in view of their positions of high public trust and integrity; however, a statute specifically excluding police from a general statutory protection for all other employees would probably not survive a sustained strict scrutiny test attack. Statutory Definition of Good Cause Applicable — No New Standard Adopted: In asserting her wrongful discharge claim, Miller contended that a new standard of good cause be adopted based on whether: (1) the employee satisfied the general obligations of an employee described in this section; (2) the employer followed industry standards of progressive discipline; and (3) the employer exercised bad faith. The Supreme Court declined to adopt the suggested standard, opting instead for the statutory definition in 39-2-903. Based on its extensive findings, including those that Miller failed to implement new procedures and delayed completing tasks, the District Court correctly concluded that Miller's termination was reasonably based on job-related grounds and that, in light of the fact that the employer followed the express written provisions of its personnel policies, dismissal was proper. Termination of "At Will" Employment Not a Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Beliefs and Requests of Employer Held and Made in Good Faith: Plaintiff, general manager of a health club, sued the corporation owning the club and its principal shareholder for lost wages and profits when plaintiff was terminated from his position. The District Court held for defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the record of plaintiff's deficient management of the health club gave its owner fair and honest reasons to terminate plaintiff's employment. The requests made by defendants were reasonable, and plaintiff's failure to comply, along with other evidence of poor management, justified the termination. Scott v. Termination of Employment

Part Case Notes

Termination of Police Officer Affirmed — Right of Employer to Compel Answers to Employment-Related Questions — Due Process: Wolny appealed his termination as a Bozeman police officer for inappropriate use of force, making inconsistent statements, and failing to orally answer followup questions. The Supreme Court noted that Wolny was entitled to fundamental due process rights, including notice, an explanation of the evidence against him, and an opportunity to respond. However the court found that the officer's due process rights were not violated. The Police Commission properly considered the testimony of witnesses, correctly held that Wolny was insubordinate for failing to orally answer questions that were reasonably related to Wolny's fitness to perform duties or to his job performance, properly excluded the disciplinary history of other police officers, and adequately complied with its progressive discipline policy despite the fact that Wolny's personnel file was not offered as evidence. Wolny v. Bozeman, 2001 MT 166, 306 M 137, 30 P3d 1085 (2001), following In re Raynes, 215 M 484, 698 P2d 856 (1985), Boreen v. Christensen, 267 M 405, 884 P2d 761 (1994), and In re Termination of Abbey v. Billings Police Comm'n, 268 M 354, 886 P2d 922 (1994).

Federal Law Applying to Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempts Claim of Violation of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Common-Law Claim for Retaliatory Discharge Not Preempted: Winslow was fired from his job with Montana Rail Link, where he had been employed under a collective bargaining agreement, and brought an action in District Court. In his complaint, Winslow included claims for violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and common-law retaliatory discharge. The District Court dismissed both claims. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the claim for violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, citing Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720 (1992), for the proposition that such a claim is preempted by federal law because the covenant arises out of the employment contract and that that contract, in the case of a collective bargaining agreement, is governed by federal law. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court on dismissal of the common-law wrongful discharge claim, citing Foster for the proposition that a common-law claim, because it does not depend upon interpretation of the employment contract, is an independent claim and is not preempted by the federal Railway Labor Act. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Employment Contingent on Adherence to Teachings of Roman Catholic Church — Discrimination Statutes Inapplicable: Until her termination in 1993, Parker-Bigback was employed by St. Labre School, which is operated by the St. Labre Indian School Education Association, an institution based on the teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church. Parker-Bigback filed a complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights, alleging that she was discriminated against because her termination was based on marital status or sex discrimination. The school maintained that Parker-Bigback's position was eliminated to establish a personnel department, which Parker-Bigback contended was simply a pretext for terminating her employment based on her lifestyle of cohabiting with a man who was not her husband. However, one condition of Parker-Bigback's employment was an agreement to adhere to the moral and religious teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church and to not engage in any personal conduct or lifestyle contrary to church policies. Thus, it made no difference whether Parker-Bigback was married or single—if she cohabited with someone of the opposite sex to whom she was not married, she would be in at variance with church teachings in violation of her contract.

Therefore, this was not a case about marital status or gender, but rather about conduct Parker-Bigback agreed to avoid as a condition of employment. Nothing in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., or 49-2-303 prohibits discrimination based on conduct, nor was any authority offered to persuade the Supreme Court that Parker-Bigback's conduct involved a right of such high order that it would overcome the school's right to freely exercise its religion through its employment practices. Even if she was terminated for cohabitation, her rights to be free from discrimination were not involved, so her employment discrimination case was properly dismissed by summary judgment for the school. Parker-Bigback v. St. Labre School, 2000 MT 210, 301 M 16, 7 P3d 361, 57 St. Rep. 823 (2000). See also Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794 (1986).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled and the Burdine analysis adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992). Heiat was followed in Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), and Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996).

Material Question of Value of Profit Share Granted Employee as Element of Termination Agreement — Summary Judgment Improper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for a distribution to him of a share of company profits, both prior to and after the termination of employment. Any issue of profit distributions prior to termination was barred by a waiver of claims. However, a question of material fact regarding the calculation of and disproportionate nature of the profit sharing distribution after termination was sufficient to preclude summary judgment because the amount to be paid was unknown to both parties at the time of termination. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Unsigned Contract for Five-Year Term as Resulting in "At Will" Employment — Basis for Termination: Plaintiff, general manager of a health club, sued the corporation owning the club and its principal shareholder for lost wages and profits when plaintiff was terminated from his position. The District Court held for defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because a written agreement drafted by the parties had never been signed, the agreement was invalid and not binding upon the parties. Therefore, plaintiff's employment was for an unspecified term, or employment "at will", and the plaintiff could be terminated at will, without the defendant employer following the termination provisions of the unsigned agreement. Scott v. Eagle Watch Inv., Inc., 251 M 191, 828 P2d 1346, 48 St. Rep. 1136 (1991).

Evidence of Other Than Economic Motives for Firing — Sufficiency of Jury Issue Upheld: In an unlawful discharge action, the employer claimed on appeal that the employee offered insufficient evidence to show that his firing was motivated other than by the economic motives claimed by the employer. The Supreme Court held that the present case was unlike Cecil v. Cardinal Drilling Co., 244 M 405, 797 P2d 232 (1990), cited by the employer for the proposition that the employee must produce evidence of other motives. The court distinguished Cecil, stating that that case was decided under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which authorizes a nonprobationary employee to be fired for good cause. In Cecil, the plaintiff had insufficient evidence to defeat a motion for summary judgment, while in this case the court found that there was evidence from which the jury could conclude that the employer had noneconomic motives for firing the plaintiff. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 39, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Negligent Reduction in Force and Negligent Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Jury Instructions Upheld: In a wrongful discharge case arising prior to the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, the employer appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the District Court's jury instructions improperly authorized the jury to find that the employer's reduction in force was negligently carried out and that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing could be breached negligently. The Supreme Court held that the employer's reliance on Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954 (1990), was misplaced and that the court had previously held in other cases that negligence could form the basis for a wrongful discharge action. Because there was evidence that the employer was negligent in following its personnel policies handbook and in investigating its claims of inefficiency by its employee, the Supreme Court held that the jury instructions were properly given. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 39, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Inapplicable to Lateral Transfer: Following the rationale set out in Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), the Supreme Court found it inappropriate to apply the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to a termination following the refusal of an employee to accept a lateral transfer of employment. Finstad v. Mont. Power Co., 241 M 10, 785 P2d 1372, 47 St. Rep. 39 (1990).

Refusal to Accept Lateral Transfer — Failure to Prove Constructive Discharge: Plaintiff, employed by the Montana Power Company (MPC) for 22 ½ years, was stationed in Cut Bank as a field engineer. Despite the urging of his MPC supervisor, he refused to accept a transfer to Butte when MPC closed the Cut Bank office and his employment ended. Plaintiff alleged constructive discharge; MPC contended he chose to terminate rather than accept the transfer. The Supreme Court examined the facts and determined that plaintiff failed to present any evidence that he was actually or constructively discharged, but rather that he refused to accept what amounted to a lateral transfer without a change in job responsibilities, earnings, or benefits. Finstad v. Mont. Power Co., 241 M 10, 785 P2d 1372, 47 St. Rep. 39 (1990).

Occasional Compliments From Employer — No Expectation of Job Security: During her year-long employment, plaintiff received compliments on her work from persons other than her employer and occasional compliments from her employer, but her immediate supervisor was continually critical of her performance. The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing did not arise in this situation because the employer gave plaintiff no reasonable expectation of job security. Objective manifestations of job security must come from the employer, not from persons outside the work place, in order to establish an expectation of job security. Karell v. Am. Cancer Soc'y, 239 M 168, 779 P2d 506, 46 St. Rep. 1593 (1989).

Employer Action or Inaction — Question of Fact in Constructive Discharge: The Supreme Court relied on the explanation of the constructive discharge doctrine set out in Snell v. Mont.-Dak. Util. Co., 198 M 56, 643 P2d 841 (1982), in holding that it is a question of fact whether by action or inaction an employer has rendered working conditions so oppressive that resignation is the only reasonable alternative. Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989), followed in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993).

Discharge From Employment — Injury to Be Expected — Intentional Conduct Exclusion Applied: Employee claimed he was intentionally fired for refusing to violate Montana law, resulting in emotional and mental injury. The employer tendered the suit to National Surety Corporation, which refused to defend on grounds that the policy did not provide coverage for an occurrence of this sort. The District Court agreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that the claimed injury fell outside the definition of "occurrence". Although an intentional act may constitute an occurrence when the alleged injury was not the expected or intended result of the conduct, here there was no injury alleged that could not be expected to flow from the termination. Therefore, the intentional conduct exclusion was properly applied. Daly Ditches Irrigation District v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 234 M 537, 764 P2d 1276, 45 St. Rep. 2112 (1988), distinguishing Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984); Millers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Strainer, 204 M 162, 663 P2d 338 (1983); and NW. Cas. Co. v. Phelan, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979). See also Mary & Alice Ford Nursing Home v. Fireman's Ins., 446 N.Y.S.2d 599 (1982), and Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 242 Cal. Rptr. 454, 196 Cal. App. 3d 1205 (1987).

"Constructive Discharge" Construed: As outlined in Pittman v. Hattiesburg Municipal Separate School District, 644 F2d 1071 (5th Cir. 1981), constructive discharge occurs when an employer deliberately makes an employee's working conditions so intolerable that the employee is forced into an involuntary resignation. The federal District Court found that plaintiff could prove constructive discharge and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing if it was shown that a supervisor's intentional conduct caused plaintiff's mental breakdown, leading to loss of plaintiff's job. Oedewaldt v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc., 687 F. Supp. 517, 45 St. Rep. 1366 (D.C. Mont. 1988). But see Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), wherein the Montana Supreme Court declined to recognize the doctrine of constructive discharge beyond discrimination cases and held that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing applied only in cases of employee termination.

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Applicable Only to Employee Termination: The assertion that breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a separate tort from wrongful discharge is correct. However, the covenant is applicable only in cases of employee termination. When there was no express termination and there were insufficient facts to establish constructive discharge, summary dismissal of a charge of breach of the covenant was affirmed. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Insufficient Claim of Constructive Discharge: Plaintiff's claims that she was forced to resign because of negative comments by her supervisors and denial of a raise, along with comments by fellow employees that they would leave rather than continue in plaintiff's position, did not constitute genuine issues of material fact to indicate constructive discharge. The doctrine of constructive discharge has not been recognized beyond discrimination cases. Plaintiff's subjective judgment that her working conditions had become intolerable was insufficient to meet the high burden of proof required to prove constructive discharge. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Circumstances Warranting Good Faith Discharge — Claim Not Stating Public Concern — Summary Judgment Proper: An employee was issued reprimands, notices of corrective discipline, and notices of punitive discipline but still failed to perform assigned duties or correct job inadequacies. He had the chance to rebut charges of incompetency but chose not to do so. He had the right of grievance but failed to exercise it. His claim of wrongful discharge did not state a public policy concern, but rather was a personal matter. The Supreme Court declined to interfere with the employer's right to manage its affairs and hire employees who will perform their jobs so long as there is a standard of discipline and the employer abides by it in good faith. Summary dismissal of the wrongful discharge claim was proper. Belcher v. Dept. of State Lands, 228 M 352, 742 P2d 475, 44 St. Rep. 1591 (1987).

Firing Not Due to Economic Necessity: There was sufficient evidence presented to rebut the employer's claim that the employee plaintiff was discharged because of economic necessity, thus supporting submission of the case to the jury based on breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Kerr v. Gibson's Prod. Co. of Bozeman, Inc., 226 M 69, 733 P2d 1292, 44 St. Rep. 462 (1987).

Alleged Violations of Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempted by Federal Labor Law: Although a collective bargaining agreement did not specifically address standards to be applied in a situation where an employee was discharged, tort claims alleging negligence and breach of good faith were substantially dependent on terms in the contract establishing wage schedules, union representation, and adherence to a grievance and arbitration procedure. In determining that summary judgment was proper, the Supreme Court cited Allis-Chalmers v. Lueck, 471 US 202, 85 L Ed 2d 206, 105 S Ct 1904 (1985), and reasoned that preemption of the tort claims by federal law was necessary to ensure a unified body of labor contract law and to preserve the central role of arbitration in labor disputes. Smith v. Mont. Power Co., 225 M 166, 731 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 124 (1987). See also Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 1293 (1987), where it was held that a party may not avoid the preemptive effect of federal labor law when a dispute involves an interpretation of a union contract by pleading in tort and that vacation pay is one item preempted by operation of federal law. But see Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), which relied on Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), to partially overrule Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301 (1986), and subsequent cases, including Smith, to the extent that a state law claim is preempted by federal law only when its resolution requires construing the collective bargaining agreement, even if the state law analysis involves the same factual considerations as the contractual determination under the collective bargaining agreement of whether the employee was discharged for just cause.

Foster was followed in Hanley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 254 M 379, 838 P2d 408, 49 St. Rep. 755 (1992), Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Explicit Contractual Provision Giving Greater Protection Than Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — No Application of Covenant: Where a collective bargaining agreement provided explicitly that employees could be discharged "only for just cause", the Supreme Court declined to imply the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to the employment relationship since the contractual agreement provided greater protection than the implied covenant. Such a covenant generally applies to "at will" employment contracts. Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 2163 (1986). See also Riley v. Warm Springs St. Hosp., 229 M 518, 748 P2d 455, 44 St. Rep. 2183 (1987).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Interfering With Freedom of Religion: The Supreme Court upheld a summary judgment dismissing a wrongful discharge complaint against a religious school that dismissed a teacher without notice or hearing. In holding that denying application of the tort of bad faith in this case did not result in an intrusion into church affairs, the court relied on the standard set out in Wis. v. Yoder, 406 US 205, 32 L Ed 2d 15, 92 S Ct 1526 (1972), that ". . . only those interest of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion". The majority of the court felt that the bad faith tort claim did not meet the Yoder standard and that to allow the lawsuit to go forward would impermissibly interfere with the free exercise of religion. Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794, 43 St. Rep. 2059 (1986).

Verdict of Zero Damages — No Abuse of Discretion: In a wrongful termination suit against newspaper, reporter Dawson appealed a District Court award of zero damages after the jury found in his favor on the issues of liability and proximate cause. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the newspaper had breached its duty of good faith and fair dealing and was the proximate cause of Dawson's damages, the reporter had three other sources of income and had failed to mitigate his damages by accepting comparable journalism work. Thus, the jury was justified in awarding zero damages. Dawson v. The Billings Gazette, 223 M 415, 726 P2d 826, 43 St. Rep. 1838 (1986).

Evidence of Wrongful Discharge — Submission to Jury: The Supreme Court, following its decision in Dare v. Mont. Petroleum Mkt. Co., 212 M 274, 687 P2d 1015, 41 St. Rep. 1735 (1984), found that respondent's 28 years of employment gave her a secure and objective basis for believing that if her work was satisfactorily performed, her employment would continue. The court noted that, from evidence presented, the jury could have found that appellants had no fair and honest cause for discharge and in fact had ulterior motives. A case for jury deliberation was presented on the issue of wrongful termination. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Support for Termination — No Use of After-Acquired Evidence: After-acquired evidence that had not been examined for the purpose of making a termination decision could not be used to support termination at time of trial and was properly excluded by the trial court. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Wrongfully Terminated Employee to Seek Work — Inferior Employment Not Mandated: A wrongfully terminated employee has a duty to reasonably seek and maintain other employment but has no duty to mitigate damages by accepting inferior employment from a former employer. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Severance Pay — Interpretation of Termination: Plaintiff was a data processing manager for Hoerner Waldorf Corporation. In 1977, Hoerner Waldorf merged with Champion International Corporation. Champion adopted a severance pay policy for salaried employees of either corporation whose employment was terminated as a result of the merger. Champion offered plaintiff a position at a salary equal to that he was receiving. Plaintiff felt the new position was not of the same status and refused the offer. Plaintiff contended he was entitled to severance pay. The Supreme Court held that the severance pay policy was based on termination because of the merger. The court found that because of the job offer and under the authority of Towne v. Towne, 117 M 453, 159 P2d 352 (1945), plaintiff was not terminated and was not entitled to severance pay. Linz v. Champion Int'l Corp., 208 M 99, 675 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 198 (1984).

Wrongful Discharge: A person under an employment contract terminable at will may have an action for wrongful discharge only when a public policy is violated by his discharge. Examples of when such an action may lie include discharge for refusal to commit perjury, assertion of right to workers' compensation benefits, and refusal of sexual relations. Keneally v. Orgain, 186 M 1, 606 P2d 127, 37 St. Rep. 154 (1980).

Refusal to Participate in Sterilization: Once a discharged hospital employee had established that her discharge was brought about in substantial part by her refusal to participate in a sterilization, it then became the burden of the hospital to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have discharged the employee even if she had not exercised her right of refusal. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702, 36 St. Rep. 1075 (1979).

Burden of Proof: Employer, who introduced evidence of drinking, hangovers, and other matters in an effort to establish cause for discharge but whose superintendent testified as to employee's good work and that employer instructed him to tell employee that employer did not have any more work, was running out of money, and could not carry a crew through the winter, failed to establish that employee's discharge was for "good cause". Ameline v. Pack & Co., 157 M 301, 485 P2d 689 (1971), distinguished in Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Section Not Applicable to Avoid Workers' Compensation Coverage: Plaintiff was working in an underground mine when a fire broke out. Plaintiff was trapped in the mine because the mine operator blocked an exit. Plaintiff argued that his employment relation ceased when he abandoned his work to seek safety from the fire and therefore he was not covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. The plaintiff based his right to terminate his employment on 39-2-505 (now repealed). The court held that the section is not applicable. Wirta v. N. Butte Min. Co., 64 M 279, 210 P 332 (1922).

Case Notes

Termination of Employment for Legitimate Business Reasons Insufficient Basis for Judgment as Matter of Law: As set out in Kneeland v. Luzenac Am., Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), a motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted only if it appears that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate references that can be drawn from the evidence, and there is a complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to a jury. In this case, an employer maintained that its employee was terminated for legitimate business reasons and evidence existed to support that contention, but that did not constitute a sufficient basis for judgment as a matter of law in light of other evidence submitted by the employee tending to show that the termination was not for legitimate business reasons. Denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law was proper. Braulick v. Hathaway Meats, Inc., 1999 MT 57, 294 M 1, 980 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 241 (1999).

Nonstatutory Exceptions to At-Will Termination: Aside from statutory enactments, Montana courts have recognized four exceptions to the right of at-will employers to terminate employees: (1) the discharge violates public policy; (2) the discharge breaches an express or implied promise of job security; (3) the discharge breaches the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (4) negligent discharge. Prout v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 236 M 152, 772 P2d 288, 46 St. Rep. 257 (1989), followed in Kittelson v. Archie Cochrane Motors, Inc., 248 M 512, 813 P2d 424, 48 St. Rep. 535 (1991).

Master and Servant

39-2-601. Servant defined.

Case Notes

Master-Servant Relationship Between Railroad and Locomotive Service Facility Established by Common Control — Applicability of Federal Employers' Liability Act: Employees of the Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc. (LRC), sought damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51, et seq., alleging that they were injured during the course of their employment while nominally employed by LRC, but that LRC was actually the servant of Montana Rail Link, Inc. (MRL), which engaged in the business of common carrier by railroad in interstate commerce. MRL's affirmative defense was that plaintiffs could not recover FELA benefits against LRC because LRC was not a railroad and that they could not recover FELA benefits against MRL because they were not employed by MRL. The issue on appeal was whether the District Court erred when it held that plaintiffs were not employed by a common carrier by railroad for purposes of FELA. As applicable law, the Supreme Court cited Kelley v. S. Pac. Co., 419 US 318, 42 L Ed 2d 498, 95 S Ct 472 (1974). Among the factors typically considered for purposes of determining whether a master-servant relationship exists, the most significant is the degree of control that the alleged master exercises over the work of the alleged servant. In this case, a master-servant relationship was established between MRL and LRC not only by control of business practices through common ownership and directorship, but also through: (1) MRL's direct, frequent, and unique supervision of LRC employees; (2) MRL's at-will acquisition of LRC property, including land exchanges without consideration or for less consideration than full market value, when acquisition was in MRL's self-interest; (3) LRC's dependence on MRL for training, tools, equipment, and parts; and (4) MRL's use of LRC property for its own purposes without compensation, including the common sharing of physical facilities. Based on the master-servant relationship, the LRC employees were also considered employees of MRL at the time that they were injured and were thus covered under FELA. Watts v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 1999 MT 18, 293 M 167, 975 P2d 283, 56 St. Rep. 88 (1999).

Independent Contractor Distinguished: An operator of a wrecker service, called by highway construction company and taking direction from employee of highway construction company in righting a trailer, was for the time an employee of the company and not an independent contractor, and his widow was entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). Under the facts stated, he submitted himself to the direction of the employer as to details and means, and the rule that an advance agreement as to price for service to obtain a certain result without regard to length of time indicates relationship of independent contractor, was inapplicable. Grief v. Indus. Accident Fund, 108 M 519, 93 P2d 961 (1939).

Case Notes

Bar to Recovering Unpaid Wages: When the appellant's original complaint was filed on June 13, 1972, 27-2-202 barred him from recovering any unpaid wages due prior to June 13, 1964, because the Statute of Limitations on such an employment contract commenced at the end of each payday for services performed during the pay period. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150, 37 St. Rep. 236 (1980).

Implied Contract for Services — Statute of Limitations — Month-by-Month Accrual: The Statute of Limitations on an implied contract for services is 5 years under 27-2-202. The statute begins to run when an enforceable claim accrues. Section 39-2-602(2) creates the presumption that an employee is hired on a month-by-month basis. The statute therefore begins to run on each month's wages as that month's wages become due. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Reimbursement of Expenses: This section is broad enough to cover reimbursement of expenses incurred by the employee, and employee's claim for reimbursement accrued monthly in the absence of any other understanding. Cartwright v. Joyce, 155 M 478, 473 P2d 515 (1970).

Monthly Employment: Where the salary of an extra deputy in the County Clerk's office had been fixed at a monthly rate, her employment is presumed to have been from month to month, under this section terminable at the end of each monthly period and such employment was therefore of a temporary and not of a permanent character. Part 7
General Liability Arising From Employment Relationship

Part Case Notes

Limited Application of Nondelegable Duty Exception to Respondeat Superior Doctrine: Application of the nondelegable duty exception to the respondeat superior doctrine is limited to instances of safety in which the subject matter is inherently dangerous. The Supreme Court declined to modify the presently accepted version of the doctrine by adopting the exception, set out in section 214 of Restatement (Second) of Agency, that a master or other principal who is under a duty to provide protection for or to have care used to protect others or their property and who confides the performance or duty to a servant or other person is subject to liability to others for harm caused to them by the failure of the agent to perform the duty. Noting that there are several reasons for and against extending the liability of an employer when an intentional tort is committed only because or by virtue of the employment situation, the court opted to leave adoption of such a major doctrinal change to the Legislature. Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992).

Inappropriateness of Court Involvement in Decisions Regarding Employment in Managerial or Confidential Positions: Following purchase of a business by a new owner, the executive manager, who was a long-time employee of the former owner, was replaced by the new owner's long-time faithful employee. Such an action was the new owner's policy when purchasing businesses. The former executive manager brought a wrongful discharge suit. The Supreme Court declined to determine whether the replacement constituted a legitimate job-related reason, noting that it is inappropriate for courts to become involved in the day-to-day employment decisions of business when those decisions involve employees who occupy sensitive managerial or confidential positions. However, a company's interest in protecting its investment and in running its business as it sees fit is not as strong when applied to lower echelon employees and may be outweighed by the employees' interest in continued, secure employment. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991), followed in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993), and distinguished in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Liability of Immediate Corporate Employer: The statutory duty to provide a safe workplace is generally owed only by the immediate corporate employer. A complaint against a parent/grandparent corporation was properly dismissed when claimant failed to show: (1) that the subsidiary was a mere agent or alter ego of the parent company; (2) a sharing of day-to-day business activities between the corporations; (3) that the parent corporation had an independent duty to provide a safe workplace through a direct relationship of physical operations; or (4) that the corporate cloak was used to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, perpetrate fraud, or defend crime. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956, 46 St. Rep. 532 (1989).

Reciprocal Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Between Employer and Employee — Character of Employee Relevant to Expectation of Job Security: The Supreme Court applied the holding in Los Angeles Mem. Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 791 F2d 1356 (9th Cir. 1986), in finding that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing mandated a reciprocal duty in the employment relationship, applicable to both employer and employee. Breach by one party served to negate any breach by the other party, so that neither party was entitled to recovery. This rule applied only narrowly to factual contexts where both breaches concerned the same issue and occurred during one episode of the relationship. In the present case, an employee who breached the covenant could not then complain of unfair dealing by the employer. The District Court improperly excluded evidence of specific misconduct related to the employee's character because the alleged misconduct was relevant to whether the employee had a reasonable expectation of job security and could thus claim protection under the covenant. Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988). See also Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. Negligence in Selection of Contractor — Employer Liability: In an action involving a fertilizer salesman, the Supreme Court applied the general rule of section 411, Restatement (Second) of Torts, which provides that an employer is subject to liability for physical harm to third persons caused by his failure to exercise reasonable care to employ a competent and careful contractor to do work that involves a risk of physical harm unless it is skillfully and carefully done. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988).

Failure of Alter Ego and Principal/Agency Theories in Proving Duty of Parent Company to Provide Safe Workplace — No Separate Liability for Injury Covered by Subsidiary's Workers' Compensation: Plaintiff was an employee of a subsidiary company and argued that the subsidiary was so controlled by the parent company that the corporate cloak should be cast aside allowing suit against the parent company. The Supreme Court found no suggestion that the parent company was engaged directly in the business of the subsidiary or that the parent company was an operating entity engaged in operating its business at the place of injury. There was no indication that the subsidiary was used as a subterfuge to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, or perpetuate fraud; therefore, summary judgment was not precluded by the alter ego or principal/agency theory. Further, the subsidiary had discharged its responsibility for plaintiff by securing workers' compensation insurance, with the result that neither the parent company nor its subsidiary would be separately subject to liability for the injury which was covered by workers' compensation. Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Negligent Hiring and Negligent Entrustment: Insurer's agent participated in a Dillon rodeo, went to a barbecue at his Dillon home, and then went drinking in Dillon bars. While driving home in a vehicle he leased from a service company that was a wholly owned subsidiary of and had a common board of directors with insurer, he struck plaintiff, who sued insurer for negligent hiring and service company for negligent entrustment of the vehicle to agent. Insurer and service company sought summary judgment. That one to whom a vehicle is entrusted is licensed does not alone negate a finding of negligent entrustment. Since the record showed agent had at least once before been in an accident while intoxicated and it was alleged service company knew or should have known the agent had a propensity to drive while intoxicated, there was a material question of fact whether service company breached the duty not to entrust a vehicle to an incompetent driver, and summary judgment as to the service company was denied. Insurer's motion for summary judgment on the negligent hiring issue was denied, the court stating that it could find no Montana case on the negligent hiring doctrine. The questions of whether insurer should have foreseen that it was hiring a dangerous driver, that it was negligent in hiring the agent, and that the negligence proximately caused plaintiff's injuries were considered to be questions of fact not properly disposed of on summary judgment. The court also indicated that whether agent was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident was not an issue. Vollmer v. Bramlette, 594 F. Supp. 243, 41 St. Rep. 1964 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Respondeat Superior — Accident Caused by Insurance Agent: Defendant insurance company's agent participated in a Dillon rodeo, went to a barbecue at his Dillon home, and in the evening consumed alcohol at several Dillon bars. On the way home from the bars, he struck plaintiff while driving an auto the agent leased from insurer's wholly owned service company, which had a common board of directors with insurer. Plaintiff sued defendants under respondeat superior. There was evidence agent sold insurance as a result of participating in group recreational and social activities. Summary judgment for insurer was refused because there was a fact question as to whether agent's activities during the night in question were within the course and scope of his work as an insurance agent. However, summary judgment was granted in favor of the service company as there was no evidence that agent was acting as the agent of the service company at the time of the accident. Vollmer v. Bramlette, 594 F. Supp. 243, 41 St. Rep. 1964 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Stipulation of Dismissal of Action Against Police Officer as Applying to City and County Under "Respondeat Superior" Doctrine: A man fleeing from police officers was shot by one of them. The man later entered into a stipulation for dismissal with prejudice of the claim against the officer, but later the city and county, also defendants in the suit, were denied their motions for dismissal with prejudice. The Montana Supreme Court held that a stipulation of dismissal with prejudice of a defendant is tantamount to a judgment on the merits; and accordingly, such a dismissal with prejudice is res judicata as to every issue reasonably raised by the pleadings. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer defendant's liability is vicarious or derivative and does not arise until an employee acts negligently within the scope of his employment. A dismissal with prejudice of a claim against an employee is equivalent to a finding that the employee was not negligent. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, such a dismissal of an employee operates to exonerate the employer. The Supreme Court will look at the dismissal with prejudice on its face and will not look behind the words "with prejudice". State ex rel. Havre v. District Court, 187 M 181, 609 P2d 275, 37 St. Rep. 552 (1980).

39-2-701. Indemnification of employee.

Case Notes

Sole Exception to Employer Indemnification — Waiver of Public Benefit of Indemnification by Employment Contract Inappropriate: The only exception to the requirement that an employer indemnify its employees, as required in this section, is that an employer is not bound to indemnify an employee for losses suffered in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business. In the present case, the employer argued that indemnification could be waived under 1-3-204 if the parties agreed to a different relationship pursuant to the employment contract. However, under 1-3-204, the waiver of statutory rights is not allowable if the waiver violates public policy. Distinguishing several cases related to the waiver of private benefits, the Supreme Court held that indemnification of an employee for expenses incurred in the discharge of the employee's duties is a form of employee compensation similar to the payment of overtime compensation and minimum wage and constitutes an expression of public policy. Thus, even though this section is not accompanied by an express statement of public policy or an express prohibition of contracts that waive the right to indemnify, waiver of the indemnification provisions by contract would, in this instance, result in forfeiture of a valuable right guaranteed as a public benefit to all Montana employees and therefore is not allowed. Rothwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 1999 MT 50, 293 M 393, 976 P2d 512, 56 St. Rep. 203 (1999).

Employer Not Indispensable Party to Negligence Action Against Employee — Dismissal Improper: Johnson injured Mohl in a vehicle accident while Johnson was an employee of U-Haul. The trial court held that complete relief could not be granted without U-Haul being joined as a party, presumably for purposes of indemnity, and that because the statute of limitations had run against U-Haul, the action should be dismissed because of the inability to join U-Haul as an indispensable party. The Supreme Court disagreed that as employer and potential indemnitor, U-Haul was an indispensable party to the negligence suit against the employee Johnson. There was no need for an indemnity action to be resolved simultaneously with the negligence claim because the indemnity suit would arise out of and be subsequent to the negligence claim. Because the underlying negligence case had not been decided, an indemnity claim against U-Haul had not yet arisen and the statute of limitations had not yet begun to run. Dismissal of the suit constituted reversible error, and the case was remanded for continuation of the trial. Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217, 53 St. Rep. 96 (1996).

Negligence as Proper Basis for Recovery — Wrongful Discharge: A negligence claim and a claim for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may arise out of the same occurrence, include the same facts, and only involve different theories of law; therefore, negligence is a proper basis for recovery in wrongful termination cases. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), following Crenshaw v. Bozeman Deaconess Hosp., 213 M 488, 693 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 2251 (1984).

Reimbursement of Expenses Not Payment of "Wages" — Penalty for Failure to Pay Wages Inapplicable: In an action by the plaintiff to recover payment of expenses due to the plaintiff under an oral contract providing for reimbursement of his actual expenses, the trial court did not err in holding the penalty for unpaid wages inapplicable to the plaintiff's claim. The reimbursement to the plaintiff of actual expenses is not a "wage", as defined by 39-3-201, but an "indemnification of employee" referred to in this section. There is no statutory penalty for the failure of an employer to indemnify an employee for expenditures covered by that section. Johnston v. K & T Mfg., Inc., 191 M 458, 625 P2d 66, 38 St. Rep. 392 (1981).

Assumption of Risk — Knowledge of Prior Injury: Employee with prior back injury who neither informed his employer of his previous injury, nor refused to lift 500-pound tire without additional help, assumed the risk of the resultant additional injury to his back. McLaughlin v. Ballard, 156 M 181, 478 P2d 281 (1970).

Voluntarily Remaining in the Face of the Danger — Assumption of Risk: Where master, in an action against him for injuries sustained by a servant during course of employment, introduced evidence tending to show that the servant had actual or implied knowledge of the dangerous condition but voluntarily remained in the face of the danger, and that the injury resulted as a usual and probable consequence of the dangerous condition, refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury properly on assumption of risk deprived defendant of a possible defense and was prejudicial error. Wollan v. Lord, 142 M 498, 385 P2d 102 (1963).

Risk Assumed in Improper Use of Equipment: Where an experienced miner was employed to dig a well and was killed by a bucket used for hoisting the dirt falling upon him, its fall being caused by the hook attached to the bucket bail becoming detached in hoisting because improperly adjusted to the bail by him, the court's holding that he assumed the risk from the use of the hook, which was so simple in construction that it did not require a mechanic to understand it or the exercise of science or skill to adjust it, was correct. Miller v. Granite County Power Co., 66 M 368, 213 P 604 (1923).

Assumption of Added Risk Beyond Ordinary Risks: An employee who, with knowledge of the defective machinery with which he is required to work, continues in the employment upon assurance by the employer that the defect would be repaired, may do so for a reasonable length of time without assuming the added risk, unless the danger is so great that a reasonably prudent man would not have continued to work. Grant v. Nihill, 64 M 420, 210 P 914 (1922).

Assumption of Ordinary Risk Presumed:

By his act of entering into the service of his master the servant assumes all the usual and ordinary risks attendant upon his employment, not including risks arising from the negligence of the master, and he assumes these also if he knows of the defects from which they arise and appreciates the dangers which flow from them. Grant v. Nihill, 64 M 420, 210 P 914 (1922).

The servant assumes the ordinary risks of his employment, but such assumption of risk implies knowledge by the servant or his having the means of knowledge, and his appreciation of the danger. Morelli v. Twohy Bros. Co., 54 M 366, 170 P 757 (1918).

A servant is conclusively presumed to have assumed the ordinary risks of the employment. This is a part of his contract of service. Beyond this he does not assume any risk, except by express agreement, or where the circumstances are such that he must be presumed to have done so from the fact that he continued in the employment, though the extraordinary danger was known to him, or was so obvious that he must be presumed to have had knowledge of it. Schroder v. Mont. Iron Works, 38 M 474, 100 P 619 (1909).

Application to Personal Injury Cases — Jury Instruction: This section is directly applicable to cases arising between master and servant on account of personal injuries sustained by the latter in the course of his employment, and an instruction embodying it is properly submitted to the jury. Wallace v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Pudget Sound Ry., 52 M 345, 157 P 955 (1916); John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910); Hardesty v. Largey Lumber Co., 34 M 151, 86 P 29 (1906).

Defective Machinery: In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff, a laundry employee, while working on a patently defective mangle, the evidence, in view of this section, did not preclude defendant from offering any defense though he did not use ordinary care in furnishing ordinarily safe machinery. Fotheringill v. Washoe Copper Co., 43 M 485, 117 P 86 (1911); Osterholm v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 40 M 508, 107 P 499 (1910); Coulter v. Union Laundry Co., 34 M 590, 87 P 973 (1906). See Leary v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 36 M 157, 92 P 477 (1907).

Degree of Care: A master owes the same duty to his servant that a carrier owes to an unpaid passenger; that is, to exercise ordinary care for his safety. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

Res Ipsa Loquitur: Where the doctrine of the maxim "res ipsa loquitur" may be invoked to raise a presumption of want of care, it is want of ordinary care to which reference is made. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

Personal Injuries: This section is directly applicable to cases arising between master and servant on account of personal injuries sustained by the latter in the course of his employment. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910); Hardesty v. Largey Lumber Co., 34 M 151, 86 P 29 (1906).

Case Notes

Negligent Mismanagement Claim Improperly Dismissed for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction — Statute Not Limited to Personal Injury or Preempted by Federal Law: Winslow brought an action against his employer, Montana Rail Link, under this section for mismanaging its investigation of his injury, alleging that the mismanagement lead to his dismissal from his job. The District Court held that this section was intended to apply only to personal injuries caused by coworkers and that Winslow's cause of action under that section was preempted in any event by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act (WDEA). The Supreme Court held that the District Court's interpretation was overly restrictive because there was nothing in the language of this section that prevented its application to the mismanagement of the investigation of Winslow's injuries. The Supreme Court also held that although a claim involving dismissal of an employee covered by a collective bargaining agreement (CBA), as Winslow was, could not be brought under the WDEA, Winslow's action was not brought to enforce his CBA, because his complaint made no mention of the CBA, but was brought under state law, giving an independent cause of action, and was therefore not preempted by the federal Railway Labor Act. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Availability of Affirmative Defenses to Railroad — Absolute Liability: Plaintiff was employed by a subsidiary of Burlington Northern and was injured in an accident involving Burlington's railroad cars. The Supreme Court decided the federal Safety Appliance Act applied despite the fact the railroad cars involved in the accident were on a siding where loading operations were handled by the subsidiary. Noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has declared that the question of whether a railroad can assert contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defenses in a case involving a nonrailroad employee depends entirely on state law, the Supreme Court cited its 1966 holding that, where the theory of absolute liability applies, liability is established when it is proved that a statute has been violated and there is a proximate cause connection between the violation and the resulting injuries. Proximate cause in a case under the Safety Appliance Act is decided using the definition that prevails under state law. Comparing the 1966 case under the Scaffolding Act with this case, the Supreme Court denied the defendant the two defenses. The Supreme Court also noted that railroad employees are entitled to a more liberal standard imposing liability than nonrailroad employees. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Duty to Provide Safe Working Place — Railroad Employee: In a case brought by an employee injured while working for a subsidiary of a railroad, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was owed the duty to provide him with a safe place to work. Noting that giving the jury information about the subsidiaries might well have been highly prejudicial to the defendant railroad, the Supreme Court nonetheless felt obliged to consider it in this case. The plaintiff was working directly in the operations of the railroad in every sense of the word. The railroad would not be absolved of the responsibility to provide a safe place to work for employees who are technically employed by a subsidiary corporation but whose employment is directly related to the operations of a railroad. Closeness of the businesses of the parent and subsidiary companies was a factor in the court's conclusion that both corporations owed the duty to provide the plaintiff with a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Employee Defined:

In an action brought under this section by a freight conductor against his employer, where it appeared that plaintiff, during the entire time when away from his home terminal was subject to be called on duty and required to be within call, and though not required to do so under his contract of employment was nevertheless expected to occupy the caboose of his train at night, was in the discharge of his duties when injured in a collision while asleep in the caboose standing on a sidetrack. He did not occupy the position of a mere licensee even though his pay had for the time being ceased and would not begin again until he was called on duty. Pryor v. Bishop, 234 F 9 (7th Cir. 1916); Moyse v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 272, 108 P 1062 (1910). See Hollenback v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 46 M 559, 129 P 1058 (1913).

While this section has to do exclusively with those persons who sustain toward each other the relation of master and servant, it does not undertake to define who those persons are, but merely imposes certain rights and liabilities upon them, leaving it to the courts to determine when persons have assumed the relation. Moyse v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 272, 108 P 1062 (1910).

Action Survives: Under this section the right of action accruing to an injured employee survived in case of his death, and could be prosecuted to judgment by his representative, whether such employee had commenced action in his lifetime or not. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 277, 127 P 1002 (1912); Dillon v. Great N. Ry., 38 M 485, 100 P 960 (1909).

Beneficiaries in Death Cases: If a person is injured while employed by a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce and subsequently dies of his injuries, a right of action survives to his personal representative, for the benefit of certain named beneficiaries, and the proper party plaintiff is the personal representative of the decedent. The right of recovery, however, is determinable by the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act which impliedly supersedes all state statutes on the subject. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 277, 127 P 1002 (1912).

Fellow Servant Doctrine Abolished:

This section enlarges the common-law liability of persons or corporations operating railroads. Cunningham v. NW. Improvement Co., 44 M 180, 119 P 554 (1911).

This section abolishes the fellow servant rule. Moyse v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 272, 108 P 1062 (1910).

Allegations of Complaint:

Where a servant relies for recovery of damages for personal injuries upon the provisions of either of the fellow servant acts, creating a liability on the part of the master where none existed before their enactment, he must set forth in ordinary and concise language a statement of facts showing his right to recover under such special statute. Thurman v. Pittsburg & Mont. Copper Co., 41 M 141, 108 P 588 (1910); Miley v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 51, 108 P 5 (1910); Kelly v. N. Pac. Ry., 35 M 243, 88 P 1009 (1907). See Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910); Kinsel v. N. Butte Min. Co., 44 M 445, 120 P 797 (1912); Melzner v. Raven Copper Co., 47 M 351, 132 P 552 (1913); Kirk v. Smith, 48 M 489, 138 P 1088 (1914).

Under either of the fellow servant acts, a complaint, in an action by a switchman against a railway company for personal injuries alleging that "the defendant company so carelessly and negligently managed, operated, and ran" a train of cars as to seriously injure him, was insufficient, in the absence of an allegation that recovery was sought on account of the negligence of one for whose fault the statute imposes a liability on the master, to admit proof showing that plaintiff's injuries were brought about by the careless and negligent acts of the engineer in charge of the train in question. Kelly v. N. Pac. Ry., 35 M 243, 88 P 1009 (1907).

Instantaneous Death: The provisions of this section constitute a survival statute and do not create a new cause of action in favor of the heirs for damages sustained by them by reason of the death of the deceased. In an action brought by the heirs of a railroad employee to recover damages for the alleged killing of deceased, the agreed statement of facts showed that his death in a collision was instantaneous. There could not be any survival of an action in the heirs since the wrong and the death of decedent was coincident in point of time, no cause of action ever accrued in his favor, and therefore none could survive in the heirs. Dillon v. Great N. Ry., 38 M 485, 100 P 960 (1909).

Constitutionality:

This statute constitutes a valid exercise of legislative power. Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

The general purpose of this act being to protect railroad employees in their particularly hazardous employment cannot be held to violate the Equal Protection of the Law Clause of the United States Constitution. Under the rule of statutory construction where the general purpose of a statute has been ascertained, general words may be restricted to a particular meaning, or those of a restricted meaning expanded so as to embrace the general purpose and effectuate it. The expression "railway corporation", found in the above section, includes all persons, both individual and corporate, engaged in operating railways. Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

Purpose: The purpose and effect of this section is declared in Melzner v. Raven Copper Co., 47 M 351, 132 P 552 (1913); Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910); and Thurman v. Pittsburg & Mont. Copper Co., 41 M 141, 108 P 588 (1910).

Pleading:

Where the negligence of a fellow servant is relied upon, the injured servant must declare upon the statute and cannot recover in a common-law action. Kinsel v. N. Butte Min. Co., 44 M 445, 120 P 797 (1912).

In an action to recover damages for personal injuries brought under this section, plaintiff made out a prima facie case upon which to go to the jury upon the question whether a timber which, in falling, produced the injury, was caused to fall by a shift boss of defendant company and whether such person occupied the position of shift boss. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910).

Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910).

Survival: Under the express provision of this section, the right of action to recover damages for injuries to a mine employee, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, survives to and may be prosecuted and maintained by the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased. Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910).

"Shift Boss": The term "shift boss", as used in this section, means a master workman who directs the operations of a set of men who work in turn with other sets. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910).

Statute Specific to Teachers Controls: The plaintiff argued that his firing should be set aside on the basis that he was not given a statement for his discharge as required by this section. Wrongful Discharge From Employment

Part Case Notes

Federal Law Applying to Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempts Claim of Violation of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Common-Law Claim for Retaliatory Discharge Not Preempted: Winslow was fired from his job with Montana Rail Link, where he had been employed under a collective bargaining agreement, and brought an action in District Court. In his complaint, Winslow included claims for violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and common-law retaliatory discharge. The District Court dismissed both claims. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the claim for violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, citing Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720 (1992), for the proposition that such a claim is preempted by federal law because the covenant arises out of the employment contract and that that contract, in the case of a collective bargaining agreement, is governed by federal law. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court on dismissal of the common-law wrongful discharge claim, citing Foster for the proposition that a common-law claim, because it does not depend upon interpretation of the employment contract, is an independent claim and is not preempted by the federal Railway Labor Act. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Employment Contingent on Adherence to Teachings of Roman Catholic Church — Discrimination Statutes Inapplicable: Until her termination in 1993, Parker-Bigback was employed by St. Labre School, which is operated by the St. Labre Indian School Education Association, an institution based on the teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church. Parker-Bigback filed a complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights, alleging that she was discriminated against because her termination was based on marital status or sex discrimination. The school maintained that Parker-Bigback's position was eliminated to establish a personnel department, which Parker-Bigback contended was simply a pretext for terminating her employment based on her lifestyle of cohabiting with a man who was not her husband. However, one condition of Parker-Bigback's employment was an agreement to adhere to the moral and religious teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church and to not engage in any personal conduct or lifestyle contrary to church policies. Thus, it made no difference whether Parker-Bigback was married or single—if she cohabited with someone of the opposite sex to whom she was not married, she would be in at variance with church teachings in violation of her contract. Therefore, this was not a case about marital status or gender, but rather about conduct Parker-Bigback agreed to avoid as a condition of employment. Nothing in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., or 49-2-303 prohibits discrimination based on conduct, nor was any authority offered to persuade the Supreme Court that Parker-Bigback's conduct involved a right of such high order that it would overcome the school's right to freely exercise its religion through its employment practices. Even if she was terminated for cohabitation, her rights to be free from discrimination were not involved, so her employment discrimination case was properly dismissed by summary judgment for the school. Parker-Bigback v. St. Labre School, 2000 MT 210, 301 M 16, 7 P3d 361, 57 St. Rep. 823 (2000). See also Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794 (1986).

In-House Counsel Not Precluded From Bringing Wrongful Discharge From Employment Claim Even if Proof of Claim Requires Disclosure of Confidential Information: Burkhart was hired as in-house counsel for Semitool, Inc. (Semitool). Following his discharge from employment, Burkhart sued Semitool for wrongful discharge. The District Court concluded that even though Burkhart had a right to protection against wrongful discharge, Semitool also had a right to protection of its trade secrets and that because the rights conflicted, the attorney-client privilege must prevail. The court dismissed Burkhart's claim on grounds that he was precluded from bringing an employment claim because, as staff counsel hired to provide legal advice or services, proof of the claim would require disclosure of confidential matters. Burkhart maintained on appeal that the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act applied to any employee and that there was no exclusion for attorneys. Semitool argued that because Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., gives the Supreme Court sole authority to regulate the conduct of lawyers, the Act is unconstitutional to the extent that it interferes with that authority. Semitool also cited Campbell v. Bozeman Investors of Duluth, 1998 MT 204, 290 M 374, 964 P2d 41 (1998), for the "universal rule" that clients may fire lawyers at any time, for any reason, with or without cause and that for that reason, application of the Act to the employment relationship of staff attorneys and the client employer was not proper. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court examined two lines of cases from other jurisdictions that appeared to support either conclusion. The court then concluded that the reasoning and analysis in Gen. Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court, 876 P2d 487 (Calif. 1994), and its progeny were the more sound and realistic approach. The holding in Campbell does not create an absolute right to discharge an attorney with complete impunity no matter the form of the attorney-client relationship. The universal rule does not apply in an attorney-client relationship in which the attorney is the employee of the client because in that context, the client has avoided the traditional relationship and granted the attorney protections that do not apply to independent contractors, but do apply to employees, including the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Further, although Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., gives the Supreme Court sole authority to regulate the conduct of lawyers, the court does not have sole authority to regulate employer conduct. The Act pertains solely to employer conduct and does not implicate the conduct of lawyers in the practice of law, and thus, it is not an unconstitutional encroachment on the court's authority for the Act to apply to lawyers as employees or employers. Further, Rule 1.6 of the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct contemplates that a lawyer may reveal confidential attorney-client information to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish an employment-related claim against an employer who is also a client. Thus, the plain language of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act requires courts to recognize an in-house counsel's right to pursue and maintain an action for wrongful discharge, and those claims are within the contemplation of the rules of professional conduct for attorneys. A lawyer does not forfeit rights simply because confidential information must be used to prove them, nor may a client gain the right to cheat the lawyer by imparting confidences. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000). See also Doe v. A Corp., 709 F2d 1043 (5th Cir. 1983).

No Claim for Wrongful Termination Apart From Either Contract or Wrongful Discharge Act: Solle claimed that her employer violated the common-law duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to renew her employment contract when she had a reasonable expectation that a renewal would be offered. Solle's employer moved to compel arbitration, the motion was granted, and Solle appealed. Under Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), claims for wrongful termination from tort or express or implied contract are no longer viable under Montana law. Rather, 39-2-913 explicitly preempts all common-law remedies but bars only tort and contract claims that are "for discharge". A threshold determination in cases alleging wrongful termination is whether the parties' relationship is governed by a written contract for a specific term or whether it falls under the provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which applies to noncontract situations. Solle's employment was covered by a written contract containing an arbitration clause, and her claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was inextricably intertwined with and based upon her termination from employment. Although breach of a contract is not a prerequisite to breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the covenant arises out of a contractual relationship between the parties, and a breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Solle's contract was silent as to whether there was an obligation on the employer's part to renew the contract or on Solle's part to accept a renewal offer, so Solle argued that the failure to include such a provision indicated the employer's intent not to cover a claim like this under the arbitration clause. The Supreme Court disagreed and proceeded to treat the dispute as arising out of the employment contract. Solle was not allowed to maintain a wrongful termination claim apart from either the contract or the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Solle's contract contained a provision that any unresolved dispute would be subject to arbitration, but the arbitration clause did not explicitly provide that it would govern issues concerning contract nonrenewal. Nevertheless, the contract governed Solle's employment, termination, and postemployment relationship and did not explicitly exclude disputes arising after contract termination. The presumption favors arbitrability, and the District Court did not err in holding that Solle's claim was subject to arbitration. Solle v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 MT 96, 299 M 237, 999 P2d 328, 57 St. Rep. 391 (2000). See also Nolde Bros., Inc. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union, 430 US 243, 51 L Ed 2d 300, 97 S Ct 1067 (1977).

Failure to Raise Issue of Arbitrator's Authority in Arbitration or District Court as Waiver of Right to Object to Arbitrator's Ruling on Appeal: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator determined that because the complaint alleged a motive for the discharge, it was intended to state a cause of action under ERISA (29 U.S.C. 1001, et seq.), requiring exclusive federal court jurisdiction, so arbitration was dismissed. By failing to raise the issue of whether the arbitrator lacked authority to decide that the issue was preempted by federal law, failing to contest the basis of the arbitrator's decision, and failing to object to the motion in District Court to confirm the arbitrator's award through a motion to vacate, Dahl waived the right to object to the ruling on appeal. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999). See also St. Farm v. Cabs, Inc., 751 P2d 61 (Colo. 1988).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction When Wrongful Discharge Claim Submitted to Arbitration — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator dismissed the arbitration on grounds that federal law applied. Dahl did not object to the District Court's confirmation of the arbitrator's decision but did move for leave to amend the complaint to remove the federal implications. However, the District Court lost jurisdiction when the parties agreed to arbitration, at which point the court had authority only to confirm, modify and confirm, or vacate and remand for hearing pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-314, but not the authority to allow Dahl to amend the complaint. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999).

Ninth Circuit Court — Wrongful Discharge Claim Valid Even if Employer Acted Under Mistaken Fact Interpretation — Proof of Employer Bad Faith Irrelevant: A Delta Airlines' employee was terminated after she intentionally submitted payroll records with three incorrect entries that allowed her to collect $250 in unearned wages. The employee filed suit, alleging wrongful discharge. Delta moved for a directed verdict, arguing that the employee had failed to present any evidence that Delta's reasons for termination were a pretext and not the honest reason. When the District Court awarded the employee $60,000 in damages for wrongful discharge, Delta appealed, claiming that Montana's Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act does not provide a cause of action when the employer acted in good faith, but rather when the discharge is based on mistaken facts. Citing the Montana Supreme Court decisions Morton v. M-W-M, Inc. 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576 (1994), and Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc. 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116 (1995), the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that the employee was not required to prove that Delta acted in bad faith because the issue was irrelevant to whether Delta was mistaken about the facts surrounding the dismissal. Marcy v. Delta Airlines, 166 F3d 1279 (9th Cir. 1999).

Federal Court Wrongful Discharge Case — Dismissal on Summary Judgment Held Res Judicata as to State Court Claims: Hollister brought an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 in federal District Court, seeking damages for being wrongfully discharged from her position with Rosebud County. The federal District Court held that Hollister did not have a sufficient property interest in her job to support an action based upon a denial of substantive due process of law and section 1983. The federal District Court therefore granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Hollister then filed a motion for relief from judgment in the federal District Court, pointing out that the Montana Supreme Court had since noted in Boreen v. Christiansen, 267 M 405, 884 P2d 761 (1994), that the federal District Court had misapprehended the law in her wrongful discharge suit. The state District Court dismissed, holding that it was barred, but the federal court would not reverse itself. Hollister then refiled her section 1983 claim in state District Court, but that court dismissed, holding that the federal District Court opinion was res judicata as to her section 1983 claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that an identical situation occurred in Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265 (1993). In that case, the Montana Supreme Court had also held a federal District Court opinion to be res judicata as to claims in state District Court, even though the state law had changed in the meantime. Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Evidence Tending to Support Discharge for Reasons Other Than Stated in Discharge Letter Held Irrelevant: Galbreath injured his knee, neck, and head while working for Golden Sunlight Mines, Inc. (GSM), and took a 3-month medical leave of absence. GSM later accepted liability for Galbreath's injuries. Upon Galbreath's attempt to return to work, GSM terminated his employment, claiming that Galbreath had failed to provide documentation of the reason for his absence. The District Court admitted evidence that Galbreath was terminated for reasons other than stated in the discharge letter. Citing Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979), the Supreme Court held that in a wrongful discharge action, the only reason for discharge that the District Court could consider was the reason stated in the discharge letter. The Supreme Court held that other reasons were irrelevant and that evidence supporting the other reasons should have been excluded. Galbreath v. Golden Sunlight Mines, Inc., 270 M 19, 890 P2d 382, 52 St. Rep. 58 (1995), followed in McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998), and Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 290 M 496, 965 P2d 256, 55 St. Rep. 927 (1998).

Discharge of Paper Tester Preempted by National Labor Relations Act — "Garmon" Doctrine Applied: Plaintiff, a paper tester for Stone Container Corporation (Stone), filed suit in state court, alleging that Stone's termination was without good cause in violation of Montana's Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Stone successfully removed the action to federal court where the District Court granted summary judgment for Stone, finding plaintiff's claim preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed and applied the preemption holding in San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 US 236 (1959), ruling that plaintiff's claim alleging a violation of a collective bargaining agreement, after the agreement's expiration but before negotiations to reopen have reached impasse, is preempted under the NLRA. Bassette v. Stone Container Corp., 25 F3d 757 (9th Cir. 1994).

New Trial on Damages for Employer's Failure to Disclose Files Helping Employee's Wrongful Discharge Case: In a wrongful discharge action, an employee was properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages (he had been awarded $70,000 by a jury) as a sanction against the hospital-employer, which failed to give him discovery documents relevant to and favoring the employee on issues of the hospital's liability and employee's damages. The employee was anonymously sent the documents after the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Newly Disclosed Evidence Wrongfully Withheld by Employer and Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages on the basis that documents in the employer's files, requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer, but anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showing that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff, would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Plan, Prior to Part's Effective Date, to Terminate Employee — Not Constructive Discharge Exempting Employee From Part: Documents in the employer's possession prior to this part's effective date and showing a plan to terminate the employee did not constitute a constructive discharge, either under this part or under the law in effect prior to this part's effective date. Therefore, the employee, who was terminated after this part took effect, could not successfully argue that his discharge occurred before this part's effective date and that he was thus not limited by this part to the remedies in this part. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Plan, Prior to Wrongful Discharge Act's Effective Date, to Terminate Employee — Not Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Exempting Employee From Act: An employee could not successfully argue that because, prior to the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act's effective date, the employer had a plan to terminate him, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing existing prior to the Act's effective date applied and the Act's remedies limitation did not apply to him. The covenant is not breached until termination of employment, which in this case occurred after the Act's effective date. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Sanction of $5,500 Against Employer for Failure to Disclose Files Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly sanctioned the employer by granting the plaintiff $5,500 for amounts expended for work on summary judgment and, after the verdict, on the basis that documents in the employer's files were requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer. The documents, which were anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showed that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff. The documents would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Failure to Raise Summary Judgment Proof and Statute of Frauds Issues in District Court: An employer's claims that an employee failed to present a prima facie case for summary judgment purposes and that alleged oral representations of the employer as to job compensation and benefits were barred by the statute of frauds would not be considered on appeal because they were not raised in District Court. Beasley v. Semitool, Inc., 258 M 258, 853 P2d 84, 50 St. Rep. 522 (1993).

Pleading Three Separate Causes Under One Set of Facts: An employee set forth all factual allegations, followed by separate statements of three causes of action: wrongful discharge, breach of express and implied contract, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. All of the factual allegations were essentially incorporated into each cause. An employee sufficiently indicated the intent to plead the causes as separate and independent. Mere joinder of alternative or inconsistent claims does not require dismissal of an otherwise legitimate claim, nor does the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act limit a claimant's right to plead an independent cause of action in conjunction with a claim under the Act. Beasley v. Semitool, Inc., 258 M 258, 853 P2d 84, 50 St. Rep. 522 (1993), distinguished in Kulm v. Mont. St. Univ.-Bozeman, 285 M 328, 948 P2d 243, 54 St. Rep. 1175 (1997).

Employment Termination Agreement Constituting Relinquishment of Potential Claims — Summary Judgment Proper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for termination, compensation, medical insurance for himself and his wife, and a waiver of claims wherein both parties voluntarily waived and relinquished future employment-related claims and released one another from "all actions, suits, debts, agreements, obligations, costs, expenses and other liabilities" related to the employment relationship. Summary judgment on an employment-related claim brought 1 year after the agreement was entered was proper in light of employee's failure to raise any issue of material fact with regard to execution of the valid and enforceable termination agreement. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Material Question of Value of Profit Share Granted Employee as Element of Termination Agreement — Summary Judgment Improper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for a distribution to him of a share of company profits, both prior to and after the termination of employment. Any issue of profit distributions prior to termination was barred by a waiver of claims. However, a question of material fact regarding the calculation of and disproportionate nature of the profit sharing distribution after termination was sufficient to preclude summary judgment because the amount to be paid was unknown to both parties at the time of termination. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Termination Agreement — No Undue Influence or Economic Duress: Employee who signed an employment termination agreement contended that his wife's illness created emotional distress and increased financial demands, enhanced his need to remain in the community, increased his demand on the company group health insurance plan, and enhanced the need to avoid further stress on his family, all of which imposed undue influence on him to sign the agreement. The undue influence claim necessarily included an argument of economic duress. After considering the facts, including claimant's voluntary signing of the agreement by his free will and after reading and understanding the terms of the agreement, his claims were insufficient to meet the tests of undue influence or economic duress. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992), following Horgan v. Indus. Design Corp., 657 P2d 751 (Utah 1982), and Hoven v. First Bank (N.A.)-Billings, 244 M 229, 797 P2d 915 (1990).

Proof of Retaliatory Discharge — Claim Outside Context of Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Preempted by Federal Law: To prove retaliatory discharge involving sexual harassment, it must be shown that: (1) the employee was discharged; (2) the employee was subjected to sexual harassment during the course of employment; and (3) the employer's motivation for the discharge was to retaliate for the employee's resistance to the sexual harassment. When this factual inquiry does not turn on the meaning of any term of a collective bargaining agreement, the wrongful discharge claim is considered independent of the agreement for purposes of preemption under federal law. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), following Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), and followed in Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993).

Admissibility of Job Performance Evidence in Wrongful Discharge Suit: Weber claimed District Court error in admitting statements and exhibits involving his job performance, including performance appraisals; allegedly prejudicial testimony raising the inference that his claim was frivolous; and testimony appealing to the self-interest of the jurors as taxpayers. However, Weber himself introduced evidence of his diligent work habits, and it was not error to allow the state to introduce statements and exhibits to rebut that evidence. The job performance evidence was not character evidence; was not self-serving, remote, opinion testimony of a lay witness (his boss); and was not a disallowable prior consistent statement. Absent an abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence, Weber's motion for a new trial was properly denied. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Wrongful Discharge Based on Actions Arising From Failure to Pay Fraudulent Claim: Substantial evidence supported a $33,230 wrongful discharge action jury verdict in favor of the assistant manager of the State Tort Claims Division, who resigned after 16 years of state employment, was earning about $30,000 a year when he resigned, and claimed he was constructively discharged by intolerable working conditions created by his state agency employers. He contended he was harassed, treated unfairly, and finally demoted for his actions involving a fraudulent claim submitted to his Department, which he refused but was subsequently ordered to pay. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Issue for Appeal — Not Preserved by Failure to Object Dismissal Not Res Judicata: An employee sued her employer a second time, alleging damages for wrongful discharge, violation of constitutional rights, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that the employee conceded that the wrongful discharge and emotional distress claims were barred by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The Supreme Court held that those two claims were not properly before the Supreme Court, inasmuch as they were not properly preserved for appeal, but that retrial of the issues was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Evidence of Other Than Economic Motives for Firing — Sufficiency of Jury Issue Upheld: In an unlawful discharge action, the employer claimed on appeal that the employee offered insufficient evidence to show that his firing was motivated other than by the economic motives claimed by the employer. The Supreme Court held that the present case was unlike Cecil v. Cardinal Drilling Co., 244 M 405, 797 P2d 232 (1990), cited by the employer for the proposition that the employee must produce evidence of other motives. The court distinguished Cecil, stating that that case was decided under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which authorizes a nonprobationary employee to be fired for good cause. In Cecil, the plaintiff had insufficient evidence to defeat a motion for summary judgment, while in this case the court found that there was evidence from which the jury could conclude that the employer had noneconomic motives for firing the plaintiff. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 39, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Negligent Reduction in Force and Negligent Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Jury Instructions Upheld: In a wrongful discharge case arising prior to the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, the employer appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the District Court's jury instructions improperly authorized the jury to find that the employer's reduction in force was negligently carried out and that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing could be breached negligently. The Supreme Court held that the employer's reliance on Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954 (1990), was misplaced and that the court had previously held in other cases that negligence could form the basis for a wrongful discharge action. Because there was evidence that the employer was negligent in following its personnel policies handbook and in investigating its claims of inefficiency by its employee, the Supreme Court held that the jury instructions were properly given. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 39, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Action Under Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act Preempted by National Labor Relations Act: After the National Labor Relations Board found that plaintiff's termination from Stone Container Corporation (Stone) was not in retaliation for union activity, plaintiff filed an action under the state Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court denied Stone's motion for summary judgment. The Ninth Circuit Court reversed and applied the holding in Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. Wis. Employment Relations Comm'n, 427 US 132, 49 L Ed 2d 396, 96 S Ct 2548 (1976), ruling that plaintiff's action under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act was preempted by the National Labor Relations Act. The incidental effect of allowing plaintiff to pursue his action under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act after contract expiration, but prior to a bargaining impasse, is the type of entanglement the Ninth Circuit Court sought to avoid in Machinists. Barnes v. Stone Container Corp., 942 F2d 689 (9th Cir. 1991).

Lack of Standing to Raise Constitutional Issues Absent Wrongful Discharge: A jury found that plaintiffs were not discharged wrongfully. On appeal, plaintiffs raised numerous issues regarding the constitutionality of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, contending that the Act violated the right of trial by jury and the Montana Constitution's privileges and immunities clause, equal protection clause, impairment of contracts clause, and due process clause. The Supreme Court, citing Jones & Harriot v. Judge, 176 M 251, 577 P2d 846 (1978), and Stelling v. Rivercrest Ranches, Inc., 224 M 313, 730 P2d 388 (1986), found that plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of the Act because consideration of the issues was rendered moot by the jury verdict, resulting in no adverse effect on plaintiffs by the challenged statutes. Allmaras v. Yellowstone Basin Properties, 248 M 477, 812 P2d 770, 48 St. Rep. 519 (1991).

Inappropriateness of Court Involvement in Decisions Regarding Employment in Managerial or Confidential Positions: Following purchase of a business by a new owner, the executive manager, who was a long-time employee of the former owner, was replaced by the new owner's long-time faithful employee. Such an action was the new owner's policy when purchasing businesses. The former executive manager brought a wrongful discharge suit. The Supreme Court declined to determine whether the replacement constituted a legitimate job-related reason, noting that it is inappropriate for courts to become involved in the day-to-day employment decisions of business when those decisions involve employees who occupy sensitive managerial or confidential positions. However, a company's interest in protecting its investment and in running its business as it sees fit is not as strong when applied to lower echelon employees and may be outweighed by the employees' interest in continued, secure employment. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991), followed in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993), and distinguished in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Constructive Discharge — Test: A valid procedural due process claim based on constructive discharge requires that there be employer conduct motivated by a desire to avoid subjecting its actions to the scrutiny of a termination-related hearing. Doohan v. Bigfork School District No. 38, 247 M 125, 805 P2d 1354, 48 St. Rep. 121 (1991).

Violation of Company Policy Resulting in Termination — No Breach of Implied Covenants in Employment Relationship: Employee admittedly took $350 from the checkstand till and used these company funds to finance his Nevada gambling trip, repaying the funds 16 days later. His employment was terminated for violation of company policy. Because the employer based the discharge on a fair and honest reason, employee's subsequent claim of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and negligence was properly summarily dismissed because there was no basis for the claim and no genuine issue of material fact existed. Majerus v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, Inc., 245 M 58, 799 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 1693 (1990), following Niles v. Weissman & Sons, Inc., 241 M 230, 786 P2d 662, 47 St. Rep. 240 (1990).

Refusal to Accept Lateral Transfer — Failure to Prove Constructive Discharge: Plaintiff, employed by the Montana Power Company (MPC) for 22 $^{1}_{2}$ years, was stationed in Cut Bank as a field engineer. Despite the urging of his MPC supervisor, he refused to accept a transfer to Butte when MPC closed the Cut Bank office and his employment ended. Plaintiff alleged constructive discharge; MPC contended he chose to terminate rather than accept the transfer. The Supreme Court examined the facts and determined that plaintiff failed to present any evidence that he was actually or constructively discharged, but rather that he refused to accept what amounted to a lateral transfer without a change in job responsibilities, earnings, or benefits. Finstad v. Mont. Power Co., 241 M 10, 785 P2d 1372, 47 St. Rep. 39 (1990).

Employment Contract Within Scope of Federal Arbitration Act: Because the employment contract at issue in this case fell within the ambit of the federal Arbitration Act, a stay of proceedings was proper in plaintiff employee's suit seeking damages under several theories arising out of plaintiff's termination. Gibson, Jr., Inc. v. James Graff Communications, Inc., 239 M 335, 780 P2d 1131, 46 St. Rep. 1727 (1989).

Constitutionality of Wrongful Discharge Law: Title 39, ch. 2, part 9, the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, does not wrongfully deprive an individual falling within its purview of the right to full legal redress within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const. The Act does not deny full legal redress or a speedy remedy; it simply defines what constitutes the facts that must be established to obtain remedy and redress in the context of wrongful discharge. No fundamental right to a particular cause of action, remedy, or redress is constitutionally created, and for the court to derive such a right would violate the separation of powers by preventing the Legislature and the people through the initiative process from restricting or modifying the common law relative to injuries of person, property, or character. Rather, Art. II, sec. 16, guarantees only a right to access to courts to seek a remedy for wrongs recognized by common law or statutory authority. No one has a vested interest in any rule of common law. The Legislature may alter common-law causes of action to promote legitimate state interests and may alter or abrogate causes of action sounding in tort. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), overruling Pfost v. St., 219 M 206, 713 P2d 495, 42 St. Rep. 1957 (1985), White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983), and Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Wrongful Discharge Law Limitations on Damages Not Violative of Equal Protection Guarantee — Relation to Legitimate State Interests: The Supreme Court applied the rational basis test in determining whether provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, ch. 2, part 9, which prohibit recovery of noneconomic damages and punitive damages, violated the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. The court found that the Act survived scrutiny because it was rationally related to legitimate state interests, including: (1) promoting the financial interests of businesses in the state or potentially in the state to improve economic conditions; (2) limiting employers' liability for wrongful discharge through restrictions on recovery; (3) providing greater certainty in defining an employer's duties by recalling a contract law limitation on damages for pain and suffering; (4) providing a reasonably just substitute for the common-law causes it abrogates; (5) bettering prior common-law provisions for recovery by allowing claims for prejudgment interest; and (6) allowing some recovery for wrongful discharges that would otherwise deny retirement benefits. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), overruling Pfost v. St., 219 M 206, 713 P2d 495, 42 St. Rep. 1957 (1985), White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983), and Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Employer Action or Inaction — Question of Fact in Constructive Discharge: The Supreme Court relied on the explanation of the constructive discharge doctrine set out in Snell v. Mont.-Dak. Util. Co., 198 M 56, 643 P2d 841 (1982), in holding that it is a question of fact whether by action or inaction an employer has rendered working conditions so oppressive that resignation is the only reasonable alternative. Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989), followed in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993).

Reciprocal Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Between Employer and Employee — Character of Employee Relevant to Expectation of Job Security: The Supreme Court applied the holding in Los Angeles Mem. Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 791 F2d 1356 (9th Cir. 1986), in finding that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing mandated a reciprocal duty in the employment relationship, applicable to both employer and employee. Breach by one party served to negate any breach by the other party, so that neither party was entitled to recovery. This rule applied only narrowly to factual contexts where both breaches concerned the same issue and occurred during one episode of the relationship. In the present case, an employee who breached the covenant could not then complain of unfair dealing by the employer. The District Court improperly excluded evidence of specific misconduct related to the employee's character because the alleged misconduct was relevant to whether the employee had a reasonable expectation of job security and could thus claim protection under the covenant. Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988). See also Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), and Dare v. Mont. Petroleum Mkt. Co., 212 M 274, 687 P2d 1015, 41 St. Rep. 1735 (1984).

"Constructive Discharge" Construed: As outlined in Pittman v. Hattiesburg Municipal Separate School District, 644 F2d 1071 (5th Cir. 1981), constructive discharge occurs when an employer deliberately makes an employee's working conditions so intolerable that the employee is forced into an involuntary resignation. The federal District Court found that plaintiff could prove constructive discharge and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing if it was shown that a supervisor's intentional conduct caused plaintiff's mental breakdown, leading to loss of plaintiff's job. Oedewaldt v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc., 687 F. Supp. 517, 45 St. Rep. 1366 (D.C. Mont. 1988). But see Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), wherein the Montana Supreme Court declined to recognize the doctrine of constructive discharge beyond discrimination cases and held that the covenant of good faith and fair dealing applied only in cases of employee termination.

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Applicable Only to Employee Termination: The assertion that breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a separate tort from wrongful discharge is correct. However, the covenant is applicable only in cases of employee termination. When there was no express termination and there were insufficient facts to establish constructive discharge, summary dismissal of a charge of breach of the covenant was affirmed. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Interfering With Freedom of Religion: The Supreme Court upheld a summary judgment dismissing a wrongful discharge complaint against a religious school that dismissed a teacher without notice or hearing. In holding that denying application of the tort of bad faith in this case did not result in an intrusion into church affairs, the court relied on the standard set out in Wis. v. Yoder, 406 US 205, 32 L Ed 2d 15, 92 S Ct 1526 (1972), that ". . . only those interest of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion". The majority of the court felt that the bad faith tort claim did not meet the Yoder standard and that to allow the lawsuit to go forward would impermissibly interfere with the free exercise of religion. Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794, 43 St. Rep. 2059 (1986).

Immunity of Judge, County, and Its Commissioners, for Discharge of Judge's Predecessor's Personal Secretary: Historically, judges have enjoyed absolute immunity for judicial acts, a doctrine which is codified in 2-9-112 and which provides that a member of the judiciary is immune from suit for damages arising from his lawful discharge of an official duty associated with judicial actions of the court. This doctrine clothes District Courts with inherent and statutory powers to do all that is necessary to render their jurisdiction effective. The public policy of judicial immunity safeguards principled and independent decisionmaking. A judge's personal secretary occupies a distinct and unique status among District Court employees, and it is not a violation of public policy for a newly elected or appointed District Court Judge to discharge his predecessor's secretary and select his own. The lower court's dismissal, on the basis of judicial immunity under 2-9-112, of dismissed secretary's action alleging violation of her right to due process, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and wrongful discharge, was proper. Since the discharge was a judicial act, the codefendant county and County Commissioners cannot be held liable because they are expressly immunized under the provision of 2-9-112 that governmental units are immune from suits for acts or omissions of the judiciary. Mead v. McKittrick, 223 M 428, 727 P2d 517, 43 St. Rep. 1886 (1986), distinguished, with regard to applicability of judicial immunity to bar a grievance hearing regarding the suspension by a Justice of the Peace of a court manager who was not a key employee, in Clark v. Dussault, 265 M 479, 878 P2d 239, 51 St. Rep. 642 (1994).

State Constitution — No Guarantee of Fundamental Right to Particular Cause of Action: In response to a motion by the plaintiff in a wrongful discharge case, the lower court ruled that the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act was unconstitutional because it limited the plaintiff's right to full legal redress. The Supreme Court overruled the lower court stating that in Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), it had ruled that there is no constitutional guarantee to a particular cause of action, and therefore the Legislature may alter common-law causes of action, remedies, and redress. Johnson v. St., 238 M 215, 776 P2d 1221, 46 St. Rep. 1214 (1989).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 583 deleted former second sentence that read: "Except as limited in this part, employment having no specified term may be terminated at the will of either the employer or the employee on notice to the other for any reason considered sufficient by the terminating party." Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 583, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, in Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 Mont. 346, 981 P.2d 271 (1999), the Montana Supreme Court held that the at-will employment statute, section 39-2-503, MCA, had been impliedly repealed by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, chapter 2, part 9, MCA."

Case Notes

No Claim for Wrongful Termination Apart From Either Contract or Wrongful Discharge Act: Solle claimed that her employer violated the common-law duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to renew her employment contract when she had a reasonable expectation that a renewal would be offered. Solle's employer moved to compel arbitration, the motion was granted, and Solle appealed. Under Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), claims for wrongful termination from tort or express or implied contract are no longer viable under Montana law. Rather, 39-2-913 explicitly preempts all common-law remedies but bars only tort and contract claims that are "for discharge". A threshold determination in cases alleging wrongful termination is whether the parties' relationship is governed by a written contract for a specific term or whether it falls under the provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which applies to noncontract situations. Solle's employment was covered by a written contract containing an arbitration clause, and her claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was inextricably intertwined with and based upon her termination from employment. Although breach of a contract is not a prerequisite to breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the covenant arises out of a contractual relationship between the parties, and a breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Solle's contract was silent as to whether there was an obligation on the employer's part to renew the contract or on Solle's part to accept a renewal offer, so Solle argued that the failure to include such a provision indicated the employer's intent not to cover a claim like this under the arbitration clause. The Supreme Court disagreed and proceeded to treat the dispute as arising out of the employment contract. Solle was not allowed to maintain a wrongful termination claim apart from either the contract or the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Solle's contract contained a provision that any unresolved dispute would be subject to arbitration, but the arbitration clause did not explicitly provide that it would govern issues concerning contract nonrenewal. Nevertheless, the contract governed Solle's employment, termination, and postemployment relationship and did not explicitly exclude disputes arising after contract termination. The presumption favors arbitrability, and the District Court did not err in holding that Solle's claim was subject to arbitration. Solle v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 MT 96, 299 M 237, 999 P2d 328, 57 St. Rep. 391 (2000). See also Nolde Bros., Inc. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union, 430 US 243, 51 L Ed 2d 300, 97 S Ct 1067 (1977).

Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Fact Whether Employee Satisfactorily Performed Job — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Suit in Error: The District Court granted a motion by employer Plum Creek Manufacturing, L.P. (Plum Creek), for summary judgment on employee Andrews' wrongful discharge claim, concluding that although the discharge issue was a question of fact for a jury, even if a discharge had occurred, Plum Creek had good cause for the dismissal. The court declined to use the discharge element as a basis for granting the motion for summary judgment. Andrews argued on appeal that she was either actually or constructively discharged and maintained that any inadequacy on her part was a result of Plum Creek's failure to train her, define procedures, and appropriately supervise and evaluate her in her job. Plum Creek asserted that it had reasonable job-related grounds for dismissing Andrews based on economic grounds and Andrews' failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, regardless of who was at fault for that failure. The Supreme Court noted that District Courts may not adjudicate questions of fact on motions for summary judgment. There was conflicting evidence regarding the admission of failure to perform job duties and regarding performance of job duties, and it was the function of a jury, not the court, to weigh the evidence. Andrews presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether she had satisfactorily performed her job, and the District Court should have allowed the jury to decide if good cause existed to discharge Andrews. Granting of the motion for summary dismissal was erroneous, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings. Andrews v. Plum Creek Mfg., L.P., 2001 MT 94, 305 M 194, 27 P3d 426 (2001).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act Superseding and Impliedly Repealing At-Will Employment Provisions: Section 39-2-904(2) provides that a discharge is wrongful only if the discharge was not for good cause and the employee had completed the probationary period of employment. However, under 39-2-503 (now repealed), a nonprobationary at-will employee may be discharged without good cause. The sections clearly conflict. Exercising its power to impliedly repeal conflicting legislation, the Supreme Court held that because the plain meaning of 39-2-904 is that a nonprobationary employee may not be discharged without good cause, the provisions of that section have effectively eliminated the at-will employment provisions and thus supersede and impliedly repeal 39-2-503 (now repealed). Because the good cause requirement applies to an employee upon completion of probation, the employer must define the probationary period at the onset of the employment relationship and has the burden of showing that the probationary period was in effect at the time of a discharge. Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 M 346, 981 P2d 271, 56 St. Rep. 456 (1999), overruling Medicine Horse v. Trustees, Big Horn County School District No. 27, 251 M 65, 823 P2d 230, 48 St. Rep. 1074 (1991).

Termination of Employment for Legitimate Business Reasons Insufficient Basis for Judgment as Matter of Law: As set out in Kneeland v. Luzenac Am., Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), a motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted only if it appears that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate references that can be drawn from the evidence, and there is a complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to a jury. In this case, an employer maintained that its employee was terminated for legitimate business reasons and evidence existed to support that contention, but that did not constitute a sufficient basis for judgment as a matter of law in light of other evidence submitted by the employee tending to show that the termination was not for legitimate business reasons. Denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law was proper. Braulick v. Hathaway Meats, Inc., 1999 MT 57, 294 M 1, 980 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 241 (1999).

Refusal to Bifurcate Wrongful Discharge Claim From Employer's Counterclaim Proper: Jarvenpaa argued that his employer's counterclaim against him for recovery of retirement benefits should have been bifurcated from his wrongful discharge claim because the counterclaim unnecessarily invited evidence of his election to retire and the retirement benefits that he received, which prejudicially persuaded the jury to find that the discharge was fair instead of wrongful. However, evidence of the retirement election was helpful to the jury to make a well-informed decision, including whether the employer acted with malice, and was relevant to the wrongful discharge action. Therefore, the District Court did not err in refusing to bifurcate the issues for separate trial. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998).

Newspaper Advertisement Not Considered Legitimate Use of Lawful Product: McGillen contended that he was improperly discharged from employment for placing a false newspaper advertisement for sale of a truck and listing his supervisor's name and phone number with instructions to call late at night. McGillen argued that under this section, a newspaper advertisement is a lawful product and that his use of the advertisement, on his own time and outside the workplace, could not be used as grounds for dismissal. The District Court properly held that a newspaper advertisement does not fit the definition of lawful product, within the context of this section, which is intended to protect an employee from discharge for the use of a lawful product, such as food, beverages, and tobacco, that is legally consumed off the employer's premises. McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

No Wrongful Discharge Without Complete Severance of Employment: Clark sued for wrongful discharge on the basis that his employer demoted him from terminal manager to utility person. The Supreme Court held that there must be a complete termination of employment to claim wrongful discharge. In Clark's case, he reported to work the next day for the utility position. Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996), distinguishing Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116 (1995), in which plaintiff refused to accept a new position with a substantial pay cut.

Employee to Rely on More Than Mere Speculation to Overcome Employer's Claim That Discharge Based on Good Cause: Mysse alleged that she was fired by the county as a driver for senior citizens as a scapegoat to make up for the county's improvident purchase of a bus to transport senior citizens. The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that Mysse had been fired for refusing to establish a set schedule and refusing to drive the bus and that her allegations were mere speculation and did not defeat the county's claim that she had been discharged for good cause. Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), followed in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), and distinguished in Marcy v. Delta Airlines, 166 F3d 1279 (9th Cir. 1999).

Failure to Report to Work — Discharge for Cause: Walker contended that he was constructively discharged from work with Montana Power Company (MPC) because of MPC's failure to accommodate him by removing him from a hostile work environment, citing Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421 (1994). However, Walker's supervisors testified that they had informed him that they had placements available other than working with the individuals about whom Walker had complained. The Supreme Court was not persuaded that Martinell controlled in this case, holding that Walker's discharge from MPC's employ was for good cause, namely Walker's failure to report to work after the expiration of an 11-month series of medical leave and personal leave. Walker v. Mont. Power Co., 278 M 344, 924 P2d 1339, 53 St. Rep. 943 (1996).

Termination From Managerial Position and Refusal to Accept Lesser Position Constituting Discharge From Employment: Howard was absolutely and finally terminated from his managerial position, after which he was offered a functionally different and substantially inferior position with the same employer. This was not a lateral transfer or minor change in job description. Howard's refusal to accept an offer of a lesser position at best affected his duty to mitigate his damages. The termination constituted a discharge from employment under the provisions of this part and raised a question of fact as to whether the discharge was made with good cause. It was reversible error for the trial court to dismiss Howard's complaint on the assumption that the termination was a constructive discharge based on reasonable grounds for demotion. Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116, 52 St. Rep. 814 (1995).

"Retire or Be Fired" as Involuntary Discharge — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Jarvenpaa was retired by Glacier Electric Cooperative in a letter that gave him the choice of retiring "voluntarily" or being terminated. After expressing in writing his displeasure with the choice being offered, Jarvenpaa retired and then sued Glacier Electric, alleging wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly found that Jarvenpaa's retirement was not involuntary and improperly granted summary judgment for Glacier Electric. The Supreme Court cited federal age discrimination cases in holding that the choice given Jarvenpaa was no choice at all and emphasized that the amount of retirement benefits received by Jarvenpaa was relevant to damages but not determinative of whether his termination was voluntary. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 271 M 477, 898 P2d 690, 52 St. Rep. 582 (1995). On remand, the jury decided that Jarvenpaa was not wrongfully discharged and awarded Glacier Electric its counterclaim to collect money that Jarvenpaa received for early retirement, plus interest. Although Jarvenpaa had the right to pursue the constructive discharge as wrongful, he was not entitled to keep the early retirement benefits after it was determined that the discharge was not wrongful. The two scenarios under which Jarvenpaa could keep the retirement benefits were: (1) if he in fact retired, which he did not do; or (2) if he was wrongfully discharged, in which case he could have applied his early retirement benefits as an offset against any wrongful discharge damages that he was awarded. Neither scenario occurred; thus, the District Court did not err in denying Jarvenpaa's motion for summary judgment on the counterclaim. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998).

Cause of Action by Nonprobationary Employee if Discharge Not for Good Cause: An employee who has completed the employer's probationary period has a valid ground for maintaining a cause of action against the employer if the discharge was not based on good cause, which is defined as reasonable job-related grounds for dismissal based on a failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, disruption of the employer's operation, or other legitimate business reason. Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Mkt., Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Termination Not in Furtherance of Legitimate Reduction in Staff: Kestell presented evidence that his employer's ostensible reasons for replacing him were false, arbitrary, or capricious and unrelated to the needs of the business and therefore did not constitute legitimate business reasons under this section. The District Court thus did not err in denying the employer's motions for directed verdict and judgment N.O.V. on Kestell's wrongful discharge claim. Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993), followed in Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Definition of "Discharge" Proper in Light of Circumstances of Case: Employer contended error in the giving of a definition of discharge as termination of employment, including resignation and failure to recall or rehire, rather than giving the full statutory definition provided in this section. However, the instruction included the types of discharge that were supported by the evidence in the case, as presented by both parties, and failure to give the entire statutory definition was not an abuse of discretion. Arnold v. Boise Cascade Corp., 259 M 259, 856 P2d 217, 50 St. Rep. 784 (1993), followed in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

Statutory Definition of Good Cause Applicable — No New Standard Adopted: In asserting her wrongful discharge claim, Miller contended that a new standard of good cause be adopted based on whether: (1) the employee satisfied the general obligations of an employee described in 39-2-401; (2) the employer followed industry standards of progressive discipline; and (3) the employer exercised bad faith. The Supreme Court declined to adopt the suggested standard, opting instead for the statutory definition in this section. Based on its extensive findings, including those that Miller failed to implement new procedures and delayed completing tasks, the District Court correctly concluded that Miller's termination was reasonably based on job-related grounds and that, in light of the fact that the employer followed the express written provisions of its personnel policies, dismissal was proper. Miller v. Citizens St. Bank, 252 M 472, 830 P2d 550, 49 St. Rep. 422 (1992).

Evidence of Other Than Economic Motives for Firing — Sufficiency of Jury Issue Upheld: In an unlawful discharge action, the employer claimed on appeal that the employee offered insufficient evidence to show that his firing was motivated other than by the economic motives claimed by the employer. The Supreme Court held that the present case was unlike Cecil v. Cardinal Drilling Co., 244 M 405, 797 P2d 232 (1990), cited by the employer for the proposition that the employee must produce evidence of other motives. The court distinguished Cecil, stating that that case was decided under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which authorizes a nonprobationary employee to be fired for good cause. In Cecil, the plaintiff had insufficient evidence to defeat a motion for summary judgment, while in this case the court found that there was evidence from which the jury could conclude that the employer had noneconomic motives for firing the plaintiff. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 39, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Trends in Crude Oil Prices as Legitimate Business Reason for Reductions in Force: Economic conditions constitute a legitimate business reason to engage in reductions in force. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257 (1986), held that employers should not be foreclosed from engaging in legitimate reductions in force necessary to maintain the economic vitality of the company. Absent an offer of any other motive or reason for termination, summary judgment was proper based on a company's reliance on trends in the price of crude oil as a legitimate reason for terminating an employee. Cecil v. Cardinal Drilling Co., 244 M 405, 797 P2d 232, 47 St. Rep. 1673 (1990).

Insufficient Claim of Constructive Discharge: Plaintiff's claims that she was forced to resign because of negative comments by her supervisors and denial of a raise, along with comments by fellow employees that they would leave rather than continue in plaintiff's position, did not constitute genuine issues of material fact to indicate constructive discharge. The doctrine of constructive discharge has not been recognized beyond discrimination cases. Plaintiff's subjective judgment that her working conditions had become intolerable was insufficient to meet the high burden of proof required to prove constructive discharge. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Fact Whether Employee Satisfactorily Performed Job — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Suit in Error: The District Court granted a motion by employer Plum Creek Manufacturing, L.P. (Plum Creek), for summary judgment on employee Andrews' wrongful discharge claim, concluding that although the discharge issue was a question of fact for a jury, even if a discharge had occurred, Plum Creek had good cause for the dismissal. The court declined to use the discharge element as a basis for granting the motion for summary judgment. Andrews argued on appeal that she was either actually or constructively discharged and maintained that any inadequacy on her part was a result of Plum Creek's failure to train her, define procedures, and appropriately supervise and evaluate her in her job. Plum Creek asserted that it had reasonable job-related grounds for dismissing Andrews based on economic grounds and Andrews' failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, regardless of who was at fault for that failure. The Supreme Court noted that District Courts may not adjudicate questions of fact on motions for summary judgment. There was conflicting evidence regarding the admission of failure to perform job duties and regarding performance of job duties, and it was the function of a jury, not the court, to weigh the evidence. Andrews presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether she had satisfactorily performed her job, and the District Court should have allowed the jury to decide if good cause existed to discharge Andrews. Granting of the motion for summary dismissal was erroneous, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings. Andrews v. Plum Creek Mfg., L.P., 2001 MT 94, 305 M 194, 27 P3d 426 (2001).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act Superseding and Impliedly Repealing At-Will Employment Provisions: Section 39-2-904(2) provides that a discharge is wrongful only if the discharge was not for good cause and the employee had completed the probationary period of employment. However, under 39-2-503, a nonprobationary at-will employee may be discharged without good cause. The sections clearly conflict. Exercising its power to impliedly repeal conflicting legislation, the Supreme Court held that because the plain meaning of 39-2-904 is that a nonprobationary employee may not be discharged without good cause, the provisions of that section have effectively eliminated the at-will employment provisions and thus supersede and impliedly repeal 39-2-503. Because the good cause requirement applies to an employee upon completion of probation, the employer must define the probationary period at the onset of the employment relationship and has the burden of showing that the probationary period was in effect at the time of a discharge. Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 M 346, 981 P2d 271, 56 St. Rep. 456 (1999), overruling Medicine Horse v. Trustees, Big Horn County School District No. 27, 251 M 65, 823 P2d 230, 48 St. Rep. 1074 (1991).

Termination of Employment for Legitimate Business Reasons Insufficient Basis for Judgment as Matter of Law: As set out in Kneeland v. Luzenac Am., Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), a motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted only if it appears that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate references that can be drawn from the evidence, and there is a complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to a jury. In this case, an employer maintained that its employee was terminated for legitimate business reasons and evidence existed to support that contention, but that did not constitute a sufficient basis for judgment as a matter of law in light of other evidence submitted by the employee tending to show that the termination was not for legitimate business reasons. Denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law was proper. Braulick v. Hathaway Meats, Inc., 1999 MT 57, 294 M 1, 980 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 241 (1999).

Refusal to Bifurcate Wrongful Discharge Claim From Employer's Counterclaim Proper: Jarvenpaa argued that his employer's counterclaim against him for recovery of retirement benefits should have been bifurcated from his wrongful discharge claim because the counterclaim unnecessarily invited evidence of his election to retire and the retirement benefits that he received, which prejudicially persuaded the jury to find that the discharge was fair instead of wrongful. However, evidence of the retirement election was helpful to the jury to make a well-informed decision, including whether the employer acted with malice, and was relevant to the wrongful discharge action. Therefore, the District Court did not err in refusing to bifurcate the issues for separate trial. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998).

Newspaper Advertisement Not Considered Legitimate Use of Lawful Product: McGillen contended that he was improperly discharged from employment for placing a false newspaper advertisement for sale of a truck and listing his supervisor's name and phone number with instructions to call late at night. McGillen argued that under this section, a newspaper advertisement is a lawful product and that his use of the advertisement, on his own time and outside the workplace, could not be used as grounds for dismissal. The District Court properly held that a newspaper advertisement does not fit the definition of lawful product, within the context of this section, which is intended to protect an employee from discharge for the use of a lawful product, such as food, beverages, and tobacco, that is legally consumed off the employer's premises. McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

No Wrongful Discharge Without Complete Severance of Employment: Clark sued for wrongful discharge on the basis that his employer demoted him from terminal manager to utility person. The Supreme Court held that there must be a complete termination of employment to claim wrongful discharge. In Clark's case, he reported to work the next day for the utility position. Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996), distinguishing Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116 (1995), in which plaintiff refused to accept a new position with a substantial pay cut.

Employee to Rely on More Than Mere Speculation to Overcome Employer's Claim That Discharge Based on Good Cause: Mysse alleged that she was fired by the county as a driver for senior citizens as a scapegoat to make up for the county's improvident purchase of a bus to transport senior citizens. The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that Mysse had been fired for refusing to establish a set schedule and refusing to drive the bus and that her allegations were mere speculation and did not defeat the county's claim that she had been discharged for good cause. Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), followed in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), and distinguished in Marcy v. Delta Airlines, 166 F3d 1279 (9th Cir. 1999).

Failure to Report to Work — Discharge for Cause: Walker contended that he was constructively discharged from work with Montana Power Company (MPC) because of MPC's failure to accommodate him by removing him from a hostile work environment, citing Martinell v. Mont.

Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421 (1994). However, Walker's supervisors testified that they had informed him that they had placements available other than working with the individuals about whom Walker had complained. The Supreme Court was not persuaded that Martinell controlled in this case, holding that Walker's discharge from MPC's employ was for good cause, namely Walker's failure to report to work after the expiration of an 11-month series of medical leave and personal leave. Walker v. Mont. Power Co., 278 M 344, 924 P2d 1339, 53 St. Rep. 943 (1996).

Termination From Managerial Position and Refusal to Accept Lesser Position Constituting Discharge From Employment: Howard was absolutely and finally terminated from his managerial position, after which he was offered a functionally different and substantially inferior position with the same employer. This was not a lateral transfer or minor change in job description. Howard's refusal to accept an offer of a lesser position at best affected his duty to mitigate his damages. The termination constituted a discharge from employment under the provisions of this part and raised a question of fact as to whether the discharge was made with good cause. It was reversible error for the trial court to dismiss Howard's complaint on the assumption that the termination was a constructive discharge based on reasonable grounds for demotion. Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116, 52 St. Rep. 814 (1995).

"Retire or Be Fired" as Involuntary Discharge — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Jarvenpaa was retired by Glacier Electric Cooperative in a letter that gave him the choice of retiring "voluntarily" or being terminated. After expressing in writing his displeasure with the choice being offered, Jarvenpaa retired and then sued Glacier Electric, alleging wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly found that Jarvenpaa's retirement was not involuntary and improperly granted summary judgment for Glacier Electric. The Supreme Court cited federal age discrimination cases in holding that the choice given Jarvenpaa was no choice at all and emphasized that the amount of retirement benefits received by Jarvenpaa was relevant to damages but not determinative of whether his termination was voluntary. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 271 M 477, 898 P2d 690, 52 St. Rep. 582 (1995). On remand, the jury decided that Jarvenpaa was not wrongfully discharged and awarded Glacier Electric its counterclaim to collect money that Jarvenpaa received for early retirement, plus interest. Although Jarvenpaa had the right to pursue the constructive discharge as wrongful, he was not entitled to keep the early retirement benefits after it was determined that the discharge was not wrongful. The two scenarios under which Jarvenpaa could keep the retirement benefits were: (1) if he in fact retired, which he did not do; or (2) if he was wrongfully discharged, in which case he could have applied his early retirement benefits as an offset against any wrongful discharge damages that he was awarded. Neither scenario occurred; thus, the District Court did not err in denying Jarvenpaa's motion for summary judgment on the counterclaim. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998).

Cause of Action by Nonprobationary Employee if Discharge Not for Good Cause: An employee who has completed the employer's probationary period has a valid ground for maintaining a cause of action against the employer if the discharge was not based on good cause, which is defined as reasonable job-related grounds for dismissal based on a failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, disruption of the employer's operation, or other legitimate business reason. Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Mkt., Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Termination Not in Furtherance of Legitimate Reduction in Staff: Kestell presented evidence that his employer's ostensible reasons for replacing him were false, arbitrary, or capricious and unrelated to the needs of the business and therefore did not constitute legitimate business reasons under this section. The District Court thus did not err in denying the employer's motions for directed verdict and judgment N.O.V. on Kestell's wrongful discharge claim. Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993), followed in Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Definition of "Discharge" Proper in Light of Circumstances of Case: Employer contended error in the giving of a definition of discharge as termination of employment, including resignation and failure to recall or rehire, rather than giving the full statutory definition provided in this section. However, the instruction included the types of discharge that were supported by the evidence in the case, as presented by both parties, and failure to give the entire statutory definition was not an abuse of discretion. followed in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

Statutory Definition of Good Cause Applicable — No New Standard Adopted: In asserting her wrongful discharge claim, Miller contended that a new standard of good cause be adopted based on whether: (1) the employee satisfied the general obligations of an employee described in 39-2-401; (2) the employer followed industry standards of progressive discipline; and (3) the employer exercised bad faith. The Supreme Court declined to adopt the suggested standard, opting instead for the statutory definition in this section. Evidence of Other Than Economic Motives for Firing — Sufficiency of Jury Issue Upheld: In an unlawful discharge action, the employer claimed on appeal that the employee offered insufficient evidence to show that his firing was motivated other than by the economic motives claimed by the employer. The Supreme Court held that the present case was unlike Cecil v. Trends in Crude Oil Prices as Legitimate Business Reason for Reductions in Force: Economic conditions constitute a legitimate business reason to engage in reductions in force. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257 (1986), held that employers should not be foreclosed from engaging in legitimate reductions in force necessary to maintain the economic vitality of the company. 39-2-904. Elements of wrongful discharge — presumptive probationary period.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 583 inserted (2) authorizing employer or employee to terminate employment at will on notice to the other for any or no reason and establishing 6-month probationary period from date of hire if no specific probation period established; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 583, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, in Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 Mont. 346, 981 P.2d 271 (1999), the Montana Supreme Court held that the at-will employment statute, section 39-2-503, MCA, had been impliedly repealed by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, chapter 2, part 9, MCA."

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Fact Whether Employee Satisfactorily Performed Job — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Suit in Error: The District Court granted a motion by employer Plum Creek Manufacturing, L.P. (Plum Creek), for summary judgment on employee Andrews' wrongful discharge claim, concluding that although the discharge issue was a question of fact for a jury, even if a discharge had occurred, Plum Creek had good cause for the dismissal. The court declined to use the discharge element as a basis for granting the motion for summary judgment. Andrews argued on appeal that she was either actually or constructively discharged and maintained that any inadequacy on her part was a result of Plum Creek's failure to train her, define procedures, and appropriately supervise and evaluate her in her job. Plum Creek asserted that it had reasonable job-related grounds for dismissing Andrews based on economic grounds and Andrews' failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, regardless of who was at fault for that failure. The Supreme Court noted that District Courts may not adjudicate questions of fact on motions for summary judgment. There was conflicting evidence regarding the admission of failure to perform job duties and regarding performance of job duties, and it was the function of a jury, not the court, to weigh the evidence. Andrews presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether she had satisfactorily performed her job, and the District Court should have allowed the jury to decide if good cause existed to discharge Andrews. Granting of the motion for summary dismissal was erroneous, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings. Andrews v. Plum Creek Mfg., L.P., 2001 MT 94, 305 M 194, 27 P3d 426 (2001).

Confirmation of Police Officer After Completion of Probationary Period — No Denial Without Good Cause: Hobbs argued that the lower court erred in dismissing his suit against the city of Thompson Falls for terminating him without cause because the parties agreed that he had completed his probationary period and this section states that an employee completing a probationary period may be terminated only for good cause. The city argued that 7-32-4113 extends the probationary period for 30 days because it states that upon completion of a probationary period, an officer's appointment must be confirmed by the city's governing body within 30 days. The Supreme Court held that Hobbs could be discharged only for good cause because the only way to reconcile the two statutes was to interpret them to mean that an officer's employment upon completion of the probationary period was subject to confirmation by the city's governing body. However, because the officer was beyond the probationary period during that 30-day time, the officer's confirmation could be denied only upon a showing of good cause. Hobbs v. Thompson Falls, 2000 MT 336, 303 M 140, 15 P3d 418, 57 St. Rep. 1432 (2000), distinguishing Schend v. Thorson, 170 M 5, 549 P2d 809 (1976).

In-House Counsel Not Precluded From Bringing Wrongful Discharge From Employment Claim Even if Proof of Claim Requires Disclosure of Confidential Information: Burkhart was hired as in-house counsel for Semitool, Inc. (Semitool). Following his discharge from employment, Burkhart sued Semitool for wrongful discharge. The District Court concluded that even though Burkhart had a right to protection against wrongful discharge, Semitool also had a right to protection of its trade secrets and that because the rights conflicted, the attorney-client privilege must prevail. The court dismissed Burkhart's claim on grounds that he was precluded from bringing an employment claim because, as staff counsel hired to provide legal advice or services, proof of the claim would require disclosure of confidential matters. Burkhart maintained on appeal that the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act applied to any employee and that there was no exclusion for attorneys. Semitool argued that because Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., gives the Supreme Court sole authority to regulate the conduct of lawyers, the Act is unconstitutional to the extent that it interferes with that authority. Semitool also cited Campbell v. Bozeman Investors of Duluth, 1998 MT 204, 290 M 374, 964 P2d 41 (1998), for the "universal rule" that clients may fire lawyers at any time, for any reason, with or without cause and that for that reason, application of the Act to the employment relationship of staff attorneys and the client employer was not proper. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court examined two lines of cases from other jurisdictions that appeared to support either conclusion. The court then concluded that the reasoning and analysis in Gen. Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court, 876 P2d 487 (Calif. 1994), and its progeny were the more sound and realistic approach. The holding in Campbell does not create an absolute right to discharge an attorney with complete impunity no matter the form of the attorney-client relationship. The universal rule does not apply in an attorney-client relationship in which the attorney is the employee of the client because in that context, the client has avoided the traditional relationship and granted the attorney protections that do not apply to independent contractors, but do apply to employees, including the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Further, although Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., gives the Supreme Court sole authority to regulate the conduct of lawyers, the court does not have sole authority to regulate employer conduct. The Act pertains solely to employer conduct and does not implicate the conduct of lawyers in the practice of law, and thus, it is not an unconstitutional encroachment on the court's authority for the Act to apply to lawyers as employees or employers. Further, Rule 1.6 of the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct contemplates that a lawyer may reveal confidential attorney-client information to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish an employment-related claim against an employer who is also a client. Thus, the plain language of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act requires courts to recognize an in-house counsel's right to pursue and maintain an action for wrongful discharge, and those claims are within the contemplation of the rules of professional conduct for attorneys. A lawyer does not forfeit rights simply because confidential information must be used to prove them, nor may a client gain the right to cheat the lawyer by imparting confidences. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000). See also Doe v. A Corp., 709 F2d 1043 (5th Cir. 1983).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhart's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhart was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhart accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhart appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited 39-2-914 and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000).

Ninth Circuit Court — Wrongful Discharge Claim Valid Even if Employer Acted Under Mistaken Fact Interpretation — Proof of Employer Bad Faith Irrelevant: A Delta Airlines' employee was terminated after she intentionally submitted payroll records with three incorrect entries that allowed her to collect $250 in unearned wages. The employee filed suit, alleging wrongful discharge. Delta moved for a directed verdict, arguing that the employee had failed to present any evidence that Delta's reasons for termination were a pretext and not the honest reason. When the District Court awarded the employee $60,000 in damages for wrongful discharge, Delta appealed, claiming that Montana's Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act does not provide a cause of action when the employer acted in good faith, but rather when the discharge is based on mistaken facts. Citing the Montana Supreme Court decisions Morton v. M-W-M, Inc. 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576 (1994), and Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc. 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116 (1995), the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that the employee was not required to prove that Delta acted in bad faith because the issue was irrelevant to whether Delta was mistaken about the facts surrounding the dismissal. Marcy v. Delta Airlines, 166 F3d 1279 (9th Cir. 1999).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act Superseding and Impliedly Repealing At-Will Employment Provisions: Prior to the amendment of this section and the repeal of 39-2-503, former subsection (2) of this section provided that a discharge is wrongful only if the discharge was not for good cause and the employee had completed the probationary period of employment. However, under 39-2-503 (now repealed), a nonprobationary at-will employee may be discharged without good cause. The sections clearly conflict. Exercising its power to impliedly repeal conflicting legislation, the Supreme Court held that because the plain meaning of this section is that a nonprobationary employee may not be discharged without good cause, the provisions of that section have effectively eliminated the at-will employment provisions and thus supersede and impliedly repeal 39-2-503 (now repealed). Because the good cause requirement applies to an employee upon completion of probation, the employer must define the probationary period at the onset of the employment relationship and has the burden of showing that the probationary period was in effect at the time of a discharge (2001 amendments to this section established a default 6-month probationary period). Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 M 346, 981

P2d 271, 56 St. Rep. 456 (1999), overruling Medicine Horse v. Trustees, Big Horn County School District No. 27, 251 M 65, 823 P2d 230, 48 St. Rep. 1074 (1991).

Expert Testimony Regarding Existence of Personnel Policy Properly Limited: One of Jarvenpaa's goals at trial was to establish that the employer had a written personnel policy so that, once established, it could be argued through expert testimony that the policy was violated, resulting in Jarvenpaa's wrongful discharge. Concerned that it was the jury's duty to decide whether the employer had established an actual written personnel policy, the District Court limited expert testimony to the identification of common management standards and a discussion of whether management standards were evident in the materials supplied by the employer's management consultant. The court concluded that there was a lack of foundation to allow the expert to testify to anything further. The court then instructed the jury that a wrongful discharge occurs when an employer violates its own written personnel policy. It was not error to limit the expert testimony, and when coupled with the jury instruction, the court allowed Jarvenpaa to sufficiently present his theory. No reversible error occurred. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998), distinguishing Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Introduction of Postdischarge Evidence to Substantiate Reasons for Discharge: Jarvenpaa contended that evidence pertaining to reasons why he was discharged should have been limited to what was contained in a letter written to him by the employer and to what occurred before the letter was written and that evidence acquired after his discharge should not have been introduced. The District Court properly exercised its discretion in allowing the postdischarge evidence because the employer did not offer the evidence as collateral reasons for the discharge, but rather to substantiate the reasons given in the letter, which was relevant to the question of whether the discharge was wrongful. The jury was also properly instructed to consider only reasons asserted by the employer at the time of discharge. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998), distinguishing Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702, 36 St. Rep. 1075 (1979), Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), and Galbreath v. Golden Sunlight Mines, Inc., 270 M 19, 890 P2d 382 (1995).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

Management Staff of State Workers' Compensation Fund Covered by Wrongful Discharge Act: Section 39-71-2317, providing that management staff of the state workers' compensation fund "serves at the pleasure of the executive director", does not exempt the State Fund from the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act; it only means that the executive director may hire and retain management staff at the director's choice without interference from the State Fund's board of directors. MacMillan v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 285 M 202, 947 P2d 75, 54 St. Rep. 1112 (1997).

No Wrongful Discharge Without Complete Severance of Employment: Clark sued for wrongful discharge on the basis that his employer demoted him from terminal manager to utility person. The Supreme Court held that there must be a complete termination of employment to claim wrongful discharge. In Clark's case, he reported to work the next day for the utility position. Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996), distinguishing Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116 (1995), in which plaintiff refused to accept a new position with a substantial pay cut.

Repeated Violations of Policy Not to Allow Visiting Friends in Secure Area of Juvenile Detention Facility: A juvenile detention officer had visiting friends in a secure area and was orally told not to by a supervisor. He continued to have visiting friends in a secure area after staffers were told not to at a meeting and after receiving a memo prohibiting it. On de novo review of summary judgment for the employer in a wrongful discharge proceeding, the court determined that there was no genuine issue of material fact and that, as a matter of law, the policy violations were reasonable, job-related grounds for dismissal. Fenger v. Flathead County, 277 M 507, 922 P2d 1183, 53 St. Rep. 823 (1996).

Fundamental Constitutional Right to Pursue Employment — Termination for Refusal to Abide by Invalid Rule Wrongful: Wadsworth, a real estate appraiser, sued the Department of Revenue for wrongful discharge from employment after being dismissed by the Department for failing to comply with the Department's conflict of interest rule. The rule prohibited Department employees from engaging in independent fee appraisals and other activities during off-duty hours. A jury found that Wadsworth was wrongfully discharged and awarded damages. On appeal, the state argued that the District Court erred by referring questions of law to the jury for determination. The Supreme Court held that it was harmless error for the District Court to submit to the jury the question of whether the right Wadsworth asserted was a constitutionally protected right and, if constitutionally protected, whether it was a fundamental right and, if it was a fundamental right, whether the state provided a compelling interest for infringing upon it. The Supreme Court concluded that the opportunity to pursue employment is a fundamental right as a necessary incident to the fundamental right to pursue life's basic necessities. Applying a strict scrutiny analysis, the court held that the state failed to demonstrate a compelling interest for the conflict of interest rule restricting Wadsworth's ability to pursue employment opportunities and thus pursue life's basic necessities. The state's termination of Wadsworth in retaliation for refusal to abide by a rule that was in contravention of the constitution violated the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996).

Failure to Renew One-Year Teaching Contract — Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing and Due Process Property Right Not Violated: Failure to renew a professor's teaching contract was not a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and did not violate due process by depriving the professor of a property interest in employment. The contract stated that it was for 1 year and had a specific ending date, and there was no evidence of a justifiable expectation of employment after the year ended. Schaal v. Flathead Valley Community College, 272 M 443, 901 P2d 541, 52 St. Rep. 905 (1995).

Termination From Managerial Position and Refusal to Accept Lesser Position Constituting Discharge From Employment: Howard was absolutely and finally terminated from his managerial position, after which he was offered a functionally different and substantially inferior position with the same employer. This was not a lateral transfer or minor change in job description. Howard's refusal to accept an offer of a lesser position at best affected his duty to mitigate his damages. The termination constituted a discharge from employment under the provisions of this part and raised a question of fact as to whether the discharge was made with good cause. It was reversible error for the trial court to dismiss Howard's complaint on the assumption that the termination was a constructive discharge based on reasonable grounds for demotion. Howard v. Conlin Furniture No. 2, Inc., 272 M 433, 901 P2d 116, 52 St. Rep. 814 (1995).

Discharge of Paper Tester Preempted by National Labor Relations Act — "Garmon" Doctrine Applied: Plaintiff, a paper tester for Stone Container Corporation (Stone), filed suit in state court, alleging that Stone's termination was without good cause in violation of Montana's Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Stone successfully removed the action to federal court where the District Court granted summary judgment for Stone, finding plaintiff's claim preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed and applied the preemption holding in San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 US 236 (1959), ruling that plaintiff's claim alleging a violation of a collective bargaining agreement, after the agreement's expiration but before negotiations to reopen have reached impasse, is preempted under the NLRA. Bassette v. Stone Container Corp., 25 F3d 757 (9th Cir. 1994).

Cause of Action by Nonprobationary Employee if Discharge Not for Good Cause: An employee who has completed the employer's probationary period has a valid ground for maintaining a cause of action against the employer if the discharge was not based on good cause, which is defined as reasonable job-related grounds for dismissal based on a failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, disruption of the employer's operation, or other legitimate business reason. Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Threats by Employee Against Management — Discharge Not Wrongful: Despite employee's contention that his statements to company management were not threats, the proper emphasis was whether they were heard as threats, not whether they were intended as threats. Given the District Court's characterization of the threats as shocking and outrageous and the conclusion that no employer has to tolerate threats and abuse of that nature, the employee's threat, when viewed in the context of the case, was at least insubordination justifying immediate termination under the employer's personnel policy. The conduct was disruptive to the workplace, and the employer had the right to serve its own legitimate business interest by discharging the employee under the circumstances. Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994).

Existence of Express Provision of Personnel Policy Question for Jury: Kearney sued KXLF for wrongful discharge and for damages for uncompensated overtime. The District Court directed a verdict for KXLF on the issue of whether KXLF violated its own written personnel policy because there was no policy regarding annual evaluation of employees contained in KXLF's employee handbook. However, an expert for Kearney testified that such a policy existed because other employees were evaluated using a reprinted form and because a supervisor had issued a memorandum calling for evaluations. The Supreme Court concluded that because reasonable persons could conclude from this evidence that a written policy existed, the District Court erred in directing a verdict for KXLF on this issue. Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Restaurant Employee Fired After Taking Second Job at Another Restaurant While on Vacation: A Burger King assistant manager was fired. Defendant's motion for summary judgment in the wrongful discharge proceeding claimed that plaintiff requested vacation to tend to her family and used it to work at the Black Angus, that she was thus dishonest, and that the Black Angus was a Burger King competitor. Burger King permitted moonlighting with a noncompetitor. Summary judgment for defendant was reversed because plaintiff raised issues as to whether her vacation request was made according to Burger King policy, whether she had misled Burger King to obtain vacation time to work at a second, new job, and whether her two employers were competitors. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Discharge for Reporting Apparent Crimes at Place of Employment: An auto dealer employee reported apparent illegal drug activities by several dealership employees to state authorities and at their request agreed to continue to provide such information and to attempt to purchase illegal drugs. There was no evidence that he was to be paid for this. He was fired 6 days later, allegedly because, as stated in a recorded phone call he made to his boss, he was "a [expletive deleted] snitch and we don't want you around here . . . . Every time we make a move, you call the [expletive deleted] FBI." Several weeks later, he was paid $40 for the information provided. Summary judgment for the employer in a wrongful discharge action thwarted the very purpose of the statute, which provides that a discharge in retaliation for reporting a violation of public policy is a wrongful discharge, and was reversed, although denial of employee's motion for summary judgment was affirmed because employer alleged reasons that if proved would support employee's dismissal. The case was remanded to determine whether the discharge was for good cause or for reporting a violation of public policy. Krebs v. Ryan Oldsmobile, 255 M 291, 843 P2d 312, 49 St. Rep. 1016 (1992), followed in Motarie v. N. Mont. Joint Refuse Disposal District, 274 M 239, 907 P2d 154, 52 St. Rep. 1209 (1995).

Act Inapplicable to Term Contracts: The Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act is inapplicable to a written contract of employment for a specific term. As previously held in Leland v. Heywood, 197 M 491, 643 P2d 578 (1982), an employer has the discretion to not renew a specific term contract without a showing of good cause. Farris v. Hutchinson, 254 M 334, 838 P2d 374, 49 St. Rep. 717 (1992), distinguishing Portable Embryonics v. J.P. Genetics, 248 M 242, 810 P2d 1197 (1991).

Good Faith Considerations Improperly Considered in Context of Age Discrimination Claim: The District Court granted summary judgment to employer on an age discrimination claim, concluded that immunity under 2-9-111 did not apply, and then went on to grant summary judgment to the employer on a wrongful discharge claim based on its determination that the employee was terminated for good cause, as defined in 39-2-903. The good cause discussion and conclusion followed immediately upon the court's consideration of the employer's long-term dissatisfaction with the employee's work performance in the context of the age discrimination claim. The motion for summary judgment and supporting arguments on the wrongful discharge claim differed significantly from those relating to the age discrimination claim, and the good cause issue as it related to the wrongful discharge claim was not raised or argued by either party. By granting summary judgment on an issue not before it, the court effectively denied Kenyon notice and an opportunity to be heard on the issue. The case was remanded. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), overruled, with regard to plaintiff's burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext, in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996).

Questions of Proper Adherence to Personnel Policies as Precluding Summary Judgment on Issue of Wrongful Discharge: The existence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding personnel policies in effect at the time of an employee's alleged wrongful discharge, coupled with denial of the employee's opportunity to enter into evidence written personnel policies purported to be in effect at the time of discharge, effectively denied the employee a hearing on the issue and precluded summary dismissal of the employee's wrongful discharge claim. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992).

Proof of Retaliatory Discharge — Claim Outside Context of Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Preempted by Federal Law: To prove retaliatory discharge involving sexual harassment, it must be shown that: (1) the employee was discharged; (2) the employee was subjected to sexual harassment during the course of employment; and (3) the employer's motivation for the discharge was to retaliate for the employee's resistance to the sexual harassment. When this factual inquiry does not turn on the meaning of any term of a collective bargaining agreement, the wrongful discharge claim is considered independent of the agreement for purposes of preemption under federal law. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), following Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), and followed in Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), and, with respect to sexual discrimination, Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995).

Statutory Definition of Good Cause Applicable — No New Standard Adopted: In asserting her wrongful discharge claim, Miller contended that a new standard of good cause be adopted based on whether: (1) the employee satisfied the general obligations of an employee described in 39-2-401; (2) the employer followed industry standards of progressive discipline; and (3) the employer exercised bad faith. The Supreme Court declined to adopt the suggested standard, opting instead for the statutory definition in 39-2-903. Based on its extensive findings, including those that Miller failed to implement new procedures and delayed completing tasks, the District Court correctly concluded that Miller's termination was reasonably based on job-related grounds and that, in light of the fact that the employer followed the express written provisions of its personnel policies, dismissal was proper. Miller v. Citizens St. Bank, 252 M 472, 830 P2d 550, 49 St. Rep. 422 (1992).

Conclusory Allegations of Fraud Insufficient to Justify Punitive Damage Award: Plaintiff maintained in a conclusory fashion that because the original reasons given for his discharge later turned out to be false, the employer had engaged in fraud warranting the award of punitive damages. However, plaintiff never reported or refused to violate public policy and was therefore precluded from obtaining punitive damages under this section. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991).

Effect of Employee Handbook Not Addressed in Summary Judgment — Remand: Discharged employee contended at trial that he was discharged in violation of the conditions of the company's own employee handbook. The trial court completely dismissed the case by summary judgment without addressing the issue of the language of the handbook. The Supreme Court found evidence of facts that indicated a possibility of a cause of action for the employee and remanded for further proceedings to first determine the effect of the language of the handbook and then determine whether an offer of alternative employment was made in good faith. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991).

Violation of Company Policy Resulting in Termination — No Breach of Implied Covenants in Employment Relationship: Employee admittedly took $350 from the checkstand till and used these company funds to finance his Nevada gambling trip, repaying the funds 16 days later. His employment was terminated for violation of company policy. Because the employer based the discharge on a fair and honest reason, employee's subsequent claim of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and negligence was properly summarily dismissed because there was no basis for the claim and no genuine issue of material fact existed. Majerus v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, Inc., 245 M 58, 799 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 1693 (1990), following Niles v. Weissman & Sons, Inc., 241 M 230, 786 P2d 662, 47 St. Rep. 240 (1990).

No Wrongful Discharge Action — Police Officers Never Fired: Two police officers brought an action for wrongful discharge against the city. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's granting of a summary judgment dismissing their suit. The court held that the officers had never been taken before the police commission as required by law and therefore they had never been legally discharged and accordingly could not bring an action for wrongful discharge. McCracken v. Chinook, 242 M 21, 788 P2d 892, 47 St. Rep. 501 (1990).

Wrongful Discharge — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action alleged a public policy violation by employer in not adhering to the employee discipline procedure outlined in its personnel policy. However, plaintiff failed to show that employer had violated its alternative discipline procedure, and summary judgment for employer was proper because there was no genuine issue of material fact indicating a public policy violation by employer. Rupnow v. Polson, 234 M 66, 761 P2d 802, 45 St. Rep. 1734 (1988).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 583 in (2) at end substituted "39-2-904(1)(a)" for "39-2-904(1)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 583, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, in Whidden v. John S. Nerison, Inc., 1999 MT 110, 294 Mont. 346, 981 P.2d 271 (1999), the Montana Supreme Court held that the at-will employment statute, section 39-2-503, MCA, had been impliedly repealed by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, chapter 2, part 9, MCA."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 442 inserted third sentence of (1) requiring deduction from interim earnings any reasonable amount expended regarding new employment prior to deduction of interim earnings from lost wages.

Case Notes

Award of Zero Damages — Jury Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Tyner sued the county for wrongful discharge and alleged violation of Tyner's civil rights. Tyner claimed that he was fired because he had run against one of the County Commissioners in the recent election and because he had criticized the handling of a county contract. The District Court granted a directed verdict on the alleged civil rights violations. The jury also found that Tyner was wrongfully discharged and awarded zero damages. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to justify a zero damage award and that the jury verdict was supported by substantial evidence. Tyner was not entitled to a new trial. Tyner v. Park County, 271 M 355, 897 P2d 202, 52 St. Rep. 507 (1995).

Part-Time Employee Fired After Taking Second, Full-Time Job — Mitigation of Damages: It was error to find that a part-time Burger King employee fired shortly after she took a second job at the Black Angus mitigated any wrongful discharge damages by working full-time at the Black Angus and earning more than she earned at Burger King. It was also error to find that defendant was entitled to summary judgment because employee suffered no damages. The work hours at the two places were presumably compatible, so she could have worked both jobs. Therefore, she suffered the loss of her Burger King earnings. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Determination of Lost Wages and Benefits — Award Not Excessive: The jury was instructed in the exact language of this section and charged with determining the amount of lost wages and fringe benefits after deducting interim earnings in an amount the employee could have earned with reasonable diligence. The jury did not abuse its discretion in applying the statutory criteria, and the amount arrived at was not considered excessive as a matter of law. Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993).

Employee Testimony Regarding Damages — No Error: The District Court allowed employee Arnold to testify as to his approximate losses in wages and benefits due to his wrongful discharge and allowed Arnold's counsel to present a written summary of the alleged damages on summation. Arnold's estimates were substantiated by personal records and knowledge of what the benefits were worth, and it was not error to consider Arnold competent to testify. It was an abuse of discretion, in light of the jury's ability to weigh the evidence and arrive at its own damage assessment, to allow counsel's use of damage estimates during summation when the figures were not totally unsubstantiated by evidence. Arnold v. Boise Cascade Corp., 259 M 259, 856 P2d 217, 50 St. Rep. 784 (1993).

Award of Damages for Lost Wages and Benefits as Discretionary: The amount of damages recoverable for lost wages and benefits under subsection (1) of this section is discretionary rather than mandatory, and a jury instruction to that effect was proper. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992), distinguishing Bascom v. Carpenter, 126 M 129, 246 P2d 223 (1952), and Lamb v. Missoula Imports, 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965 (1988).

Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable to Case in Which Recovery Sought for Personal Losses for Wrongful Discharge: As part of his wrongful discharge claim, Weber sought to apply the private attorney general doctrine, which allows the prevailing party to receive an award of costs and attorney fees when the government fails to enforce interests significant to its citizens. In seeking to apply the doctrine, Weber focused on the egregious conduct surrounding an inflated agency claim, which he was ordered by his superiors to pay, rather than on the conduct that led to his wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court held that the private attorney general exception did not apply because Weber's claim was brought to reimburse him for losses due to his wrongful discharge rather than as a vehicle to reimburse the state for fraudulent claims. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Pre-Act Claim for Damages Improperly Disallowed: The District Court improperly disallowed plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim for damages for pain and suffering, emotional distress, and punitive damages that arose from an employment-related harassment incident that occurred prior to enactment of this section. Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991), followed in Kulm v. Mont. St. Univ.-Bozeman, 285 M 328, 948 P2d 243, 54 St. Rep. 1175 (1997).

Wrongful Discharge Law Limitations on Damages Not Violative of Equal Protection Guarantee — Relation to Legitimate State Interests: The Supreme Court applied the rational basis test in determining whether provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, ch. 2, part 9, which prohibit recovery of noneconomic damages and punitive damages, violated the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. The court found that the Act survived scrutiny because it was rationally related to legitimate state interests, including: (1) promoting the financial interests of businesses in the state or potentially in the state to improve economic conditions; (2) limiting employers' liability for wrongful discharge through restrictions on recovery; (3) providing greater certainty in defining an employer's duties by recalling a contract law limitation on damages for pain and suffering; (4) providing a reasonably just substitute for the common-law causes it abrogates; (5) bettering prior common-law provisions for recovery by allowing claims for prejudgment interest; and (6) allowing some recovery for wrongful discharges that would otherwise deny retirement benefits. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), overruling Pfost v. St., 219 M 206, 713 P2d 495, 42 St. Rep. 1957 (1985), White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983), and Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Offset of Jury Award — Pretrial Agreement: Parties agreed prior to trial that any amount awarded by the jury for lost wages would be offset by the amount of the grievance panel award and the amount of unemployment benefits received. Therefore, the District Court properly reduced a jury award of $850 by the grievance panel award of $671.05 and unemployment compensation of $178.95. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Case Notes

Employer To Comply With Statutory Notification Requirements: Eadus sued Wheatland Memorial Hospital for wrongful discharge. The lower court granted the hospital a summary judgment, dismissing Eadus's claim on the basis that she had not fully exhausted the internal grievance procedures established by the hospital prior to filing suit. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that although Eadus had not availed herself of the grievance procedures, state law required the hospital to notify Eadus within 7 days of discharge of the existence of grievance procedures and to supply her with a copy of the written procedures regardless of the fact that a copy had been supplied to her in the past. Eadus v. Wheatland Mem. Hosp., 279 M 216, 926 P2d 752, 53 St. Rep. 1122 (1996), distinguishing Hoffman v. Town Pump, Inc., 255 M 415, 843 P2d 756, 49 St. Rep. 1044 (1992).

Pay for Accrued Vacation — No Extension of Termination Date: Redfern was discharged at the end of his shift on October 24, 1992, and on October 26, 1992, received his termination pay, which included pay for 5 days of accrued vacation time. On October 29, 1993, Redfern filed an action against Montana Muffler for wrongful discharge. The lower court dismissed the case on the basis that the statutory 1-year period to file the action had passed. On appeal, Redfern argued that the employment relationship had not completely terminated until the 5 days of accrued vacation time had run and that therefore he had until October 30 or 31 to file. The Supreme Court held that under this section, Redfern's termination date for employment was clearly October 24, 1992, and that any vacation benefit had been earned prior to that time. Redfern v. Mont. Muffler, 271 M 333, 896 P2d 455, 52 St. Rep. 470 (1995), distinguishing Allison v. Jumping Horse Ranch, Inc., 255 M 410, 843 P2d 753 (1992).

Statute of Limitations Tolled by Renewal Statute for One Year After Appeal: Hollister was dismissed from her job with the Rosebud County Attorney's Office in 1991 and filed a complaint in federal court the same year, alleging federal and state claims. In 1992, the United States District Court dismissed the complaint and Hollister appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. In 1994, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, and in the same year, Hollister filed a complaint in Rosebud County District Court. The Rosebud County District Court dismissed, holding that the claims were barred by the 1-year statute of limitations under this section and by the 3-year statute of limitations under 27-2-204. Citing Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 34 M 88, 85 P 746 (1906), the Supreme Court held that the word "terminated" in 27-2-407 includes ultimate termination after final appellate action. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Hollister's complaint was timely filed. Hollister v. Forsythe, 270 M 91, 889 P2d 1205, 52 St. Rep. 90 (1995).

Statute of Limitations Not Running When Discharge Did Not Occur: Employer claimed employee's wrongful discharge claim was barred for failure to file within 1 year of discharge. The jury found that the employee was placed on temporary curtailment leave and was never formally discharged. As the question was one of fact within the province of the jury, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statute of limitations did not apply when the employee had not quit employment and the employer had not taken the necessary steps to effectuate an involuntary termination within 1 year of the wrongful discharge action. Arnold v. Boise Cascade Corp., 259 M 259, 856 P2d 217, 50 St. Rep. 784 (1993).

Failure to Exhaust Internal Procedures — Directed Verdict for Employer — Employee's Right to Exhaust and Then Refile Suit: An employer was granted a directed verdict against employee who knew of, but failed to exhaust, internal grievance procedures and who sued for constructive discharge on the day he quit. In an amended order, the court granted the employer attorney fees denied in the original order and did not make a determination as to whether employee could refile his claim after exhausting the internal procedures, though in the original order the court had granted the employee that right. The issue was not briefed by the parties on appeal, and therefore employee would be allowed to refile upon completion of the internal procedures. Hoffman v. Town Pump, Inc., 255 M 415, 843 P2d 756, 49 St. Rep. 1044 (1992).

Precluding Employer Notification of Internal Procedures by Suing on Day of Discharge: Employee filed a wrongful constructive discharge complaint the same day that he terminated his employment. He had failed to use and exhaust employer's internal grievance procedures, which he had prior knowledge of and had used before. He was not excused from use of the procedures before filing the action by the fact that employer did not notify him of them and give him a copy as required by this section because filing suit on the day of termination prevented employer from notifying him of the procedures and giving him a copy before the action was filed. The directed verdict for employer was proper. Hoffman v. Town Pump, Inc., 255 M 415, 843 P2d 756, 49 St. Rep.

1044 (1992), distinguished in Eadus v. Wheatland Mem. Hosp., 279 M 216, 926 P2d 752, 53 St. Rep. 1122 (1996).

When Statute of Limitations Begins to Run: On July 12, 1988, ranch owner informed ranch manager that his employment was to be terminated because the owner thought the manager was "burned out" on ranching and would "jump ship" and start an outfitting business. The owner asked the manager to stay until October 1, 1988, to assist and train the new manager. The manager did so and filed a wrongful discharge action on September 29, 1989. The owner claimed that the "1 year after the date of discharge" statute of limitations period had passed. The Supreme Court held that a statute of limitations does not begin to run until all the elements of a cause of action are in existence, that an element in this case is damages, that damages did not occur until the manager no longer earned his salary and benefits, and that lost salary and benefits occurred on October 1, 1988, upon complete severance of the employment relationship, which is when the statute of limitations began to run. Allison v. Jumping Horse Ranch, Inc., 255 M 410, 843 P2d 753, 49 St. Rep. 1039 (1992).

Wrongful Discharge Law Limitations on Damages Not Violative of Equal Protection Guarantee — Relation to Legitimate State Interests: The Supreme Court applied the rational basis test in determining whether provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, Title 39, ch. 2, part 9, which prohibit recovery of noneconomic damages and punitive damages, violated the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. The court found that the Act survived scrutiny because it was rationally related to legitimate state interests, including: (1) promoting the financial interests of businesses in the state or potentially in the state to improve economic conditions; (2) limiting employers' liability for wrongful discharge through restrictions on recovery; (3) providing greater certainty in defining an employer's duties by recalling a contract law limitation on damages for pain and suffering; (4) providing a reasonably just substitute for the common-law causes it abrogates; (5) bettering prior common-law provisions for recovery by allowing claims for prejudgment interest; and (6) allowing some recovery for wrongful discharges that would otherwise deny retirement benefits. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), overruling Pfost v. St., 219 M 206, 713 P2d 495, 42 St. Rep. 1957 (1985), White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983), and Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Issue of Material Facts as to Plaintiff's Mental Illness — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: In a case involving a cause of action that arose prior to the enactment of this section, the plaintiff, through his guardian ad litem, filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge and claiming that the 3-year statute of limitations was tolled due to the plaintiff's mental illness. The complaint was filed nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged, and the trial court, upon the employer's summary judgment motion, subsequently dismissed the complaint as untimely filed. In response to the employer's contention that the plaintiff's pursuit of other benefit claims demonstrates an absence of mental illness, the Supreme Court held that that is an issue to be decided at trial, not on a motion for summary judgment. It is not an issue that is susceptible to resolution based on written affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination in court. Therefore, the matter was remanded because there is a material issue of fact concerning the plaintiff's mental condition that precludes summary judgment. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

Negligent Mismanagement Claim Improperly Dismissed for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction — Statute Not Limited to Personal Injury or Preempted by Federal Law: Winslow brought an action against his employer, Montana Rail Link, under 39-2-703 for mismanaging its investigation of his injury, alleging that the mismanagement lead to his dismissal from his job. The District Court held that 39-2-703 was intended to apply only to personal injuries caused by coworkers and that Winslow's cause of action under that section was preempted in any event by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act (WDEA). The Supreme Court held that the District Court's interpretation was overly restrictive because there was nothing in the language of 39-2-703 that prevented its application to the mismanagement of the investigation of Winslow's injuries. The Supreme Court also held that although a claim involving dismissal of an employee covered by a collective bargaining agreement (CBA), as Winslow was, could not be brought under the WDEA, Winslow's action was not brought to enforce his CBA, because his complaint made no mention of the CBA, but was brought under state law, giving an independent cause of action, and was therefore not preempted by the federal Railway Labor Act. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

No Claim for Wrongful Termination Apart From Either Contract or Wrongful Discharge Act: Solle claimed that her employer violated the common-law duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to renew her employment contract when she had a reasonable expectation that a renewal would be offered. Solle's employer moved to compel arbitration, the motion was granted, and Solle appealed. Under Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), claims for wrongful termination from tort or express or implied contract are no longer viable under Montana law. Rather, 39-2-913 explicitly preempts all common-law remedies but bars only tort and contract claims that are "for discharge". A threshold determination in cases alleging wrongful termination is whether the parties' relationship is governed by a written contract for a specific term or whether it falls under the provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which applies to noncontract situations. Solle's employment was covered by a written contract containing an arbitration clause, and her claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was inextricably intertwined with and based upon her termination from employment. Although breach of a contract is not a prerequisite to breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the covenant arises out of a contractual relationship between the parties, and a breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Solle's contract was silent as to whether there was an obligation on the employer's part to renew the contract or on Solle's part to accept a renewal offer, so Solle argued that the failure to include such a provision indicated the employer's intent not to cover a claim like this under the arbitration clause. The Supreme Court disagreed and proceeded to treat the dispute as arising out of the employment contract. Solle was not allowed to maintain a wrongful termination claim apart from either the contract or the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Solle's contract contained a provision that any unresolved dispute would be subject to arbitration, but the arbitration clause did not explicitly provide that it would govern issues concerning contract nonrenewal. Nevertheless, the contract governed Solle's employment, termination, and postemployment relationship and did not explicitly exclude disputes arising after contract termination. The presumption favors arbitrability, and the District Court did not err in holding that Solle's claim was subject to arbitration. Solle v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 MT 96, 299 M 237, 999 P2d 328, 57 St. Rep. 391 (2000). See also Nolde Bros., Inc. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union, 430 US 243, 51 L Ed 2d 300, 97 S Ct 1067 (1977).

Recovery Under Both Wrongful Discharge Act and Federal ADEA Barred: The Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act provides that it does not apply to a discharge subject to any other state or federal statute providing a remedy. A discharged bank employee could not recover under both the wrongful discharge act and the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Concurrent claims may be filed under the wrongful discharge act and under any other state or federal statutes, but if the plaintiff obtains an affirmative determination under the other statutes, the wrongful discharge claim no longer applies. The Supreme Court declined to follow two recent Montana federal District Court cases allowing concurrent actions based on separate and distinct factual predicates, and to the extent that this conclusion changes the holding in Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270 (1990), the opinion in that case is modified. In this case, the claims were made in the same action, and once it was determined that the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act was violated, the wrongful discharge act did not apply. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993), followed in Schultz v. Stillwater Min. Co., 277 M 154, 920 P2d 486, 53 St. Rep. 662 (1996).

Act Inapplicable to Term Contracts: The Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act is inapplicable to a written contract of employment for a specific term. As previously held in Leland v. Heywood, 197 M 491, 643 P2d 578 (1982), an employer has the discretion to not renew a specific term contract without a showing of good cause. Farris v. Hutchinson, 254 M 334, 838 P2d 374, 49 St. Rep. 717 (1992), distinguishing Portable Embryonics v. J.P. Genetics, 248 M 242, 810 P2d 1197 (1991).

Statutory Exemption Prematurely Applied — Proceedings Stayed Pending NLRB Action: Employees discharged for allegedly engaging in strike misconduct filed unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB), claiming the discharges were retaliatory measures based on union activities. The District Court found the wrongful discharge action was exempt under this section. As of the date of appeal, the NLRB had yet to file a complaint. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was premature in its ruling because no state or federal statute providing a procedure or remedy for contesting the dispute had yet taken effect exempting the dispute nor were the employees exempted by way of a collective bargaining agreement. To ensure the employees a forum, the cause was remanded to the District Court with proceedings stayed pending NLRB action. Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270, 47 St. Rep. 1902 (1990).

Claims Inextricably Intertwined With Termination Preempted by WDEA: A university professor who took a job with the understanding that the job would last up to 4 years sued when the position was terminated after 1 year. The professor alleged fraud and negligent representation. The District Court granted the defendants' summary judgment motion. The Supreme Court held that the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act does not bar all tort or contract claims arising in the employment context, but only those claims for damages caused by an asserted wrongful discharge. The professor would have no claim except for the termination, and therefore, the claims were inextricably intertwined with and based upon the termination and were preempted by the Act. Kulm v. Mont. St. Univ.-Bozeman, 285 M 328, 948 P2d 243, 54 St. Rep. 1175 (1997).

Claim for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Barred by Statute: Mysse sued Rosebud County for wrongful discharge and also alleged that her firing violated the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Supreme Court held that her claim for breach of the covenant was not distinct from her claim for wrongful discharge and therefore was barred by the Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which was the exclusive remedy in the present instance. Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996).

Independent Contract Claim for Failure to Abide by Representations as to Stock Options, Bonuses, Raises, and Advancement Not Barred: In this section's provision that "no claim for discharge may arise from tort or express or implied contract", "claim for discharge" does not encompass all claims that an employee may have against the employer. It only includes those claims for damages caused by wrongful discharge. The provision does not bar all tort or contract claims merely because they arise in the employment context; therefore, an employee who resigned could sue for the employer's alleged failure to abide by its representations as to stock options, bonuses, raises, and advancement opportunities. Beasley v. Semitool, Inc., 258 M 258, 853 P2d 84, 50 St. Rep. 522 (1993), followed in Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), and Kneeland v. When Actionable Cause for Termination Arises: On June 16, 1987, Martin was told her position was to be terminated as of July 17, 1987. After receiving notice, Martin discovered the position had not been eliminated but was to be filled by the company's new president's personal secretary from his former job. Martin filed suit alleging wrongful discharge, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence. On July 1, 1987, the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act became effective. The District Court held that the Act precluded Martin's claims for breach of the implied covenant and negligence because the claim had not fully accrued until the date of termination. On appeal, Martin conceded that the claim for negligence was properly dismissed in light of Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954 (1990), but disputed dismissal of the breach of covenant claim, contending that a cause of action begins at the time of breach, which in this case occurred upon receipt of the notice of termination, and that all decisions made leading to the discharge occurred prior to notification. The Supreme Court, citing Del. St. College v. Ricks, 449 US 250, 66 L Ed 2d 431, 101 S Ct 498 (1980), and Chardon v. Fernandez, 454 US 6, 70 L Ed 2d 6, 102 S Ct 28 (1981), agreed with Martin that the cause of action accrued upon notice of termination and held that it was the decision to terminate and the act thereupon that caused the end result. It was at that point that legal redress could first be sought. Martin v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 246 M 181, 803 P2d 1086, 47 St. Rep. 2319 (1990), followed in Walch v. Univ. of Mont., 260 M 496, 861 P2d 179, 50 St. Rep. 1186 (1993), distinguishing Allison v. Jumping Horse Ranch, Inc., 255 M 410, 843 P2d 753 (1992).

Governmental Immunity Not Affected by Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act: The Supreme Court held that a county board of health was an agent of the County Commissioners and therefore covered by state law creating governmental immunity. The court also held that there was no intent by the Legislature when it passed the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act to create remedies when earlier immunity statutes denied recovery. Burgess v. Lewis & Clark City-County Bd. of Health, 244 M 275, 796 P2d 1079, 47 St. Rep. 1619 (1990).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 442 at beginning of (1) substituted "A party may make a written offer to arbitrate" for "Under a written agreement of the parties" and at end, after "part", deleted "may be resolved by final and binding arbitration as provided in this section"; and deleted former (4) that read: "(4) A party who makes a valid offer to arbitrate that is not accepted by the other party and who prevails in an action under this part is entitled as an element of costs to reasonable attorney fees incurred subsequent to the date of the offer."

Case Notes

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhart's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhart was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhart accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhart appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited this section and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000).

Failure to Raise Issue of Arbitrator's Authority in Arbitration or District Court as Waiver of Right to Object to Arbitrator's Ruling on Appeal: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator determined that because the complaint alleged a motive for the discharge, it was intended to state a cause of action under ERISA (29 U.S.C. 1001, et seq.), requiring exclusive federal court jurisdiction, so arbitration was dismissed. By failing to raise the issue of whether the arbitrator lacked authority to decide that the issue was preempted by federal law, failing to contest the basis of the arbitrator's decision, and failing to object to the motion in District Court to confirm the arbitrator's award through a motion to vacate, Dahl waived the right to object to the ruling on appeal. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999). See also St. Farm v. Cabs, Inc., 751 P2d 61 (Colo. 1988).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction When Wrongful Discharge Claim Submitted to Arbitration — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator dismissed the arbitration on grounds that federal law applied. Dahl did not object to the District Court's confirmation of the arbitrator's decision but did move for leave to amend the complaint to remove the federal implications. However, the District Court lost jurisdiction when the parties agreed to arbitration, at which point the court had authority only to confirm, modify and confirm, or vacate and remand for hearing pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-314, but not the authority to allow Dahl to amend the complaint. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999).

Arbitration Improperly Remanded to Arbitrator for Reconsideration of Damages — Rationally Derived Arbitration Remedy to Be Upheld on Review: The District Court remanded a wrongful discharge case to the arbitrator for reconsideration of damages. The employee contended that the District Court could not enter judgment for the amended award because the case should not have been remanded and because the arbitrator did not have authority to amend the award. The employer contended that the arbitrator exceeded his powers when he made the first award and that the District Court properly gave the arbitrator authority to vacate portions of the first award pursuant to 27-5-312. However, the exceeding of power by an arbitrator is not one of the provisions in 27-5-217 pursuant to which an arbitrator may modify or correct an award. When the arbitrator granted the employer's motion to vacate portions of the original damage award, he exceeded his statutory authority. Further, the District Court was without authority to vacate or modify the award except for the statutory bases set forth in 27-5-312 and 27-5-313. If the remedy fashioned by the arbitrator is rationally derived from the arbitration agreement, it will be upheld. The Supreme Court remanded for judgment in the amount of the original arbitration award. Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

No Duty of Employer to Arbitrate After Failure of Employee to Comply With Grievance Policy: The District Court properly found that a community college had no obligation to arbitrate nonrenewal of a professor's teaching contract and that a claim for breach of an employment contract should be dismissed. The professor failed to comply with the college's grievance policy when he did not submit his grievance on the required form and did not seek the allowed further review when his letter of grievance was not answered by the college president, to whom it was submitted. Schaal v. Flathead Valley Community College, 272 M 443, 901 P2d 541, 52 St. Rep. 905 (1995).

Wrongful Discharge Arbitration Award — No Judicial Review on Merits: Plaintiffs, hired to manage a pawnshop, filed a wrongful discharge action, claiming that defendant unilaterally reduced salaries. The parties agreed to arbitrate the dispute, and plaintiffs were subsequently awarded damages for wrongful discharge. The District Court confirmed the award despite defendant's motion to vacate the award on the basis of evident partiality or manifest disregard of the law. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that judicial review of an arbitration award is strictly limited by statute and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to review the merits of the award. May v. First Nat'l Pawn Brokers, Ltd., 269 M 19, 887 P2d 185, 51 St. Rep. 1367 (1994), modified in Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234, 54 St. Rep. 1218 (1997), which adopted the manifest disregard of the law standard on arbitration appeals.

No Agreement — No Fees: In a case decided prior to the 1993 amendment to this section, the court determined that an award of attorney fees was improper because no agreement to arbitrate existed between the parties. Town Pump sent a written offer to arbitrate to Hoffman, who rejected the offer. Hoffman v. Town Pump, Inc., 255 M 415, 843 P2d 756, 49 St. Rep. 1044 (1992), followed in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Monetary Limit on Employment Dispute as Precluding Arbitration: A labor agreement, which contained a provision that any grievance involving a monetary issue in excess of $500 was subject to arbitration only if mutually agreed upon, was properly relied on by the District Court in excusing an employer from arbitrating a claim in excess of $500. Local 1334 v. Great Falls, 233 M 432, 760 P2d 99, 45 St. Rep. 1611 (1988).

Case Notes

Failure to Comply With Immediate Notice Requirements Precluding Consideration of Constitutional Issue on Appeal: Haider filed a wrongful discharge action against her former employer. During negotiations, Haider offered to submit the case to arbitration, but the employer refused to arbitrate. The matter went to a jury, which awarded Haider $44,995.26. After a subsequent evidentiary hearing, the District Court determined that Haider was the prevailing party and awarded her $15,000 in attorney fees pursuant to this section. The employer filed a notice of appeal seeking to challenge the constitutionality of this section and, nearly 3 months later, filed its notice of challenge to the constitutionality of the statute pursuant to Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). The employer failed to comply both with the immediate notice requirement of Rule 38 that was in effect in 1997 when the action arose, and with the contemporaneous notice requirement of the rule in effect since October 1, 1997. Because notice was not timely, the Supreme Court was precluded from reaching the constitutional challenge and dismissed the appeal with prejudice. Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000).

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. This section provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under Rule 6, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

WAGES AND WAGE PROTECTION

Chapter Case Notes

Employee Paid on Commission Basis Covered Under Wage Protection Act: By definition in 39-3-201, wages are any money due an employee from an employer, including earned commissions. Noting substantial amendment to state wage protection policy since McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1930), the Supreme Court held that the present underlying policy and provisions of Montana's wage protection statutes are sufficiently broad to cover employees who are paid on a commission basis and that an employer who fails to pay an earned commission is subject to 39-3-206, including a penalty based on the amount of wages due and unpaid. Allowance for Suspension Without Pay Contained in Policies Covered by Employment Manual — Suspension Proper: A doctor was suspended without pay by a health care facility for failing to sign outstanding warrants. The doctor contended that the suspension was improper because the employment contract allowed for suspension without pay only under specific circumstances, none of which were present in this case. However, the employment contract also contained a provision requiring the doctor to follow the facility policies and procedures, and that reference clearly incorporated the facility's employment manual into the employment contract. The employment contract was not inconsistent with the employment manual, nor was the disciplinary procedure used by the facility to suspend the doctor inconsistent with the employment contract. Thus, the District Court correctly held that the doctor was properly suspended without pay and that the suspension did not violate the employment contract. The doctor's claim for wages during the suspension also failed absent evidence of the hours worked and the ability to calculate the value of those hours. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Vacation Leave — Leave Collectible as Wages — Divestment of Leave by Employer's Condition Subsequent Held Unlawful — Board of Personnel Appeals Reversed: After Langager went to work for Crazy Creek Products (CCP), CCP distributed an employee handbook that Langager felt changed the terms of her oral contract regarding earning and using paid vacation days. Langager therefore filed an action against CCP to recover her wages earned but not paid for 2 weeks of vacation that she had taken. CCP argued that the vacation leave was not actually earned unless an employee complied with all of the conditions provided in its employee handbook. The new policy contained in the handbook required that Langager be present to work the day before and the day after using her paid vacation leave, which Langager was unable to do because she left employment with CCP and therefore did not return to work the day following her vacation. The Supreme Court held that the new policy contained in the handbook could be applied to Langager. Relying upon 23 A.G. Op. 151 (1949), and Morris v. C.C. Communications Corp., 175 M 23, 571 P2d 1163 (1977), the Supreme Court held that vacation leave that has been earned and is due and owing must be considered to be like wages that are due to an employee and is subject to the same statutes as wages. The Supreme Court said that Langager had fulfilled all of the conditions for the leave to be due and owing to her and that the legal question was therefore whether CCP could by a condition subsequent deny Langager vacation leave that was due and owed to her. Noting the inherent inconsistency of a policy under which an employee may not earn vacation leave until the vacation has come to an end, the Supreme Court held that Langager's leave could not be denied by a condition that would divest her of vacation leave that she had already accrued. In re Wage Claim of Langager v. Crazy Creek Products, Inc., 1998 MT 44, 287 M 445, 954 P2d 1169, 55 St. Rep. 169 (1998).

Option of Wage Claimant to Seek Administrative Remedies or File Directly in District Court: A wage claimant who desires to recover wages allegedly due may, pursuant to this part, either seek administrative remedies through the Department of Labor and Industry or file a claim directly in District Court to collect unpaid wages, statutory penalties, and attorney fees. Stanley v. Holms, 267 M 316, 883 P2d 837, 51 St. Rep. 1082 (1994). See also Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303 (1989).

Meaning of Provision for Bonus if "Competition" Is Beaten: A contract between television station and a news editor/reporter that provided for a bonus if the station led its competitors meant that the station had to lead both competitors in the city. No bonus was due when the station led one but not the other. Berry v. KRTV Communications, Inc., 262 M 415, 865 P2d 1104, 50 St. Rep. 1617 (1993).

Failure to File Written Request for Hearing on Wage Claims — Waiver of Right to Contest Amount: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a default judgment on a claim for unpaid wages when defendant employers failed to file a written request for an administrative hearing to explain the claims, thereby waiving their right to later contest the claim amounts. State ex rel. Vetch v. Hulman, 225 M 327, 732 P2d 843, 44 St. Rep. 275 (1987).

Procedural, Not Substantive, Provisions of Wage Payment Law Applicable to Minimum Wage Claims: Plaintiffs filed claims against their former employer, school district, for violation of Minimum Wage and Overtime Compensation Act (MWOCA), now codified in Title 39, ch. 3, part 4. Section 41-2306, R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-3-407), provided that MWOCA claims were to be enforced in accordance with the Montana Wage Payment Act (WPA), (now codified at Title 39, ch. 3, part 5). The District Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to payment of back wages from the school district. However, the court denied plaintiffs' claim for statutory penalty and attorney fees, ruling that the school district was not an "employer" within the meaning of WPA. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that WPA provisions are to be used only for the purpose of providing a mechanism for the enforcement of MWOCA, that the substantive provisions of WPA are not applicable to a MWOCA claim, and that the court should have used the broad definition of "employer" found in MWOCA to assess a penalty and attorney fees against the school district. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ruled that the plain meaning of the statute indicated that it was the Legislature's intent to incorporate the remedial portions of the WPA only and that the substantive provisions of the MWOCA, including its definition of "employer", applied in this case. Sink v. School District, 199 M 352, 649 P2d 1263, 39 St. Rep. 1448 (1982).

Breach of a Contract to Employ — Measure of Damages: Rhines entered into an employment contract with Como, but after Como moved his family from Minnesota to Missoula, Rhines refused to give him a job. In a suit brought for breach of the contract, the Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly applied Title 39, ch. 3, part 2, in awarding damages. That part requires an employee to perform work for an employer. Since Como never performed any work for Rhines, the correct measure of damages should be the amount provided for by 27-1-311. Como v. Rhines, 198 M 279, 645 P2d 948, 39 St. Rep. 932 (1982).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 deleted definition of board that read: ""Board" means the board of personnel appeals provided for in 2-15-1705"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 479 in definition of wages, in (a) after "gratuities", substituted "that are covered by section 3402(k) and service charges that are covered by section 3401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended and applicable on January 1, 1983, received by employees for services rendered by them to patrons of premises or businesses licensed to provide food, beverage, or lodging" for "of any kind" and inserted (b) defining service charge; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 1995.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 479, L. 1995, provided that this act applies to contracts entered into on or after April 15, 1995.

1989 Amendment: Inserted definitions of Board and Department; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 554, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to all wage claims filed with the department after July 1, 1989."

Failure to Raise Statute of Limitations Defense in Original Pleadings — Defense Waived: A doctor filed wage claims against a health care facility in 1999 as a counterclaim against the facility's claim against the doctor for failing to sign outstanding warrants in 1997. The facility then claimed that the doctor was time-barred for failing to raise the wage claim within the statute of limitations in 39-3-207. The District Court concurred and held that the doctor's claim was not timely filed. On appeal, the doctor asserted that the facility could not first raise the statute of limitations defense in its posttrial memorandum because a statute of limitations defense is an affirmative defense that must be raised in the original pleadings. The Supreme Court agreed. The facility failed to raise the issue in its original pleadings and was thus barred from raising the defense on appeal. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Employee Paid on Commission Basis Covered Under Wage Protection Act: By definition in this section, wages are any money due an employee from an employer, including earned commissions. Noting substantial amendment to state wage protection policy since McBride v. Shareholders, Owners, and Directors With Proprietary Interest — Considered Employees for Wage Collection Purposes: Two persons who were shareholders, owners, and directors of a professional corporation, which was a separate legal entity, and who entered into employment contracts that specifically provided that their relationship with the corporation was that of employer and employee were correctly determined to be employees for the purpose of collection of wages under Montana wage payment law. Hoven, Vervick, & Amrine, P.C. v. Comm'r of Labor, 237 M 525, 774 P2d 995, 46 St. Rep. 1024 (1989).

"Work" and "Employment" Defined: The definition of "employ" in this section is identical to that in the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The Montana Supreme Court adopted for purposes of this section the interpretation given by the United State Supreme Court to the FLSA, holding that "work" or "employment" means physical or mental exertion controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Reimbursement of Expenses Not Payment of "Wages" — Penalty for Failure to Pay Wages Inapplicable: In an action by the plaintiff to recover payment of expenses due to the plaintiff under an oral contract providing for reimbursement of his actual expenses, the trial court did not err in holding the penalty for unpaid wages inapplicable to the plaintiff's claim. The reimbursement to the plaintiff of actual expenses is not a "wage", as defined by this section, but an "indemnification of employee", referred to in 39-2-701. There is no statutory penalty for the failure of an employer to indemnify an employee for expenditures covered by that section. Johnston v. K & T Mfg., Inc., 191 M 458, 625 P2d 66, 38 St. Rep. 392 (1981).

Bonus: Yearly bonus of percentage of gross income of veterinary clinic was part of the wages of a veterinary employee. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

Schoolteachers: The Legislature in enacting this section did not intend that the act (Title 39, ch. 3, part 2) should apply to a school district as employer and a teacher as employee receiving a fixed compensation, and therefore the court properly struck out of the complaint of a teacher in her action for breach of contract an allegation that plaintiff was entitled to the 5% penalty. McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1930). See also Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), in which it was held that the underlying policy and provisions of Montana's wage protection statutes are sufficiently broad to cover employees who are paid on a commission basis.

Thus, the District Court correctly held that the doctor was properly suspended without pay and that the suspension did not violate the employment contract. The doctor's claim for wages during the suspension also failed absent evidence of the hours worked and the ability to calculate the value of those hours. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Deduction of Cost of Educational Workshop and Supplies From Wages Affirmed: A doctor who was employed by a health care facility attended an educational workshop, and the facility subsequently deducted $200 of the cost of the workshop and supplies from the doctor's compensation, which the doctor maintained was error. The District Court determined that the deduction was proper, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court was in the better position to observe the witnesses and judge their credibility, and the Supreme Court declined to second guess the decision. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Failure to Provide Sufficient Evidence That Employee Not Fully Compensated: A doctor claimed that a health care facility did not pay full compensation owing under an employment contract, that monthly income was miscalculated, and that a cost of living increase was not included in the base salary. As evidence of underpayment, the doctor provided payment stubs representing a portion of the monthly compensation. However, the District Court held that the doctor presented incomplete evidence by which to determine whether the doctor was underpaid in terms of the total monthly compensation package. The Supreme Court agreed. The compensation provisions were intentionally flexible for tax purposes and designed to benefit the doctor by withholding certain claims from paychecks. The doctor presented no evidence as to the appropriate or required monthly level of compensation, accounting for Social Security, workers' compensation or other withholding, or the favorable tax benefits that would adequately demonstrate whether the health care facility provided adequate compensation. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Corporation Not to Retroactively Take Back Wage Obligations: Once a corporation obligated itself to pay annual wages, it could not retroactively, by action of a different board of directors, take back what had become the obligation of the corporation. Hoven, Vervick, & Amrine, P.C. v. Comm'r of Labor, 237 M 525, 774 P2d 995, 46 St. Rep. 1024 (1989).

Statutory Wage Protection Inapplicable to Future Wages: Plaintiff alleged wrongful termination of employment and sought compensation for wages he would have collected had he not been discharged. The District Court properly granted partial summary judgment on plaintiff's wage claim after holding that the lost wages did not constitute "wages" within the meaning of the wage statutes. The protection granted under the statutes applies to labor or services actually performed or completed, as distinguished from labor or services to be performed in the future. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Wage Protection Act Not Applicable: Plaintiff university professor's summer appointments were consideration supporting his early retirement contract. He was not expected to perform any services other than those normally required of a tenured professor nor did he perform any services. As he performed no labor during the summer appointments, this section does not apply. His employment contract is not covered by the Montana Wage Protection Act. Julian v. Mont. St. Univ., 229 M 362, 747 P2d 196, 44 St. Rep. 2046 (1987).

Percentage of Wages Withheld at Employee's Request — Acceptable Practice: Neither this section nor public policy prohibits an employee from voluntarily requesting that a certain percentage of his wages be set aside for payment at a later date. Christiansen v. Taylor Bros., Inc., 225 M 318, 732 P2d 841, 44 St. Rep. 268 (1987).

Employment Contract — Interpretation — Deduction of Payments Under Previous Contract: Appellant's contract of employment with Ollie May Vestal was terminated by her death. After her death he entered into a new employment contract with the personal representative of her estate.

Payments made under the original contract may not be deducted from payments due under the second contract of employment even if payments made under the original contract were greater than the stated amount. Heintz v. Vestal, 185 M 232, 605 P2d 606, 37 St. Rep. 99 (1980).

Professional Employee:

Although veterinarian who worked in a clinic was a professional person, he was an employee within the meaning of this act. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

The professional employee exclusion of this act applies only to the requirement of bimonthly payment of wages, and not to parts of the act pertaining to the penalty and attorney fee provisions. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

"Labor": One who acted as watchman, messenger, and general repairman, performed "labor" within the meaning of this section, requiring physical exertion rather than mental, and therefore was entitled to maintain an action to recover wages. Britt v. Cotter Butte Mines, 108 M 174, 91 P2d 403 (1939).

Pleadings: Where pleadings did not show nature of labor performed by plaintiff suing for wages, and for the first time in the record the nature of the services as coming within this section appeared in the memorandum of costs, and later in the bill of exceptions to the court's ruling on costs, this constituted a prima facie showing and was sufficient until overturned. Swanson v. Gnose, 106 M 262, 76 P2d 643 (1938).

Schoolteacher: A schoolteacher is not a laborer within the meaning of this section. McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1930).

Attorney General's Opinions

Montana Law Not Applicable to Workers Covered by Fair Labor Standards Act: State and local government employees who are covered by the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) are not subject to the provisions of the Montana minimum wages and maximum hours law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) and therefore may reach agreement with their employers to receive compensatory time in lieu of cash overtime in accordance with FLSA amendments in 1985. 41 A.G. Op. 58 (1986).

Unlawful Deductions From Wages: An employer cannot withhold his employee's wages and apply them toward damages caused by employee negligence, unauthorized mileage, costs of retrieving abandoned property, and liability insurance; notwithstanding the fact that the employee contractually agreed to deduction. 36 A.G. Op. 17 (1975).

Case Notes

Family Member Exclusion Inapplicable to Claim for Unpaid Back Wages — One Hundred Ten Percent Penalty Applied — Attorney Fees and Costs Properly Awarded: Greta worked for her husband's broadcasting company as a traffic system manager, initially working without hourly wages or a salary. About 10 months after her employment began, her husband offered Greta a monthly salary and agreed that Greta should be paid retroactively to the first day on which she started working, preparing a memorandum of understanding to that effect. The M.O.U. also provided that Greta be repaid for the 10-month period according to a mutually agreeable schedule. Greta continued to work several months at salary, but the marriage began to dissolve, and she left her position without receiving any back wages. The company eventually made some payments, but Greta ultimately sued for unpaid wages plus penalties under the wage protection statutes. The District Court granted Greta summary judgment on the issue of whether unpaid wages were owed and, after trial, ordered the company to pay Greta the amount still owing. However, the court declined to award the maximum 110% penalty, establishing a 55% penalty instead and awarding Greta her attorney fees and costs. Both parties appealed. The company claimed that the penalty and fees should not have been awarded because, as a family member, Greta's employment relationship was excluded under 39-3-406. However, that exception applies to the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the employment relationship, not to the failure to timely pay wages, which is governed by this section. Once Greta became a salaried employee, she was entitled to the rights and remedies afforded to all employees under state law. Therefore, the District Court properly determined that back wages were owing. However, under ARM 24.16.7551, an employer who pays some or all of a contested wage may be relieved in whole or in part of paying a penalty, unless the employer has previously violated similar wage and hour statutes within 3 years prior to the date of the filing of the wage claim. The District Court erred in not taking judicial notice of the administrative rule. Because the company had been the subject of at least three prior wage claims by other employees, the special circumstances of the rule applied, so the 110% penalty, as a matter of law, applied to the back wages owed to Greta at the time of her separation from employment. Thus, the Supreme Court vacated the 55% award and directed a 110% award from that date. Further, the District Court's award of attorney fees and costs was based on substantial evidence and was proper under 39-3-214, including Greta's attorney fees incurred on appeal. Reier Broadcasting Co. v. Reier, 2000 MT 120, 299 M 463, 1 P3d 940, 57 St. Rep. 504 (2000).

Employee Paid on Commission Basis Covered Under Wage Protection Act: By definition in 39-3-201, wages are any money due an employee from an employer, including earned commissions. Noting substantial amendment to state wage protection policy since McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1930), the Supreme Court held that the present underlying policy and provisions of Montana's wage protection statutes are sufficiently broad to cover employees who are paid on a commission basis and that an employer who fails to pay an earned commission is subject to 39-3-206, including a penalty based on the amount of wages due and unpaid. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), following Como v. Rhines, 198 M 279, 645 P2d 948 (1982).

Payment of Commissions Owed on Last Day of Employment and Not Paid Within Three Days After Termination: Delaware was entitled to commissions when a project was completed and the employer received payment for the work; however, some commissions became due after Delaware's last day of employment. This section provides a rule regarding payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but does not provide a rule regarding wages that become due after the last day of employment. The employer could thus be penalized for violating this section for commissions due on the last day of employment that were not paid withion 3 days of termination, but could not be penalized pursuant to 39-3-206 or this section for commissions that became due after separation from employment. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), clarifying Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1 (1994).

Proposed Instruction on Preparation of Employment Termination Check Properly Rejected: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in rejecting the appellant's proposed instruction setting out for the jury the fact that state law required an employee to be paid immediately upon separation. The Supreme Court disagreed on the basis that the plaintiff had argued that the check had been made out before his meeting with management, demonstrating that the decision to fire him had been made prior to any hearing. The Supreme Court held that the instruction would mislead and confuse the jury and that each side had the opportunity during trial to argue the significance of the check being made out prior to the hearing. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 134 in (1), near end, increased penalty from 100% to 110% of wages due and unpaid; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The employer shall also pay the employee annualized interest on the unpaid wages from the date the wages were due. The interest must be calculated by the department and compounded annually, but the annualized rate may not be less than 2 percentage points a year above the prime rate of major New York banks on the date of settlement"; in (2), after "wages due", deleted "including interest"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (1), in second sentence after "employer", substituted "to the employee in an amount not to exceed 100%" for "and become due such employee as follows: a sum equivalent to the fixed amount of 5%" and after "unpaid" deleted "shall be assessed for each day, except Sundays and legal holidays, upon which such failure continues after the day upon which such wages were due, except that such failure shall not be deemed to continue more than 20 days after the date such wages were due"; inserted (2) requiring payment of annualized interest; inserted (3) clarifying that payment of full amount of wages, plus interest, is required when a violation occurs; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 8, Ch. 490, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to all wage claims filed with the department of labor and industry on or after July 1, 1991."

Failure to Raise Statute of Limitations Defense in Original Pleadings — Defense Waived: A doctor filed wage claims against a health care facility in 1999 as a counterclaim against the facility's claim against the doctor for failing to sign outstanding warrants in 1997. The facility then claimed that the doctor was time-barred for failing to raise the wage claim within the statute of limitations in 39-3-207. The District Court concurred and held that the doctor's claim was not timely filed. On appeal, the doctor asserted that the facility could not first raise the statute of limitations defense in its posttrial memorandum because a statute of limitations defense is an affirmative defense that must be raised in the original pleadings. The Supreme Court agreed. The facility failed to raise the issue in its original pleadings and was thus barred from raising the defense on appeal. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Option of Wage Claimant to Seek Administrative Remedies or File Directly in District Court: A wage claimant who desires to recover wages allegedly due may, pursuant to Title 39, ch. 3, part 2, either seek administrative remedies through the Department of Labor and Industry or file a claim directly in District Court to collect unpaid wages, statutory penalties, and attorney fees. Stanley v. Holms, 267 M 316, 883 P2d 837, 51 St. Rep. 1082 (1994). See also Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303 (1989).

Penalties Accruing for Wage Law Violation: Employees who file wage claims within the 18-month period described in 39-3-207 are entitled to receive penalties not to exceed 100% (prior to 1993 amendment of this section) of unpaid wages for a period of 5 years prior to the filing of the complaint plus annualized interest on the unpaid wages. Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), applied, as to claims for payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but not wages that become due after the last day of employment, in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Failure to Pay Wage Rates Prescribed in Contract — Employer Liable for Penalties: Contractors appealed from a District Court order, arguing that because wage rates were not adopted in compliance with administrative procedures, inclusion constituted an illegal provision in the contract with which contractors were not required to comply. The Supreme Court held that contractors were legally bound to pay the wage rates agreed to by all parties and contained in a voluntarily executed contract. Lix v. Kenney, 246 M 426, 804 P2d 391, 48 St. Rep. 23 (1991).

Penalties, Fees, and Costs Improper Where Wage Statutes Inapplicable: Plaintiff found to have no claim to future lost wages under the wage statutes was also not eligible for award of penalties, fees, and costs pursuant to 39-3-214 or this section. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Statutory Wage Protection Inapplicable to Future Wages: Plaintiff alleged wrongful termination of employment and sought compensation for wages he would have collected had he not been discharged. The District Court properly granted partial summary judgment on plaintiff's wage claim after holding that the lost wages did not constitute "wages" within the meaning of the wage statutes. The protection granted under the statutes applies to labor or services actually performed or completed, as distinguished from labor or services to be performed in the future. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Deputy Sheriffs' Retroactive Overtime — Conflict of Laws: Since deputies' award of retroactive overtime compensation was grounded in federal rather than state law, the state laws relating to penalties, interest, attorney fees, and costs did not apply. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Public Works Project — No Prevailing Wage Provision — Penalties Upheld: The trial court, having found a new building lease to be a sales contract, and thus a public works contract, properly imposed penalties for the city's failure to include a prevailing wage rate provision in the public works contract. This section provides that if an employer on a public works project is delinquent, his obligation to pay prevailing wages includes a civil penalty. Section 18-2-403 provides that if a provision for the payment of the prevailing wage rate is not included by the public contracting body in the contract with the contractor, then the obligation to pay the prevailing wage is on the public contracting agency. While 18-2-403 is silent as to shifting penalties, the Supreme Court found that an interpretation of 18-2-403 allowing civil penalties against the contracting agency accords with the underlying purpose of 18-2-403 to serve as a deterrent. Hunter v. Bozeman, 216 M 251, 700 P2d 184, 42 St. Rep. 784 (1985).

Breach of a Contract to Employ — Measure of Damages: Rhines entered into an employment contract with Como, but after Como moved his family from Minnesota to Missoula, Rhines refused to give him a job. In a suit brought for breach of the contract, the Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly applied Title 39, ch. 3, part 2, in awarding damages. That part requires an employee to perform work for an employer. Since Como never performed any work for Rhines, the correct measure of damages should be the amount provided for by 27-1-311. Como v. Rhines, 198 M 279, 645 P2d 948, 39 St. Rep. 932 (1982).

County Not Exempt From Penalty: There is no law exempting the county employer from having to pay a penalty for failure to pay overtime. This section makes no exceptions for failure to pay wages, and the Supreme Court will not create an exception by holding either that the employer was acting in good faith or that the employee had not properly followed the procedure for processing a claim against the employer. Rosebud County v. Roan, 192 M 252, 627 P2d 1222, 38 St. Rep. 639 (1981).

Reimbursement of Expenses Not Payment of "Wages" — Penalty for Failure to Pay Wages Inapplicable: In an action by the plaintiff to recover payment of expenses due to the plaintiff under an oral contract providing for reimbursement of his actual expenses, the trial court did not err in holding the penalty for unpaid wages inapplicable to the plaintiff's claim. The reimbursement to the plaintiff of actual expenses is not a "wage", as defined by 39-3-201, but an "indemnification of employee", referred to in 39-2-701. There is no statutory penalty for the failure of an employer to indemnify an employee for expenditures covered by that section. Johnston v. K & T Mfg., Inc., 191 M 458, 625 P2d 66, 38 St. Rep. 392 (1981).

Compromise of Penalty — Presumption in Favor of Agency Action: Where the appellant filed a wage claim with the respondent and, after a hearing on his claim and voluntary payment by the employer of a portion of the back wages, was awarded the remainder of the back wages plus a penalty assessed on those back wages not voluntarily paid, the court did not err in dismissing the appellant's petition for judicial review of the amount of penalty assessed. Under 39-3-211 and the wage claim form filed by the appellant, the respondent has the authority to compromise any claim for the purpose of avoiding lengthy litigation, which the respondent did because a portion of the wage claim was voluntarily paid. A rebuttable presumption exists that the order of the respondent is correct and the appellant submitted no evidence to overcome the presumption. Thornton v. Comm'r of Dept. of Labor & Industry, 190 M 442, 621 P2d 1062, 37 St. Rep. 2026 (1980).

Complaint Filed Within Eighteen Months After Accrual of Action: Penalties are properly awarded where the complaint is filed within 18 months following the accrual of the action. The court rejects the defendant's argument that the 18-month period must be computed from the filing of the complaint and any claimed penalty for wages owing prior to the filing is lost. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Professional Employee: Veterinarian who was employed in a clinic was entitled to the statutory penalty for nonpayment of his bonus, since the exclusion of professional employees applies only to the requirement of bimonthly payment of wages. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

Instructions to Jury: An instruction relative to the penalties accruing to employees by reason of the failure of their employer to pay semimonthly wages when due, in the language of this section and 39-3-204, was properly given in an action to recover wages. Meister v. Farrow, 109 M 1, 92 P2d 753 (1939).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 in (1) inserted reference to wages and at end after "39-3-206" substituted "by filing a complaint within 180 days of default or delay in the payment of wages" for "which have accrued to him at any time within 18 months succeeding such default or delay in the payment of such wages"; inserted (2) establishing 2-year time period; inserted (3) establishing 3-year time period; and made minor changes in style. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 30, Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies to claims accruing on or after April 23, 1999.

Case Notes

Failure to Raise Statute of Limitations Defense in Original Pleadings — Defense Waived: A doctor filed wage claims against a health care facility in 1999 as a counterclaim against the facility's claim against the doctor for failing to sign outstanding warrants in 1997. The facility then claimed that the doctor was time-barred for failing to raise the wage claim within the statute of limitations in this section. The District Court concurred and held that the doctor's claim was not timely filed. On appeal, the doctor asserted that the facility could not first raise the statute of limitations defense in its posttrial memorandum because a statute of limitations defense is an affirmative defense that must be raised in the original pleadings. The Supreme Court agreed. The facility failed to raise the issue in its original pleadings and was thus barred from raising the defense on appeal. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Payment of Commissions Owed on Last Day of Employment and Not Paid Within Three Days After Termination: Delaware was entitled to commissions when a project was completed and the employer received payment for the work; however, some commissions became due after Delaware's last day of employment. Section 39-3-205 provides a rule regarding payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but does not provide a rule regarding wages that become due after the last day of employment. The employer could thus be penalized for violating 39-3-205 for commissions due on the last day of employment that were not paid withion 3 days of termination, but could not be penalized pursuant to 39-3-205 or 39-3-206 for commissions that became due after separation from employment. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), clarifying Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1 (1994).

Penalties Accruing for Wage Law Violation: Employees who file wage claims within the 18-month period (see 1999 amendment) described in this section are entitled to receive penalties not to exceed 100% (prior to 1993 amendment of 39-3-206) of unpaid wages for a period of 5 years prior to the filing of the complaint plus annualized interest on the unpaid wages. Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), applied, as to claims for payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but not wages that become due after the last day of employment, in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Statute of Limitations in Minimum Wage Dispute — Tolling When: In a case relating to wage claims assigned to the Department of Labor and Industry, the Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in holding that a 5-year Statute of Limitations governs a minimum wage dispute. (See 1999 amendment.) However, the finding that the Statute of Limitations was not tolled by the administrative actions of the Department was held incorrect. Intermountain Deaconess Home v. St., 191 M 309, 623 P2d 1384, 38 St. Rep. 272 (1981), following Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Administrative Action — Tolls Running of Limitation: In the administrative enforcement of the minimum hours and wages law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) when the Department of Labor and Industry acts on its own initiative, the letter by the Department to the employer informing him that various employees were owed additional wages is the equivalent of filing a civil complaint under Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206 (1979), and thus at that time the 18-month limitation tolled for determining the status of penalties. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Time Limit for Commencing Enforcement: This section does not prohibit a penalty for wages that became due and unpaid more than 18 months prior to the start of the action to collect the penalty; rather, it allows for the collection of penalties, continually assessed under 39-3-206, if the action is commenced within 18 months following the accrual of the action under 39-3-205. (See 1999 amendment.) St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Complaint Filed Within Eighteen Months After Accrual of Action: Penalties are properly awarded where the complaint is filed within 18 months following the accrual of the action. (See 1999 amendment.) The court rejects the defendant's argument that the 18-month period must be computed from the filing of the complaint and any claimed penalty for wages owing prior to the filing is lost. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 134 near beginning, after "between", substituted "an employer and an employee" for "any person, partnership, or corporation and any party in his or its employ" and in two places, after "penalty", deleted "and interest"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In two places, after "penalty", inserted "and interest" and near end deleted reference to 5% penalty; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 8, Ch. 490, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to all wage claims filed with the department of labor and industry on or after July 1, 1991."

Option of Wage Claimant to Seek Administrative Remedies or File Directly in District Court: A wage claimant who desires to recover wages allegedly due may, pursuant to Title 39, ch. 3, part 2, either seek administrative remedies through the Department of Labor and Industry or file a claim directly in District Court to collect unpaid wages, statutory penalties, and attorney fees. Stanley v. Holms, 267 M 316, 883 P2d 837, 51 St. Rep. 1082 (1994). See also Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303 (1989).

Employment Contract Prior to 1975: This section cannot be applied as a remedy for an employment contract denying overtime compensation that was executed prior to 1975, because until that year the state was specifically excluded from the class of employers covered by the payment of wages law. Additionally, the 6-month limit to apply this remedy, then applicable, was not adhered to. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150, 37 St. Rep. 236 (1980).

Remedies Cumulative: On the question of whether plaintiffs who were denied overtime compensation under 39-3-405 must seek relief exclusively from the Commissioner of Labor under this chapter, the Supreme Court held that the clear and unambiguous language of 39-3-408 provides for cumulative remedies. Therefore, resort to the Commissioner of Labor was not plaintiffs' exclusive option. The court reversed a dismissal that was based on plaintiffs' failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303, 46 St. Rep. 1389 (1989).

Designation of Hearing Officer's Order as Final: The Commissioner of Labor and Industry is charged with the responsibility of investigating wage claims and holding hearings under Montana wage payment law, and under 2-15-112, the Commissioner may delegate these functions to a subordinate employee. Therefore, statute and Department rule clearly allow the decision of an appointed hearing examiner to be a final order. Hoven, Vervick, & Amrine, P.C. v. Comm'r of Labor, 237 M 525, 774 P2d 995, 46 St. Rep. 1024 (1989).

Scope of Review of Administrative Decision — Wage Claim: Chagnon brought a wage claim against the Hardy Construction Company before the Department of Labor and Industry. A hearing was held, after which the Department dismissed the claim. On judicial review, the District Court reversed the Department and awarded wages, penalties, costs, and attorney fees. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was sufficient evidence before the hearings officer to support his dismissal of the claim. The District Court committed error in reversing the Department order. The District Court cannot properly substitute its own judgment for that of the agency. Chagnon v. Hardy Constr. Co., 208 M 420, 680 P2d 932, 41 St. Rep. 441 (1984).

Claim for Overtime — Jurisdiction of Department of Labor and Industry: The Department of Labor and Industry had jurisdiction to hold a hearing and make a ruling on a heavy equipment operator's claim against his employer for overtime wages because: (1) it has a duty under 39-1-102 to enforce state wage laws affecting Montana citizens; (2) under 39-3-209, it must investigate alleged violations of such laws and institute actions for unpaid wages; (3) it may take assignments of wage claims in trust and maintain any proceeding to enforce the claims; (4) it may enforce the federal Fair Labor Standards Act and institute an action on behalf of an employee to recover overtime wages due and unpaid under that Act; and (5) traditional notions of jurisdiction gave the department jurisdiction, as employer and employee were Montana residents, employer's principal place of business was in Montana, the employment contract was entered into in Montana, and part of the work was performed here. To rule that since part of the work was performed in North Dakota there was no jurisdiction in the department would unduly burden the parties, would lead to an oppressive requirement that they litigate in each state a claim for wages allegedly due for work performed there, and would fractionalize employee's claim to the extent that its pursuit would not be worthwhile. Hoehne v. Sherrodd, Inc., 205 M 365, 668 P2d 232, 40 St. Rep. 1363 (1983).

Department of Labor Not Limited to Investigation — "State" Claims No Justification for Restraining Order: The Supreme Court held incorrect the District Court's finding that the Department of Labor and Industry had only investigatory wage enforcement powers. The alleged but unproven hours incurred by an employer's having to defend "state" wage claims did not alone threaten the employer's rights sufficiently to justify court-ordered restraint of the Department. Further, the Department is required not only to inquire diligently into the validity of wage claims but to determine their validity in a hearing. Intermountain Deaconess Home v. St., 191 M 309, 623 P2d 1384, 38 St. Rep. 272 (1981).

Wage Claim Action — Department Power to Initiate: The Department of Labor and Industry has the authority to bring an action for violation of the Montana minimum wage and overtime compensation law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) even though no complaint was filed by any of the defendant's wage earners, such a complaint being unnecessary under this section as provided by 39-3-407. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Compromise of Penalty — Presumption in Favor of Agency Action: Where the appellant filed a wage claim with the respondent and, after a hearing on his claim and voluntary payment by the employer of a portion of the back wages, was awarded the remainder of the back wages plus a penalty assessed on those back wages not voluntarily paid, the court did not err in dismissing the appellant's petition for judicial review of the amount of penalty assessed. Under this section and the wage claim form filed by the appellant, the respondent has the authority to compromise any claim for the purpose of avoiding lengthy litigation, which the respondent did because a portion of the wage claim was voluntarily paid. A rebuttable presumption exists that the order of the respondent is correct and the appellant submitted no evidence to overcome the presumption. Thornton v. Comm'r of Dept. of Labor & Industry, 190 M 442, 621 P2d 1062, 37 St. Rep. 2026 (1980).

State Enforcement of FLSA Claim: The Montana Department of Labor is not precluded by 39-3-408 or the Fair Labor Standards Act from seeking enforcement of the FLSA claim of an employee working in Montana, but rather is authorized by 39-3-202, this section, 29 C.F.R. 515.8, and FLSA to do so. St. v. Holman Aviation Co., 176 M 31, 575 P2d 923 (1978).

Refusal to Hold Hearing: Commissioner of Labor did not have discretion to ignore wage claim or reject it without a hearing and without making a proper determination. Burgess v. Softich, 167 M 70, 535 P2d 178 (1975).

Compromise Not a Defense: Employer may not compromise minimum wage claims with employees and then establish that compromise as a defense to proceedings seeking enforcement of minimum wage laws. Failure of Commissioner of Labor to obtain assignments of wage claims from all employees was not fatal to his authority to act on their behalf, and nonassigned claims could not be settled by employees themselves. 1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 in first sentence of (1) after "officer" deleted "if the decision is not appealed to the board, or a decision of the board"; in (2) after "decision of the" substituted "department or the hearings officer" for "board"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

1989 Amendment: Substituted first sentence relating to enforcement by application for a court order for former language that read: "A determination by the commissioner of labor and industry made after a hearing as provided for in parts 2 and 4 of this chapter may be enforced by application by the commissioner to a district court for an order or judgment enforcing the determination if the time provided to initiate judicial review by the employer has passed"; and at end substituted "administrative decision" for "commissioner's determination". Attorney Fees for Administrative Hearing Properly Denied: Where the appellant filed a wage claim with the respondent for wages due to the appellant and after a hearing was awarded back wages due plus a penalty, the court did not err in denying the appellant's prayer for attorney fees. Section 39-3-214, when read in conjunction with this section, makes clear that attorney fees must be awarded to a claimant only if he must bring a "suit at law" to collect his wages and obtains a "judgment" for that purpose. In this case, no suit was brought and no judgment was obtained. However, attorney fees for appeal to the Supreme Court were awarded. Thornton v. Case Notes

Failure to Prevail in Wage Claim — Attorney Fees Not Payable: Neither a doctor nor a health care facility was wholly successful in their claims and counterclaims in a wage dispute. Thus, the doctor could not be considered the prevailing party and was not entitled to attorney fees as a successful wage claimant under this section. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Family Member Exclusion Inapplicable to Claim for Unpaid Back Wages — One Hundred Ten Percent Penalty Applied — Attorney Fees and Costs Properly Awarded: Greta worked for her husband's broadcasting company as a traffic system manager, initially working without hourly wages or a salary. About 10 months after her employment began, her husband offered Greta a monthly salary and agreed that Greta should be paid retroactively to the first day on which she started working, preparing a memorandum of understanding to that effect. The M.O.U. also provided that Greta be repaid for the 10-month period according to a mutually agreeable schedule. Greta continued to work several months at salary, but the marriage began to dissolve, and she left her position without receiving any back wages. The company eventually made some payments, but Greta ultimately sued for unpaid wages plus penalties under the wage protection statutes. The District Court granted Greta summary judgment on the issue of whether unpaid wages were owed and, after trial, ordered the company to pay Greta the amount still owing. However, the court declined to award the maximum 110% penalty, establishing a 55% penalty instead and awarding Greta her attorney fees and costs. Both parties appealed. The company claimed that the penalty and fees should not have been awarded because, as a family member, Greta's employment relationship was excluded under 39-3-406. However, that exception applies to the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the employment relationship, not to the failure to timely pay wages, which is governed by 39-3-205. Once Greta became a salaried employee, she was entitled to the rights and remedies afforded to all employees under state law. Therefore, the District Court properly determined that back wages were owing. However, under ARM 24.16.7551, an employer who pays some or all of a contested wage may be relieved in whole or in part of paying a penalty, unless the employer has previously violated similar wage and hour statutes within 3 years prior to the date of the filing of the wage claim. The District Court erred in not taking judicial notice of the administrative rule. Because the company had been the subject of at least three prior wage claims by other employees, the special circumstances of the rule applied, so the 110% penalty, as a matter of law, applied to the back wages owed to Greta at the time of her separation from employment. Thus, the Supreme Court vacated the 55% award and directed a 110% award from that date.

Further, the District Court's award of attorney fees and costs was based on substantial evidence and was proper under this section, including Greta's attorney fees incurred on appeal. Reier Broadcasting Co. v. Reier, 2000 MT 120, 299 M 463, 1 P3d 940, 57 St. Rep. 504 (2000).

Attorney Fees in Wage Protection Case Treated as Costs — Filing of Memorandum of Costs Subject to Statutory Time Limit: A party in a wage protection case seeking attorney fees pursuant to this section must comply with statutes governing the taxing of costs, including 25-10-501, which requires that a memorandum of costs be filed within 5 days after the return of a jury verdict. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), distinguishing Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919 (1985).

Verdict Less Than Offer of Judgment Not Rationale for Claim as Successful Party — Attorney Fees Denied: Defendant claimed that the award of attorney fees to plaintiff was in error because plaintiff could not be considered the successful party because the jury's verdict did not exceed defendant's offer of judgment and that if plaintiff could thus not be considered the successful party, defendant must be considered so and attorney fees properly awarded to defendant. An offer of judgment in an amount greater than the jury's verdict is a factor that the trial court should consider when determining which party is the successful or prevailing party for the purpose of awarding attorney fees. However, in the present case, it was unclear from the record whether defendant offered to have judgment taken against it on plaintiff's unpaid wage claim or wrongful discharge claim. Because the offer of judgment was ambiguous, it was immaterial to determining which party prevailed in the trial, and the trial court did not err in denying defendant's request for attorney fees. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

One-Third Contingent-Fee Agreement — Award as Reasonable Attorney Fees: The plaintiffs sought attorney fees pursuant to a contingent-fee agreement. The Supreme Court held that an award equal to the amount of fees due under a contingent-fee agreement could be assessed as reasonable attorney fees after considering the following factors: (1) the novelty and difficulty of the legal and factual issues involved; (2) the time and labor required to perform the legal service properly; (3) the character and importance of the litigation; (4) the result secured by the attorney; (5) the experience, skill, and reputation of the attorney; (6) the fees customarily charged for similar legal services at the time and place where the services were rendered; (7) the ability of the client to pay for the legal services rendered; and (8) the risk of no recovery. In the case before it, the court held that an award equal to the full amount paid under the contingent-fee agreement would constitute reasonable attorney fees. Stimac v. St., 248 M 412, 812 P2d 1246, 48 St. Rep. 488 (1991), followed in Van Riper v. Ford New Holland, Inc., 261 M 206, 862 P2d 47, 50 St. Rep. 1289 (1993).

Attorney Fee Amount in Discretion of Judge: The amount a party may be awarded in attorney fees under this section is within the trial court's discretion. An attorney fee that exceeds the amount in controversy is not per se excessive. Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666, 45 St. Rep. 1983 (1988).

Penalties, Fees, and Costs Improper Where Wage Statutes Inapplicable: Plaintiff found to have no claim to future lost wages under the wage statutes was also not eligible for award of penalties, fees, and costs pursuant to 39-3-206 or this section. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Statutory Wage Protection Inapplicable to Future Wages: Plaintiff alleged wrongful termination of employment and sought compensation for wages he would have collected had he not been discharged. The District Court properly granted partial summary judgment on plaintiff's wage claim after holding that the lost wages did not constitute "wages" within the meaning of the wage statutes. The protection granted under the statutes applies to labor or services actually performed or completed, as distinguished from labor or services to be performed in the future. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Fees Available in Action to Pierce Corporate Veil to Collect Wages: This section provides attorney fees to a plaintiff in an action to pierce the corporate veil where that action was necessary to recover and collect on a previous judgment awarded him on a wage claim action. As such, the action to pierce the corporate veil was a continuation of the wage claim action. Glaspey v. Workman, 230 M 307, 749 P2d 1083, 45 St. Rep. 226 (1988). The award of attorney fees incurred on appeal was proper when the employee was successful in the appeal of his wage claim action. Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666, 45 St. Rep. 1983 (1988).

Deputy Sheriffs' Retroactive Overtime — Conflict of Laws: Since deputies' award of retroactive overtime compensation was grounded in federal rather than state law, the state laws relating to penalties, interest, attorney fees, and costs did not apply. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Appellant Entitled to Attorney Fees Despite Intervention by Commissioner: Claimant employed counsel to prosecute a wage claim. The hearing officer granted the claim, and plaintiffs filed a petition for judicial review in District Court. The Commissioner of Labor intervened, and both his counsel and claimant's counsel appeared on the matter. The District Court upheld the hearing officer but denied claimant's request for attorney fees on the ground that separate representation was not necessary to dispose of the case. The Supreme Court reversed and held that claimant was entitled to attorney fees for the proceedings in District Court but not for the administrative hearing. The court determined that the necessity to enter the suit at law triggers the attorney fees, not the necessity of hiring a lawyer. Huber v. Comm'r of Labor & Indus., 220 M 335, 715 P2d 440, 43 St. Rep. 413 (1986).

Suit at Law Construed: An administrative hearing is not a "suit at law", and a "determination" made by the commissioner is not a "judgment". Therefore, it would be improper to award fees to any party for services rendered at the administrative agency level. Attorney fees are properly awarded at both the District Court and Supreme Court levels of the proceeding. Chagnon v. Hardy Constr. Co., 208 M 420, 680 P2d 932, 41 St. Rep. 441 (1984).

Failure to Obtain Judgment — Fees and Costs Inapplicable to Reimbursement of Expenses: In an action by the plaintiff to recover payment of expenses due to him under an oral contract providing for reimbursement of actual expenses, the trial court did not err in refusing plaintiff's request for attorney fees and costs, as the amounts sought to be recovered by the plaintiff are not "wages", within the meaning of 39-3-201(5). Because the plaintiff did not receive a judgment against the defendant, he has not satisfied the statutory requirements for payment of attorney fees and costs. Johnston v. K & T Mfg., Inc., 191 M 458, 625 P2d 66, 38 St. Rep. 392 (1981).

Attorney Fees for Administrative Hearing Properly Denied: Where the appellant filed a wage claim with the respondent for wages due to the appellant, and after a hearing was awarded back wages due plus a penalty, the court did not err in denying the appellant's prayer for attorney fees. This section, when read in conjunction with 39-3-212, makes clear that attorney fees must be awarded to a claimant only if he must bring a "suit at law" to collect his wages and obtains a "judgment" for that purpose. In this case, no suit was brought and no judgment was obtained. However, attorney fees for appeal to the Supreme Court were awarded. Thornton v. Comm'r of Dept. of Labor & Industry, 190 M 442, 621 P2d 1062, 37 St. Rep. 2026 (1980). See also Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666, 45 St. Rep. 1983 (1988).

Real Estate Transaction — No Fees: This statute does not support an award of reasonable posttrial attorney fees for costs incurred as the result of defendant's posttrial motions and appeal in a case involving purchase of property on a promissory note. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Employee Status Based on Implied Contract: Plaintiffs were managers of a bar under an expressed contract that provided that they would receive the bar revenues in excess of the operating and fixed costs of the operation. The expressed contract was revoked and they became employees as a result of representations by the defendant that they would receive reasonable compensation. As employees under the implied contract, they were entitled to attorneys' fees under this section. McNulty v. Bewley Corp., 182 M 260, 596 P2d 474, 36 St. Rep. 1110 (1979).

Attorney Fees Award — Disposition: Attorney fees awarded on appeal of Fair Labor Standards Act claim must be paid into the Cascade County General Fund and not given to the County Attorney as private attorney fees because Cascade County is in excess of 30,000 people, prohibiting profits by the County Attorney from private practice of law. St. v. Holman Aviation Co., 176 M 31, 575 P2d 923 (1978).

Failure to File Memorandum: In an action for wages, where a motion to strike a memorandum of costs was granted upon the ground that the memorandum had not been filed within the time provided by 25-10-501, all items of cost in the action, including attorney's fee, failed and the judgment was required to be corrected by striking the item of the attorney's fee and other costs. Wilson v. Wininger, 136 M 120, 345 P2d 374 (1959).

Assignee's Right to Attorney Fee: The right to include a reasonable attorney's fee where an employee is forced to bring suit to recover wages due is statutory, and the assignment of the wage claim carries with it the right to recover a reasonable attorney's fee. However, where 39 claims are established in one suit, the attorney's fee should not amount to as much as it would have been if 39 individual suits had been brought. (See 70-1-520.) Meister v. Farrow, 109 M 1, 92 P2d 753 (1939).

Constitutionality: This section is not invalid as violating the Due Process of Law Clause of either the state or federal constitution (Art. III, sec. 27, 1889 Mont. Const.), nor as denying to either party the equal protection of the law. Britt v. Cotter Butte Mines, 108 M 174, 91 P2d 403 (1939).

Quantum Meruit: The fact that plaintiff was suing on quantum meruit for the reasonable value of his services rather than for a lump sum, did not deprive him of the right to have his attorneys' fees taxed as costs against defendant upon rendition of judgment in his favor under this section. Britt v. Cotter Butte Mines, 108 M 174, 91 P2d 403 (1939).

Express Provision of Law: Under the rule provided by 25-10-201, that costs are not allowable unless expressly authorized by statute, the provision of this section for reasonable attorney's fee in favor of successful party, is an "express provision of law" for the allowance of costs. Swanson v. Gnose, 106 M 262, 76 P2d 643 (1938).

Limitation of Actions: The provision of 39-3-207 declaring that an employee may recover the penalties provided by 39-3-206 at any time within 6 months after default or delay in payment of wages, does not affect the provision of this section relating to including a reasonable attorney's fee. In the instant case the action was brought about 3 years after plaintiff's employment ceased, it was the duty of the District Court to allow a reasonable attorney's fee as a proper and legal cost item. Swanson v. Gnose, 106 M 262, 76 P2d 643 (1938).

Pleading and Proof: In an action to recover wages due, the plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee as a part of the costs without being required to either plead or prove such item. Swanson v. Gnose, 106 M 262, 76 P2d 643 (1938); Gardiner v. Eclipse Grocery Co., 72 M 540, 234 P 490 (1925).

Agricultural Labor: Attorney's fee was not allowable in suit for wages of a general ranch hand, coming under the exception as to agricultural labor provided in 39-3-203. Gahagan v. Gugler, 100 M 599, 52 P2d 150 (1935).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 inserted (2) concerning department mediation of disputed contested case; and in (4) substituted "an aggrieved party requests a rehearing or initiates judicial review, pursuant to Title 2, chapter 4, part 7, by filing a petition in district court within 30 days of the date of mailing of the hearings officer's decision" for "further review is initiated pursuant to 39-3-217 within 15 days after the decision is mailed to each party's last-known address. The period may be extended by the board for good cause." Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 30, Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies to claims accruing on or after April 23, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 90 near beginning of (1) and (2), after "wage claim", substituted "is valid" for "exists"; at end of first sentence of (1), after "wages due", substituted "and for any penalty assessed pursuant to 39-3-206" for "and owing"; and inserted third sentence in (2) that read: "The hearing may be conducted by telephone or by videoconference." Amendment effective March 9, 1995.

Applicability: Section 12, Ch. 90, L. 1995, provided: "[Sections 2, 3, 6, 7, and 9] [2-18-1002, 2-18-1012, 39-3-216, 39-3-217, now repealed, and 39-31-105] apply to hearings or appeals requested on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective March 9, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 134 in (2), near beginning after "exists", substituted "the department shall mail the determination to the parties at the last-known address of each party. If a party appeals the department's determination within 15 days after the determination is mailed by the department, a" for "and if it fails to settle the claim with the parties, it shall cause the matter to be brought to a hearing before a department hearings officer. The", in second sentence, after "except that", inserted "service need not be made as prescribed for civil actions in the district court and", and inserted third sentence requiring the Department to provide relief by rule for a person who does not receive the determination by mail.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (1) allowing entry and enforcement of a default order if a claim exists on an unappealed determination. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 8, Ch. 490, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to all wage claims filed with the department of labor and industry on or after July 1, 1991."

Effective Date: Section 8, Ch. 554, L. 1989, provided that this section is effective July 1, 1989.

Procedural, Not Substantive, Provisions of Wage Payment Law Applicable to Minimum Wage Claims: Plaintiffs filed claims against their former employer, school district, for violation of Minimum Wage and Overtime Compensation Act (MWOCA), now codified in Title 39, ch. 3, part 4. Section 41-2306, R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-3-407), provided that MWOCA claims were to be enforced in accordance with the Montana Wage Payment Act (WPA), (now codified at Title 39, ch. 3, part 5). The District Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to payment of back wages from the school district. However, the court denied plaintiffs' claim for statutory penalty and attorney fees, ruling that the school district was not an "employer" within the meaning of WPA. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that WPA provisions are to be used only for the purpose of providing a mechanism for the enforcement of MWOCA, that the substantive provisions of WPA are not applicable to a MWOCA claim, and that the court should have used the broad definition of "employer" found in MWOCA to assess a penalty and attorney fees against the school district. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ruled that the plain meaning of the statute indicated that it was the Legislature's intent to incorporate the remedial portions of the WPA only and that the substantive provisions of the MWOCA, including its definition of "employer", applied in this case. Sink v. School District, 199 M 352, 649 P2d 1263, 39 St. Rep. 1448 (1982).

Case Notes

Ranch Hand at State Research Ranch: Plaintiff was a beef herdsman at the Gerwin Research Farm, a part of the Agricultural Research Station of Montana State University (now Montana State University—Bozeman). He fed and watered cattle, helped deliver calves, maintained fences, assisted with artificial insemination, and maintained herd management records. He was a "farm worker" working on a "farm or ranch" for purposes of 39-3-402 and 39-3-405. He was also a person employed in agriculture for purposes of 39-3-406(2). On both grounds, he was not covered by the overtime compensation requirement of 39-3-405. The definition of "farm or ranch" in 39-3-402 does not require that the employer be a farm or ranch or even be primarily engaged in farming or ranching. It focuses on the activities at the work situs, and the Gerwin Research Farm fits within that definition. Terry v. Bd. of Regents, 220 M 214, 714 P2d 151, 43 St. Rep. 304 (1986).

Case Notes

Family Member Exclusion Inapplicable to Claim for Unpaid Back Wages — One Hundred Ten Percent Penalty Applied — Attorney Fees and Costs Properly Awarded: Greta worked for her husband's broadcasting company as a traffic system manager, initially working without hourly wages or a salary. About 10 months after her employment began, her husband offered Greta a monthly salary and agreed that Greta should be paid retroactively to the first day on which she started working, preparing a memorandum of understanding to that effect. The M.O.U. also provided that Greta be repaid for the 10-month period according to a mutually agreeable schedule. Greta continued to work several months at salary, but the marriage began to dissolve, and she left her position without receiving any back wages. The company eventually made some payments, but Greta ultimately sued for unpaid wages plus penalties under the wage protection statutes. The District Court granted Greta summary judgment on the issue of whether unpaid wages were owed and, after trial, ordered the company to pay Greta the amount still owing. However, the court declined to award the maximum 110% penalty, establishing a 55% penalty instead and awarding Greta her attorney fees and costs. Both parties appealed. The company claimed that the penalty and fees should not have been awarded because, as a family member, Greta's employment relationship was excluded under 39-3-406. However, that exception applies to the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the employment relationship, not to the failure to timely pay wages, which is governed by 39-3-205. Once Greta became a salaried employee, she was entitled to the rights and remedies afforded to all employees under state law. Therefore, the District Court properly determined that back wages were owing. However, under ARM 24.16.7551, an employer who pays some or all of a contested wage may be relieved in whole or in part of paying a penalty, unless the employer has previously violated similar wage and hour statutes within 3 years prior to the date of the filing of the wage claim. The District Court erred in not taking judicial notice of the administrative rule. Because the company had been the subject of at least three prior wage claims by other employees, the special circumstances of the rule applied, so the 110% penalty, as a matter of law, applied to the back wages owed to Greta at the time of her separation from employment. Thus, the Supreme Court vacated the 55% award and directed a 110% award from that date. Further, the District Court's award of attorney fees and costs was based on substantial evidence and was proper under 39-3-214, including Greta's attorney fees incurred on appeal. Reier Broadcasting Co. v. Reier, 2000 MT 120, 299 M 463, 1 P3d 940, 57 St. Rep. 504 (2000).

Commissioned Employees — Minimum Wage and Overtime Compliance: When an employer paid employees on a commission basis, the Department of Labor and Industry did not err in requiring that the employees must be compensated in compliance with the minimum wage and overtime compensation laws. To determine whether an employee's regular pay meets minimum wage standards, his total compensation each week is divided by his total hours worked. To comply with the requirements of this section and 39-3-405, the employer must agree with his employees to pay the stated commission or the minimum wage plus overtime, whichever is greater. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Wage Claim Action — Department Power to Initiate: The Department of Labor and Industry has the authority to bring an action for violation of the Montana minimum wage and overtime compensation law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) even though no complaint was filed by any of the defendant's wage earners, such a complaint being unnecessary under 39-3-209 as provided by 39-3-407. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Dependent: Pope was not a dependent of Keefer even though he lived with Keefer and Keefer provided all of his support. The fair inference is that the support was given not because Pope was a dependent in any customary sense but in exchange for the work he performed. Pope is therefore not a person excluded under 39-3-406 and is entitled to the minimum wage provided by this section. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Handicapped Worker: A person who has an I.Q. of 80 but who is not so mentally impaired as to be unable to engage in competitive, gainful employment within a limited range of possibilities is not a handicapped worker within the meaning of 39-3-406. Such an individual is entitled to the minimum wage provided by this section. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Minimum Wages and Hours Act Not Preempted: The Fair Labor Standards Act does not preempt the subject of wage, hour, or overtime regulation to the exclusion of Montana minimum wages and hours law. Plouffe v. Farm & Ranch Equip. Co., 174 M 313, 570 P2d 1106 (1977). See also Berry v. KRTV Communications, Inc., 262 M 415, 865 P2d 1104, 50 St. Rep. 1617 (1993).

Attorney General's Opinions

Hours of Labor and Compensation: An agency of state government may permit an employee to work more than 8 hours in any workday, but overtime need only be paid for hours worked in excess of 40 hours in any one workweek, and paid days off for annual leave, legal holidays, jury duty, and military leave are not counted as hours worked in computing weekly overtime. 37 A.G. Case Notes

Employee Who Spent Eighty Percent of Time on Nonmanagerial Work Considered Manager Exempt From Overtime Requirements: Showers sued Kemp for unpaid wages allegedly owed for Showers' work as a chef. The Board of Personnel Appeals found that Kemp owed $5,820.15 in unpaid overtime, and the District Court affirmed. On appeal, Kemp maintained that Showers was employed in an executive capacity under 29 U.S.C. 213(a)(1) and was thus exempt from the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Supreme Court considered the factors in 29 CFR 541.103 in determining whether Showers' primary duty was management: (1) time spent performing managerial duties; (2) the relative importance of the employee's managerial duties as compared with other duties; (3) the frequency with which the employee exercises discretionary powers; (4) the employee's relative freedom from supervision; and (5) the relationship between the employee's salary and wages paid to subordinates for the nonexempt work performed by the employee. Generally, an employee who spends 50% or more of time in management would have management as the primary duty, but time is not the sole test. An employee may spend less than 50% of time on management and still be considered a manager if other factors support that conclusion. Here, Showers spent only 20% of her time performing managerial work and 80% of her time cooking, but the managerial duties were more important than her other duties because they needed to be done so that her subordinates could work and so the kitchen could operate successfully. Further, Showers frequently exercised discretionary powers by making weekly, if not daily, decisions concerning operation of the kitchen, was relatively, if not totally, free from supervision, and was compensated better than her subordinates. Although exemptions from the Fair Labor Standards Act are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting the exemption and the employer has the burden of proving that the employee fits plainly and unmistakably within the terms of the exemption, the Supreme Court found that, considering the other factors in the federal regulations, Showers was an exempt employee whose primary duty was management, even though she spent 80% of her time performing nonmanagerial work. Kemp v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 1999 MT 255, 296 M 319, 989 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 1015 (1999).

Inclusion of District Construction Allowance in Base Pay for Purposes of Calculating Overtime Pay: Plaintiff employees' union sought a declaratory judgment that the district construction allowance (DCA) paid to eligible state employees should be included in their base pay for purposes of calculating overtime compensation. The District Court found that the DCA should not be included in the base pay and granted summary judgment to defendant state agency. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment. Defendant did not meet its burden of showing that the DCA fit plainly and unmistakenly within one of the exceptions to the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), 29 U.S.C. 201 through 219. The FLSA exceptions are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting them, and the employer bears the burden of showing that the employee fits within the terms of the exception. All remuneration that does not fall within one of the seven exclusionary clauses of the FLSA must be added into the total compensation received by the employee before the hourly pay rate is determined. In the present case, the expenses at issue were not incurred on the employer's behalf or for its benefit or convenience, but rather the money was reimbursement for normal, everyday expenses incurred by the employee for traveling to and from work and thus could not be excluded from the regular rate as reimbursement for travel expenses under 29 U.S.C. 207(e)(2). Further, the agency could not be relieved of liability under the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 (PPA), 29 U.S.C. 251, et seq., because under the PPA, that relief does not extend to an employer if the activity is compensable by either an express provision of a written or nonwritten contract in effect, at the time of the activity, between the employer and the employee, the employee's agent, or the collective bargaining representative, as was the case here. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 17, 287 M 229, 954 P2d 21, 55 St. Rep. 60 (1998).

Impermissible Wage Computation Scheme — Lack of Employee-Employer Agreement: Most Montana employers must compute wages based on Montana's Constitution and statutes providing for an 8-hour workday rather than on the provisions of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA). The FLSA provides a floor under which a state's hourly pay scheme cannot descend, but states are free to give greater benefits to their workers. Under this section, an employer is generally required to pay employees who work over 40 hours a week 1 ½ times their regular hourly wage for overtime hours worked. In the present case, in order to determine regular pay, the employer divided fixed pay by the total number of hours an employee worked. While permissible under federal law, this pay scheme is not permissible as applied to most employment relationships in Montana. The pay scheme was also a violation of wage laws because the employer and employees did not mutually agree to its use, in violation of ARM 24.16.2512(e). Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), followed in Lewis v. B&B Pawnbrokers, Inc., 1998 MT 302, 292 M 82, 968 P2d 1145, 55 St. Rep. 1243 (1998).

Overtime for TV News Editor/Reporter Not Covered by Federal Law: Since the overtime pay section of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 specifically exempted a TV news editor/reporter from overtime pay, he was not covered by the federal Act for purposes of the provision in 39-3-408 that this part does not apply to employees covered by the federal Act. Therefore, he is covered by this part's overtime pay provisions and is entitled to overtime pay for past work because this part does not exempt him from overtime provisions. Berry v. KRTV Communications, Inc., 262 M 415, 865 P2d 1104, 50 St. Rep. 1617 (1993), followed in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Remedies Cumulative: On the question of whether plaintiffs who were denied overtime compensation under this section must seek relief exclusively from the Commissioner of Labor under this chapter, the Supreme Court held that the clear and unambiguous language of 39-3-408 provides for cumulative remedies. Therefore, resort to the Commissioner of Labor was not plaintiffs' exclusive option. The court reversed a dismissal that was based on plaintiffs' failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303, 46 St. Rep. 1389 (1989).

Trucking Dispatcher as Administrative Employee — Overtime Denied: Evidence of a trucking dispatcher's customary exercise of discretion and judgment was sufficiently credible to support the conclusion that he acted in an administrative capacity and was not eligible for overtime compensation. Dennis v. Tomahawk Serv., Inc., 235 M 378, 767 P2d 346, 46 St. Rep. 69 (1989).

Deputy Sheriffs' Overtime and On-Call Time Before and After "Garcia Decision": This section relates to overtime compensation generally, while 7-4-2507 through 7-4-2509 specifically address the salary and overtime compensation of Deputy Sheriffs. Therefore, under the rule that the specific statute governs over the general, this section does not apply to Deputy Sheriffs. Furthermore, 7-4-2507 provides that 7-4-2508 through 7-4-2510 govern if they conflict with any other law. Under 7-4-2509, payment of overtime for time worked beyond the regularly scheduled work period is not mandatory and lies in the discretion of the Board of County Commissioners. Since this section does not apply to the deputies, the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) and Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 US 528, 83 L Ed 2d 1016, 105 S Ct 1005 (1985), set the threshold (171 hours per 28-day work period) above which the deputies must be paid overtime, retroactive to April 15, 1985, the date Garcia was decided; it could not be argued that the FLSA intended that the lower of the FLSA and the 39-3-405 (160 hours) threshold for a 28-day period should be used to determine when overtime begins. The deputies' claim for compensation for on-call time was another claim for overtime, and payment for on-call time prior to Garcia was in the discretion of the County Commissioners. On-call time since Garcia did not constitute work under a United States Supreme Court test that for FLSA purposes work is physical or mental exertion controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Deputy Sheriffs' Retroactive Overtime — Conflict of Laws: Since deputies' award of retroactive overtime compensation was grounded in federal rather than state law, the state laws relating to penalties, interest, attorney fees, and costs did not apply. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Ranch Hand at State Research Ranch: Plaintiff was a beef herdsman at the Gerwin Research Farm, a part of the Agricultural Research Station of Montana State University (now Montana State University—Bozeman). He fed and watered cattle, helped deliver calves, maintained fences, assisted with artificial insemination, and maintained herd management records. He was a "farm worker" working on a "farm or ranch" for purposes of 39-3-402 and 39-3-405. He was also a person employed in agriculture for purposes of 39-3-406(2). On both grounds, he was not covered by the overtime compensation requirement of 39-3-405. The definition of "farm or ranch" in 39-3-402 does not require that the employer be a farm or ranch or even be primarily engaged in farming or ranching. It focuses on the activities at the work situs, and the Gerwin Research Farm fits within that definition. Terry v. Bd. of Regents, 220 M 214, 714 P2d 151, 43 St. Rep. 304 (1986).

Public Policy Against Waiver of Overtime — Estoppel: Though employee allegedly failed to report overtime hours and inform employer that he expected overtime pay, his nonassertion of his right under state and federal law to overtime pay did not constitute a waiver of the right or estop him from bringing a claim for it. Laws intended to protect the public in general cannot be waived privately by either implication or agreement, and laws establishing the right to overtime pay are among such laws. The court did not refer to Celmer v. Schmitt, 198 M 271, 645 P2d 946, 39 St. Rep. 925 (1982), which appears to have a contrary holding. Hoehne v. Sherrodd, Inc., 205 M 365, 668 P2d 232, 40 St. Rep. 1363 (1983), followed in Lewis v. B&B Pawnbrokers, Inc., 1998 MT 302, 292 M 82, 968 P2d 1145, 55 St. Rep. 1243 (1998). Lewis also overruled Celmer to the extent that it conflicted with Hoehne.

Farm Worker: Schmitt hired Celmer to work in his livestock, grain, and meat production business at a salary of $1,000 per month plus a rent and meat allowance. After Celmer quit without giving notice, he filed a claim for compensation for overtime he worked during his employment. The court rejected Celmer's claim because: (1) the employment contract excluded overtime payment because Celmer was compensated by salary and allowance for rent and meat, and (2) Celmer was an agricultural employee. In any event, an employee is estopped from claiming overtime compensation if he failed to report the overtime or to inform his employer that he expected compensation until he sued after quitting. Celmer v. Schmitt, 198 M 271, 645 P2d 946, 39 St. Rep. 925 (1982).

Claim for Overtime Pay at End of Employment Valid: A county is not relieved of liability for overtime pay on the grounds that an employee did not file an overtime pay claim for each pay period and did not claim any overtime until the end of his employment with the county. Rosebud County v. Roan, 192 M 252, 627 P2d 1222, 38 St. Rep. 639 (1981).

Overtime Wage Claim Valid — No Express Mandate to Work Overtime: Employers may not arbitrarily deny overtime on the basis that the employer did not expressly order the employee to work overtime. A rule to the contrary would reject many legitimate overtime wage claims such as the one here where the employee's overtime work was an effort to fulfill the terms of his employment rather than an attempt to create his own employment contract and where the employer knew that the employee worked overtime and did not direct the employee to stop working overtime. Rosebud County v. Roan, 192 M 252, 627 P2d 1222, 38 St. Rep. 639 (1981).

Two-Part Test in Qualifying an Employee as an Executive for the Purposes of Overtime Wage: In order to qualify an employee as an "executive" for the purposes of denying the employee overtime wage compensation, the test under the administrative rules is "whether the employee's duties 'include the customary and regular direction of the work of two or more other employees therein'", and in addition, whether the employee customarily and regularly supervised at least two full-time employees or the equivalent. Both rules defining the test must be met, and where the employee supervised two employees, one of which did not work for him full time, the employee does not meet the requirement of being an "executive". Rosebud County v. Roan, 192 M 252, 627 P2d 1222, 38 St. Rep. 639 (1981).

Commissioned Employees — Minimum Wage and Overtime Compliance: When an employer paid employees on a commission basis, the Department of Labor and Industry did not err in requiring that the employees must be compensated in compliance with the minimum wage and overtime compensation laws. To determine whether an employee's regular pay meets minimum wage standards, his total compensation each week is divided by his total hours worked. To comply with the requirements of 39-3-404 and this section, the employer must agree with his employees to pay the stated commission or the minimum wage plus overtime, whichever is greater. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Time Limitation on Penalty — Tolled by Agency Enforcement: Failure to pay overtime results in the penalty at 39-3-206 as provided by 39-3-407. Section 39-3-206 states that the penalty is assessed for the entire period of time that the wages remain unpaid, except Sundays and legal holidays. The penalty may be enforced only if a complaint is filed or the Department of Labor and Industry acts to enforce the law within the 18-month limitation of 39-3-207 following the accrual of the action. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Wage Claim Action — Department Power to Initiate: The Department of Labor and Industry has the authority to bring an action for violation of the Montana minimum wage and overtime compensation law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) even though no complaint was filed by any of the defendant's wage earners, such a complaint being unnecessary under 39-3-209 as provided by 39-3-407. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Minimum Wages and Hours Act Not Preempted: The Fair Labor Standards Act does not preempt the subject of wage, hour, or overtime regulation to the exclusion of Montana minimum wages and hours law. Plouffe v. Farm & Ranch Equip. Co., 174 M 313, 570 P2d 1106 (1977). See also Berry v. KRTV Communications, Inc., 262 M 415, 865 P2d 1104, 50 St. Rep. 1617 (1993).

Public Officers and Employees: Provisions of this act and the provision dictating that County Commissioners fix the salaries of deputies (7-4-2502) are in conflict and the special act prevails over the general provisions of this act. Because a maximum is provided by 7-4-2502, the time-and-a-half for overtime hours in excess of 40 hours per week is unenforceable. Billings v. Smith, 158 M 197, 490 P2d 221 (1971).

Attorney General's Opinions

Montana Law Not Applicable to Workers Covered by Fair Labor Standards Act: State and local government employees who are covered by the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) are not subject to the provisions of the Montana minimum wages and maximum hours law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) and therefore may reach agreement with their employers to receive compensatory time in lieu of cash overtime in accordance with FLSA amendments in 1985. 41 A.G. Op. 58 (1986).

Four-Day Workweek: Local law enforcement agencies may, with the consent of affected employees, schedule a 40-hour workweek consisting of 4 consecutive 10-hour days. 38 A.G. Op. 83 (1980).

Hours of Labor and Compensation: An agency of state government may permit an employee to work more than 8 hours in any workday, but overtime need only be paid for hours worked in excess of 40 hours in any one workweek, and paid days off for annual leave, legal holidays, jury duty, and military leave are not counted as hours worked in computing weekly overtime. 37 A.G. Op. 16 (1977).

Case Notes

Family Member Exclusion Inapplicable to Claim for Unpaid Back Wages — One Hundred Ten Percent Penalty Applied — Attorney Fees and Costs Properly Awarded: Greta worked for her husband's broadcasting company as a traffic system manager, initially working without hourly wages or a salary. About 10 months after her employment began, her husband offered Greta a monthly salary and agreed that Greta should be paid retroactively to the first day on which she started working, preparing a memorandum of understanding to that effect. The M.O.U. also provided that Greta be repaid for the 10-month period according to a mutually agreeable schedule. Greta continued to work several months at salary, but the marriage began to dissolve, and she left her position without receiving any back wages. The company eventually made some payments, but Greta ultimately sued for unpaid wages plus penalties under the wage protection statutes. The District Court granted Greta summary judgment on the issue of whether unpaid wages were owed and, after trial, ordered the company to pay Greta the amount still owing. However, the court declined to award the maximum 110% penalty, establishing a 55% penalty instead and awarding Greta her attorney fees and costs. Both parties appealed. The company claimed that the penalty and fees should not have been awarded because, as a family member, Greta's employment relationship was excluded under this section. However, that exception applies to the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the employment relationship, not to the failure to timely pay wages, which is governed by 39-3-205. Once Greta became a salaried employee, she was entitled to the rights and remedies afforded to all employees under state law. Therefore, the District Court properly determined that back wages were owing. However, under ARM 24.16.7551, an employer who pays some or all of a contested wage may be relieved in whole or in part of paying a penalty, unless the employer has previously violated similar wage and hour statutes within 3 years prior to the date of the filing of the wage claim. The District Court erred in not taking judicial notice of the administrative rule. Because the company had been the subject of at least three prior wage claims by other employees, the special circumstances of the rule applied, so the 110% penalty, as a matter of law, applied to the back wages owed to Greta at the time of her separation from employment. Thus, the Supreme Court vacated the 55% award and directed a 110% award from that date. Further, the District Court's award of attorney fees and costs was based on substantial evidence and was proper under 39-3-214, including Greta's attorney fees incurred on appeal. Reier Broadcasting Co. v. Reier, 2000 MT 120, 299 M 463, 1 P3d 940, 57 St. Rep. 504 (2000).

Employee Who Spent Eighty Percent of Time on Nonmanagerial Work Considered Manager Exempt From Overtime Requirements: Showers sued Kemp for unpaid wages allegedly owed for Showers' work as a chef. The Board of Personnel Appeals found that Kemp owed $5,820.15 in unpaid overtime, and the District Court affirmed. On appeal, Kemp maintained that Showers was employed in an executive capacity under 29 U.S.C. 213(a)(1) and was thus exempt from the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Supreme Court considered the factors in 29 CFR 541.103 in determining whether Showers' primary duty was management: (1) time spent performing managerial duties; (2) the relative importance of the employee's managerial duties as compared with other duties; (3) the frequency with which the employee exercises discretionary powers; (4) the employee's relative freedom from supervision; and (5) the relationship between the employee's salary and wages paid to subordinates for the nonexempt work performed by the employee. Generally, an employee who spends 50% or more of time in management would have management as the primary duty, but time is not the sole test. An employee may spend less than 50% of time on management and still be considered a manager if other factors support that conclusion. Here, Showers spent only 20% of her time performing managerial work and 80% of her time cooking, but the managerial duties were more important than her other duties because they needed to be done so that her subordinates could work and so the kitchen could operate successfully. Further, Showers frequently exercised discretionary powers by making weekly, if not daily, decisions concerning operation of the kitchen, was relatively, if not totally, free from supervision, and was compensated better than her subordinates. Although exemptions from the Fair Labor Standards Act are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting the exemption and the employer has the burden of proving that the employee fits plainly and unmistakably within the terms of the exemption, the Supreme Court found that, considering the other factors in the federal regulations, Showers was an exempt employee whose primary duty was management, even though she spent 80% of her time performing nonmanagerial work. Kemp v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 1999 MT 255, 296 M 319, 989 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 1015 (1999).

Agency's Findings of Fact — Not Overturned Unless Clearly Erroneous: The plaintiff sued the defendant for past wages and overtime. The defendant argued that no overtime was owed on the grounds that the plaintiff was an executive employee as set out in ARM 24.16.201. The Department of Labor and Industry determined that the plaintiff was not an executive employee and was entitled to overtime pay. The Supreme Court ruled that the Department's findings were supported by substantive evidence and therefore could not be overturned by the District Court. Holbeck v. Stevi-West, Inc., 240 M 121, 783 P2d 391, 46 St. Rep. 1990 (1989).

Dispatcher Not Subject to Federal Regulations — Not Exempt From Overtime Requirements: The federal Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984 affects only those employees whose activities concern the safety of motor carrier operations. A trucking company dispatcher does not engage in such activities and therefore is not subject to federal regulations concerning maximum hours. Thus, the exemption in this section, which states that the overtime provisions of 39-3-405 do not apply to employees with respect to whom the United States Secretary of Transportation has the power to establish maximum hours of service, does not apply to the dispatcher. The dispatcher is not exempt from overtime requirements. V.K. Putnam, Inc. v. McFarlane, 239 M 300, 779 P2d 905, 46 St. Rep. 1699 (1989).

Trucking Dispatcher as Administrative Employee — Overtime Denied: Evidence of a trucking dispatcher's customary exercise of discretion and judgment was sufficiently credible to support the conclusion that he acted in an administrative capacity and was not eligible for overtime compensation. Dennis v. Tomahawk Serv., Inc., 235 M 378, 767 P2d 346, 46 St. Rep. 69 (1989).

Deputy Sheriffs' Overtime and On-Call Time Before and After "Garcia Decision": Section 39-3-405 relates to overtime compensation generally, while 7-4-2507 through 7-4-2509 specifically address the salary and overtime compensation of Deputy Sheriffs. Therefore, under the rule that the specific statute governs over the general, 39-3-405 does not apply to Deputy Sheriffs. Furthermore, 7-4-2507 provides that 7-4-2508 through 7-4-2510 govern if they conflict with any other law. Under 7-4-2509, payment of overtime for time worked beyond the regularly scheduled work period is not mandatory and lies in the discretion of the Board of County Commissioners. Since 39-3-405 does not apply to the deputies, the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) and Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 US 528, 83 L Ed 2d 1016, 105 S Ct 1005 (1985), set the threshold (171 hours per 28-day work period) above which the deputies must be paid overtime, retroactive to April 15, 1985, the date Garcia was decided; it could not be argued that the FLSA intended that the lower of the FLSA and the 39-3-405 (160 hours) threshold for a 28-day period should be used to determine when overtime begins. The deputies' claim for compensation for on-call time was another claim for overtime, and payment for on-call time prior to Garcia was in the discretion of the County Commissioners. On-call time since Garcia did not constitute work under a United States Supreme Court test that for FLSA purposes work is physical or mental exertion controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Deputy Sheriffs' Retroactive Overtime — Conflict of Laws: Since deputies' award of retroactive overtime compensation was grounded in federal rather than state law, the state laws relating to penalties, interest, attorney fees, and costs did not apply. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Ranch Hand at State Research Ranch: Plaintiff was a beef herdsman at the Gerwin Research Farm, a part of the Agricultural Research Station of Montana State University (now Montana State University—Bozeman). He fed and watered cattle, helped deliver calves, maintained fences, assisted with artificial insemination, and maintained herd management records. He was a "farm worker" working on a "farm or ranch" for purposes of 39-3-402 and 39-3-405. He was also a person employed in agriculture for purposes of 39-3-406(2). On both grounds, he was not covered by the overtime compensation requirement of 39-3-405. The definition of "farm or ranch" in 39-3-402 does not require that the employer be a farm or ranch or even be primarily engaged in farming or ranching. It focuses on the activities at the work situs, and the Gerwin Research Farm fits within that definition. Terry v. Bd. of Regents, 220 M 214, 714 P2d 151, 43 St. Rep. 304 (1986).

Two-Part Test in Qualifying an Employee as an Executive for the Purposes of Overtime Wage: In order to qualify an employee as an "executive" for the purposes of denying the employee overtime wage compensation, the test under the administrative rules is "whether the employee's duties 'include the customary and regular direction of the work of two or more other employees therein'", and in addition, whether the employee customarily and regularly supervised at least two full-time employees or the equivalent. Both rules defining the test must be met, and where the employee supervised two employees, one of which did not work for him full time, the employee does not meet the requirement of being an "executive". Rosebud County v. Roan, 192 M 252, 627 P2d 1222, 38 St. Rep. 639 (1981), followed in Bronken's Goodtime Co. v. Bishop, 201 M 360, 664 P2d 292, 39 St. Rep. 2165 (1982).

Commissioned Employees — Minimum Wage and Overtime Compliance: When an employer paid employees on a commission basis, the Department of Labor and Industry did not err in requiring that the employees must be compensated in compliance with the minimum wage and overtime compensation laws. To determine whether an employee's regular pay meets minimum wage standards, his total compensation each week is divided by his total hours worked. To comply with the requirements of 39-3-404 and 39-3-405, the employer must agree with his employees to pay the stated commission or the minimum wage plus overtime, whichever is greater. (This holding is subject to certain exclusions for employees paid on a commission basis that are provided for by this statute.) St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

Policemen of Third-Class Cities — Overtime Compensation: A 1971 decision of the Supreme Court held that policemen were professionals and exempt from the minimum wage and hour law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4). As exempt employees they were not entitled to overtime pay. In 1973, the Legislature enacted 7-32-4119 which provided overtime pay for police officers of first- and second-class cities. Plaintiff, a police officer in a third-class city, argued that the 1973 enactment repealed the 1971 decision and that he was entitled to overtime pay. The court held that the 1973 enactment did not repeal the 1971 decision and since he was not within the class that the Legislature authorized the payment of overtime, he was not entitled to overtime. Dodd v. E. Helena, 180 M 518, 591 P2d 241, 36 St. Rep. 414 (1979).

Dependent: Pope was not a dependent of Keefer even though he lived with Keefer and Keefer provided all of his support. The fair inference is that the support was given not because Pope was a dependent in any customary sense but in exchange for the work he performed. Pope is therefore not a person excluded under this section and is entitled to the minimum wage provided by 39-3-404. (See 1999 amendment.) Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Handicapped Worker: A person who has an I.Q. of 80 but who is not so mentally impaired as to be unable to engage in competitive, gainful employment within a limited range of possibilities is not a handicapped worker within the meaning of this section. Such an individual is entitled to the minimum wage provided by 39-3-404. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Law Enforcement Officers: The Legislature intended to include policemen, firemen, and Deputy Sheriffs within the terms of "bona fide executives, administrative, or professional capacity" and exclude them from coverage of 39-3-404 and 39-3-405. Billings v. Smith, 158 M 197, 490 P2d 221 (1971).

Attorney General's Opinions

Computation of Salaries, Longevity Payments, and Overtime for Sheriffs, Undersheriffs, and Deputy Sheriffs:

Since no statutory right to compensation for overtime for Deputy Sheriffs and undersheriffs existed prior to enactment of 7-4-2509 in 1981, they are not entitled to a cash payment in lieu of compensatory time off for overtime hours worked before October 1, 1981. The enactment of 7-4-2509 was not expressly retroactive. 40 A.G. Op. 55 (1984).

Chapter 603, L. 1981, amended 7-4-2505 and 39-3-406 and enacted 7-4-2507 through 7-4-2510. Under Ch. 603, the following holdings were made:

(1) an individual undersheriff or Deputy Sheriff is entitled to an initial longevity payment on his first employment anniversary occurring after October 1, 1981;

(2) years of service prior to October 1, 1981, must be considered in determining the amount of longevity payments to Deputy Sheriffs and undersheriffs;

(3) the "minimum base annual salary" for calculating longevity payments is the statutory minimum level for the county involved, as specified in 7-4-2508;

(4) the "salary" of a Sheriff, for purposes of calculating the annual compensation of Deputy Sheriffs and undersheriffs, includes the additional $2,000 received by the Sheriff pursuant to 7-4-2503; and

(5) the payment of overtime compensation to undersheriffs and Deputy Sheriffs is within the discretion of the individual Boards of County Commissioners. 39 A.G. Op. 21 (1981).

Remedies Cumulative: On the question of whether plaintiffs who were denied overtime compensation under 39-3-405 must seek relief exclusively from the Commissioner of Labor under this chapter, the Supreme Court held that the clear and unambiguous language of 39-3-408 provides for cumulative remedies. Therefore, resort to the Commissioner of Labor was not plaintiffs' exclusive option. The court reversed a dismissal that was based on plaintiffs' failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303, 46 St. Rep. 1389 (1989).

Procedural, Not Substantive, Provisions of Wage Payment Law Applicable to Minimum Wage Claims: Plaintiffs filed claims against their former employer, school district, for violation of Minimum Wage and Overtime Compensation Act (MWOCA), now codified in Title 39, ch. 3, part 4. Section 41-2306, R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-3-407), provided that MWOCA claims were to be enforced in accordance with the Montana Wage Payment Act (WPA), (now codified at Title 39, ch. 3, part 5). The District Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to payment of back wages from the school district. However, the court denied plaintiffs' claim for statutory penalty and attorney fees, ruling that the school district was not an "employer" within the meaning of WPA. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that WPA provisions are to be used only for the purpose of providing a mechanism for the enforcement of MWOCA, that the substantive provisions of WPA are not applicable to a MWOCA claim, and that the court should have used the broad definition of "employer" found in MWOCA to assess a penalty and attorney fees against the school district. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ruled that the plain meaning of the statute indicated that it was the Legislature's intent to incorporate the remedial portions of the WPA only and that the substantive provisions of the MWOCA, including its definition of "employer", applied in this case. Sink v. School District, 199 M 352, 649 P2d 1263, 39 St. Rep. 1448 (1982).

Wage Claim Action — Department Power to Initiate: The Department of Labor and Industry has the authority to bring an action for violation of the Montana minimum wage and overtime compensation law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) even though no complaint was filed by any of the defendant's wage earners, such a complaint being unnecessary under 39-3-209 as provided by this section. St. v. Wilson, 189 M 52, 614 P2d 1066, 37 St. Rep. 1393 (1980).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 71 near beginning of (1) after "salaries" substituted "and are applicable to employees of the state of Montana, except that the penalty provisions of 39-3-206 do not apply to minimum wage and overtime claims that are subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, in which case liquidated damages as determined under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 apply" for "but shall not apply to employees covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 except as provided in subsection (2)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 2001.

1987 Amendment: At end of (1) inserted "except as provided in subsection (2)"; and inserted (2) providing that 39-3-402 and 39-3-404 apply to an employee covered by the FLSA if the state minimum wage is higher than the federal minimum wage.

Fair Labor Standards Act: This federal Act, referred to in this section, is codified at Title 29, U.S.C., Ch. 8.

Case Notes

Employee Who Spent Eighty Percent of Time on Nonmanagerial Work Considered Manager Exempt From Overtime Requirements: Showers sued Kemp for unpaid wages allegedly owed for Showers' work as a chef. The Board of Personnel Appeals found that Kemp owed $5,820.15 in unpaid overtime, and the District Court affirmed. On appeal, Kemp maintained that Showers was employed in an executive capacity under 29 U.S.C. 213(a)(1) and was thus exempt from the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Supreme Court considered the factors in 29 CFR 541.103 in determining whether Showers' primary duty was management: (1) time spent performing managerial duties; (2) the relative importance of the employee's managerial duties as compared with other duties; (3) the frequency with which the employee exercises discretionary powers; (4) the employee's relative freedom from supervision; and (5) the relationship between the employee's salary and wages paid to subordinates for the nonexempt work performed by the employee. Generally, an employee who spends 50% or more of time in management would have management as the primary duty, but time is not the sole test. An employee may spend less than 50% of time on management and still be considered a manager if other factors support that conclusion. Here, Showers spent only 20% of her time performing managerial work and 80% of her time cooking, but the managerial duties were more important than her other duties because they needed to be done so that her subordinates could work and so the kitchen could operate successfully. Further, Showers frequently exercised discretionary powers by making weekly, if not daily, decisions concerning operation of the kitchen, was relatively, if not totally, free from supervision, and was compensated better than her subordinates. Although exemptions from the Fair Labor Standards Act are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting the exemption and the employer has the burden of proving that the employee fits plainly and unmistakably within the terms of the exemption, the Supreme Court found that, considering the other factors in the federal regulations, Showers was an exempt employee whose primary duty was management, even though she spent 80% of her time performing nonmanagerial work. Kemp v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 1999 MT 255, 296 M 319, 989 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 1015 (1999).

Inclusion of District Construction Allowance in Base Pay for Purposes of Calculating Overtime Pay: Plaintiff employees' union sought a declaratory judgment that the district construction allowance (DCA) paid to eligible state employees should be included in their base pay for purposes of calculating overtime compensation. The District Court found that the DCA should not be included in the base pay and granted summary judgment to defendant state agency. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment. Defendant did not meet its burden of showing that the DCA fit plainly and unmistakenly within one of the exceptions to the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), 29 U.S.C. 201 through 219. The FLSA exceptions are to be narrowly construed against the employer asserting them, and the employer bears the burden of showing that the employee fits within the terms of the exception. All remuneration that does not fall within one of the seven exclusionary clauses of the FLSA must be added into the total compensation received by the employee before the hourly pay rate is determined. In the present case, the expenses at issue were not incurred on the employer's behalf or for its benefit or convenience, but rather the money was reimbursement for normal, everyday expenses incurred by the employee for traveling to and from work and thus could not be excluded from the regular rate as reimbursement for travel expenses under 29 U.S.C. 207(e)(2). Further, the agency could not be relieved of liability under the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 (PPA), 29 U.S.C. 251, et seq., because under the PPA, that relief does not extend to an employer if the activity is compensable by either an express provision of a written or nonwritten contract in effect, at the time of the activity, between the employer and the employee, the employee's agent, or the collective bargaining representative, as was the case here. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 17, 287 M 229, 954 P2d 21, 55 St. Rep. 60 (1998).

State Firefighter Reclassification Plan Violative of Fair Labor Standards Act: In 1985, the U.S. Supreme Court in Garcia v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 US 528, 83 L Ed 2d 1016, 105 S Ct 1005 (1985), reversed previous case law that excluded state jobs from coverage under the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA), making FLSA provisions binding on state and local governments. Under the FLSA, a firefighter must be paid at the overtime rate if the firefighter's tour of duty exceeds 212 hours in 28 days. The Montana Department of Military Affairs employed certain firefighters, the cost of whose jobs was paid by the federal government through a cooperative arrangement with the state. In response to Garcia, the Department proposed changes in the manner in which the firefighters were paid and, in 1986, an exclusion from the state pay matrix was granted under 2-18-103. Following the reclassification, the firefighters' wages were reduced. The firefighters sought compensation for unpaid "straight time" and for discrimination in violation of the FLSA. The state's economic necessity argument failed because under Blanton v. Murfreesboro, 856 F2d 731 (6th Cir. 1988), the state could not prove that the wages were reduced from fiscal concern that was not attributable to the extra cost of complying with the FLSA nor could the state show that it could not augment federal funds with state funds or implement a different plan without violating the FLSA. The state's contention that the firefighters were not reclassified in response to their assertion of coverage under the FLSA because violations were not asserted until 1988 also was invalid because under Drollinger v. Ariz., 962 F2d 956 (9th Cir. 1992), the FLSA also prohibits violations in anticipation of assertions of coverage. The state's argument that the firefighters ratified the wage cuts when they signed agreements reducing their hourly wage also was incorrect because under Barrentine v. Ark.-Best Freight Sys., 450 US 728, 67 L Ed 2d 641, 101 S Ct 1437 (1981), employees' rights under the FLSA cannot be abridged by contract or otherwise. Cumulatively, the uncontroverted evidence established a state violation of the FLSA, and summary judgment was proper. Tefft v. St., 271 M 82, 894 P2d 317, 52 St. Rep. 357 (1995).

Overtime for TV News Editor/Reporter Not Covered by Federal Law: Since the overtime pay section of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 specifically exempted a TV news editor/reporter from overtime pay, he was not covered by the federal Act for purposes of this section's provision that this part does not apply to employees covered by the federal Act. Therefore, he is covered by this part's overtime pay provisions and is entitled to overtime pay for past work because this part does not exempt him from overtime provisions. Berry v. KRTV Communications, Inc., 262 M 415, 865 P2d 1104, 50 St. Rep. 1617 (1993).

No Coverage by Montana Labor Law for Employees Covered by Federal Fair Labor Standards Act: The claimants argued that they were covered by the provisions of Title 39, ch. 3, part 4, because the federal Fair Labor Standards Act contains a clause stating that nothing in its provisions excuses compliance with state laws creating higher standards. The Supreme Court ruled that the claimants were not covered by Montana law because the language of Title 39, ch. 3, part 4, as it read in 1985, clearly showed that the state Legislature intended to exclude workers covered by the federal Act from coverage under state law. Stewart v. Region II Child & Family Serv., 242 M 88, 788 P2d 913, 47 St. Rep. 572 (1990).

Remedies Cumulative: On the question of whether plaintiffs who were denied overtime compensation under 39-3-405 must seek relief exclusively from the Commissioner of Labor under this chapter, the Supreme Court held that the clear and unambiguous language of this section provides for cumulative remedies. Therefore, resort to the Commissioner of Labor was not plaintiffs' exclusive option. The court reversed a dismissal that was based on plaintiffs' failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Boegli v. Glacier Mtn. Cheese Co., 238 M 426, 777 P2d 1303, 46 St. Rep. 1389 (1989).

State Enforcement of FLSA Claim: The Montana Department of Labor is not precluded by this section or the Fair Labor Standards Act from seeking enforcement of the FLSA claim of an employee working in Montana, but rather is authorized by 39-3-202, 39-3-211, 29 C.F.R. 515.8, and FLSA to do so. St. v. Holman Aviation Co., 176 M 31, 575 P2d 923 (1978).

Attorney General's Opinions

Applicability of State Law Other Than Montana Minimum Wage and Maximum Hours Law to Workers Covered by Fair Labor Standards Act: The federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 requires provisions of state law other than the Montana minimum wage and maximum hours law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4), which set shorter workweeks for specified groups of employees, to be given effect. 41 A.G. Op. 58 (1986).

Montana Law Not Applicable to Workers Covered by Fair Labor Standards Act: State and local government employees who are covered by the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) are not subject to the provisions of the Montana minimum wages and maximum hours law (Title 39, ch. 3, part 4) and therefore may reach agreement with their employers to receive compensatory time in lieu of cash overtime in accordance with FLSA amendments in 1985. (Chapter 446, L. 1987, amended this section to allow the state minimum wage law to apply to employees covered by the federal Act.) 41 A.G. Op. 58 (1986).

Part Case Notes

Procedural, Not Substantive, Provisions of Wage Payment Law Applicable to Minimum Wage Claims: Plaintiffs filed claims against their former employer, school district, for violation of Minimum Wage and Overtime Compensation Act (MWOCA), now codified in Title 39, ch. 3, part 4. Section 41-2306, R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-3-407), provided that MWOCA claims were to be enforced in accordance with the Montana Wage Payment Act (WPA), (now codified at Title 39, ch. 3, part 5). The District Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to payment of back wages from the school district. However, the court denied plaintiffs' claim for statutory penalty and attorney fees, ruling that the school district was not an "employer" within the meaning of WPA. Classification as to Cities and Towns: This section was not open to the complaint that in designating retail stores in cities and towns having a population of 2,500 or over subject to its provisions the Legislature made an arbitrary discrimination instead of a reasonable classification, it being presumed in the absence of a contrary showing that, when the Legislature made the classification, it had all the controlling facts before it. St. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 106 M 182, 76 P2d 81 (1938).

Constitutionality: This section was not, even prior to the adoption of Art. XVIII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Constitutionality: This section was held impliedly repealed by the amendment of Art. XVIII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., insofar as 39-4-105 allows employees of cities of less than 2,500 to work more than 8 hours a day. 18 A.G. Op. 16 (1939).

Case Notes

Overtime Compensation: The cause of action having arisen prior to the 1972 Montana Constitution, the Supreme Court noted that under Art. XVIII, sec. 4 and 5, 1889 Mont. Const. and under 39-4-107, there is no right to receive overtime compensation on the part of the appellant. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150, 37 St. Rep. 236 (1980).

Overtime Computation: Forty-hour workweek was proper basis for determining hourly rate in computing overtime pay for state employees who worked on a 24-hours-per-day basis. Glick v. St. Dept. of Institutions, 162 M 82, 509 P2d 1 (1973), certiorari denied St. v. Glick, 414 US 856, 38 L Ed 2d 106, 94 S Ct 158 (1973).

Employer and Employee Subject to Penalty: The inhibition contained in this section includes both employer and employee, and renders both subject to the penalty whenever the former causes the employee to work, and the latter works for a period longer than 8 hours. Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913). This opinion was overruled in Waller v. Engelke, 227 M 470, 741 P2d 385, 44 St. Rep. 1241 (1987), which held that the pari delicto doctrine, found in 1-3-215, does not necessarily bar a plaintiff's negligence action against a defendant because the plaintiff himself violated a statute. Conduct prohibited by law that is not strongly condemned by public policy as a matter of serious criminal conduct or delinquency may not be sufficient to bar recovery. See also St. v. Livingston Concrete Bldg. & Mfg. Co., 34 M 570, 87 P 980 (1906).

Enforcement by Civil Action: If a statute makes a requirement, or prohibits a thing, for the benefit of a person or class of person, one injured by reason of a violation of it, if free from fault himself, is entitled to maintain an action against him by whose disobedience he has suffered injury. This is true whether the statute is penal in its character or not, a violation of the statute being negligence per se, or legal negligence. Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913). This opinion was overruled in Waller v. Engelke, 227 M 470, 741 P2d 385, 44 St. Rep. 1241 (1987), which held that the pari delicto doctrine, found in 1-3-215, does not necessarily bar a plaintiff's negligence action against a defendant because the plaintiff himself violated a statute. Conduct prohibited by law that is not strongly condemned by public policy as a matter of serious criminal conduct or delinquency may not be sufficient to bar recovery. See Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Independent Contractors: One who does not sustain the relation of employer to any of the men employed by subcontractors is not answerable for the conduct of the latter in requiring their men to work more than 8 hours per day. St. v. Hughes, 38 M 468, 100 P 610 (1909).

Constitutionality: This statute, prior to its amendment, was constitutional. St. v. Livingston Concrete Bldg. & Mfg. Co., 34 M 570, 87 P 980 (1906).

Attorney General's Opinions

Holiday Pay Applicable to County Road Employees Who Work Ten-Hour Days: County road and bridge department employees regularly working 10-hour days 4 days a week are entitled to 8 hours' pay under 2-18-603 for all nonworked holidays. 43 A.G. Op. 14 (1989).

Firefighters — Receipt of Compensatory Time Off: A firefighter may receive compensatory time off for bonus hours worked in excess of 40 in one week, and under 7-5-4101 the governing body of a city has the authority to manage the affairs of the city, including entering into a contract providing compensatory time off for firefighters. 39 A.G. Op. 35 (1981), followed in 45 A.G. Op. 21 (1994).

Four-Day Workweek: Local law enforcement agencies may, with the consent of affected employees, schedule a 40-hour workweek consisting of 4 consecutive 10-hour days. 38 A.G. Op. 83 (1980).

Hours of Labor and Compensation: An agency of state government may permit an employee to work more than 8 hours in any workday, but overtime need only be paid for hours worked in excess of 40 hours in any one workweek, and paid days off for annual leave, legal holidays, jury duty, and military leave are not counted as hours worked in computing weekly overtime. 37 A.G. Op. 16 (1977).

Highway Patrolman Workweek: This section does not mandate a 5-day, 40-hour workweek for highway patrolmen. 27 A.G. Op. 28 (1957).

School Janitors: Eight hours constitute a day's work for all janitors in schools, and therefore a school board may not contract to employ janitors for a workday in excess of 8 hours. 20 A.G. Op. 105 (1943).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 465 in definition of displaced homemaker in (b)(i) after "financial assistance" substituted "as defined in 53-4-201" for "under the FAIM financial assistance, as defined in 53-2-902". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 45, Ch. 465, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to payments made after January 1, 2001, for mental health services provided to children with serious emotional disturbances for whom mental health services are not provided by any other public mental health services program and whose family income is at or below 150% of the federal poverty level."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 486 in definition of displaced homemaker, in (b) after "receive", substituted "financial assistance under the FAIM financial assistance, as defined in 53-2-902" for "assistance under the program for aid to families with dependent children". Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 50, Ch. 486, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 127 inserted definition of adult; and in definition of displaced homemaker, in introductory phrase, substituted "adult" for "individual", in (a), after "has worked", substituted current language relating to care for home and family without remuneration for "in the home for at least 3 years providing unpaid household services for family members" and substituted second phrase relating to former dependence on public assistance or relative for "is not gainfully employed or is underemployed", in (b)(i) substituted current language relating to ineligibility of youngest dependent child for AFDC assistance for "has had or would have difficulty securing paid employment", in (b)(ii) substituted current language relating to unemployment or underemployment for "was dependent on the income of another family member but is no longer supported by such income, was dependent on federal assistance but is no longer eligible for such assistance, or whose eligibility for such federal assistance will be terminated within 6 months", and inserted (b)(iii) relating to criminal offender. Chapter Compiler's Comments
1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 500, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the department of labor and industry authority to adopt administrative rules. It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules to implement a self-funding registration program for contractors to ensure that:
(1) contractors are in compliance with the laws governing workers' compensation coverage, unemployment insurance coverage, and other state laws; and
(2) all persons in the construction business are operating on a "level playing field" with regard to compliance with state laws."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 548 in introduction substituted "A person who, pursuant to an oral or written contract, engages a construction contractor who is registered under this chapter on the date of the contract is not liable as an employer for workers' compensation coverage under 39-71-405, for unemployment insurance coverage, or for wages and fringe benefits for" for "A contractor engaging the services of another contractor is not liable as an employer for workers' compensation and unemployment insurance coverage for the other contractor or for any employee of the other contractor if the contractor verifies with the department that the other contractor with whom the contractor is contracting for services is registered as provided under this chapter"; deleted former (1) through (4) that read: "(1) A person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor may not bring or maintain an action in any court of this state for the collection of compensation for the performance of any work or for breach of contract for which registration is required under this chapter without alleging and proving that the contractor was a registered contractor and held a current and valid certificate of registration at the time the contractor entered the contract for the performance of work.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the court may not find a contractor in compliance with the registration requirements of this chapter unless:

(a) the department has on file the information required by 39-9-202; and

(b) the contractor has a current bond or other security as required by 39-9-203.

(3) In determining whether a contractor is in compliance with the registration requirements of this chapter, the court shall consider the length of time during which the contractor did not hold a valid certificate of registration.

(4) A contractor may not bring or maintain a lien claim under Title 71, chapter 3, part 5, unless the contractor is registered at the time of entering into a contract"; and inserted (1), (2), and (3) regarding registered construction contractors, their employees, and subcontractors. Termination: Section 19, Ch. 646, L. 1989, provided that the act terminates July 1, 1991.

Chapter Case Notes

Ability, Rather Than Advertisement, as Criteria for Judging Qualifications: Petitioner who claimed a veterans' preference contended that the criteria for judging position applicants was contained solely in the advertisement soliciting proposals. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that analysis of an applicant's ability to provide services outlined in the advertisement, rather than the advertisement itself, constituted the criteria for judging an applicant's qualifications. Hamner v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 233 M 271, 760 P2d 76, 45 St. Rep. 1481 (1988).

Contract Providing Monthly Payments Not Establishment of Employment Relationship: A county contract for provision of certain legal services expressly provided independent contractor status because: (1) the county had no right to control the firm that was awarded the contract; (2) the firm was customarily engaged in independent practice; and (3) the contract was unnecessary for the firm to continue its business. Because an independent contract was indicated by these facts, the veterans' preference did not apply to hiring of the contractor, despite the contention that a contract provision for monthly payments established an employment relationship. Hamner v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 233 M 271, 760 P2d 76, 45 St. Rep. 1481 (1988).

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 646, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 6] [39-29-112] requires the department of administration to adopt rules to implement [sections 1 through 5] [Title 39, ch. 29]. The legislature intends the rules to adequately provide for the administration of the point preference provided for in [section 2] [39-29-102] and the retention preference provided for in [section 5] [39-29-111], but to include only those rules that are reasonably necessary.

It is the desire of the legislature that the department take all necessary steps in formulating, proposing, and adopting rules to ensure that the public, particularly those persons and organizations that have shown past interest in the employment preference law, is afforded sufficient time and opportunity to participate in the rulemaking procedure. The department should give ample notice and hold necessary hearings to ensure adequate public participation.

Rules adopted by the department apply to both state and local government employers. In formulating its rules, the department should take this into consideration and adopt rules that can be used and applied by the broad spectrum of public employers."

PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES
PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT PREFERENCE

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Discrimination Statutes Not Violated: Sections 12 and 13, Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983, codified as 49-2-405 and 49-3-103(2), provide that application of an employment preference provided for by 10-2-402, 39-30-101 through 39-30-103, 39-30-106 through 39-30-108, 39-30-201 through 39-30-203, 39-30-206, and 39-30-207, by a public employer, as defined in 39-30-103, may not be construed to violate Chapter 2 or 3 of Title 49.

Effective Date — Applicability — Retroactive Repealer of Former Veterans' and Disabled Civilians' Employment Preference Law: Section 16, Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983, read: "(1) This act is effective on passage and approval. [Approved December 20, 1983.]

(2) Except as provided in section 14, this act applies only to positions that are filled after the effective date of this act."

Section 14, Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983, read: "Sections 10-2-201 through 10-2-206, MCA, are repealed. This repeal applies retroactively to bar any claim of violation or application of 10-2-201 through 10-2-206 that has not been reduced to judgment, whether or not the judgment is final, on the effective date of this act [December 20, 1983]. Claims under 10-2-201 through 10-2-206 that have been reduced to judgment, whether or not the judgment is final, on the effective date of this act are enforceable. No claim for a violation of 10-2-201 through 10-2-206 may be made under section 8 of this act [39-30-206 and 39-30-207]."

Legislative History: Chapter 1, Sp. L. 1983 (Senate Bill 2, 1983 Special Session) was introduced by request of Joint Interim Subcommittee No. 4 of the 48th (1983) Legislature. The bill generated an extensive legislative history as it passed through the Legislature. See minutes of the Senate and House Judiciary Committees of 1983 Special Session (available at Montana Historical Society in Helena).

Severability Clause: Section 15, Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983, was a severability clause.

Constitutional Provisions: Montana Constitution, Article II, section 35, provides that the Legislature may give Montana veterans special considerations. Veterans' preference provisions may also be found in: Colo. Const., Article 12, section 14; N.J. Const., Article VII, section 1, paragraph 2; and N.Y. Const., Article 5, section 6.

Chapter Case Notes

Use of Point System Prior to Application of Preference: It was within the legislative intent of abolishment of the absolute employment preference for a hiring agency to compare applicants' qualifications through use of a point system before considering whether the preference should be applied. When point scores indicated applicants were not substantially equally qualified, failure to apply the preference was not an error. Olson v. Dept. of Revenue, 235 M 31, 765 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 2137 (1988).

Veterans' Preference Claim Based on Gratuity — No Express Reservation Through Stipulation: Plaintiff Jensen filed an amended petition to enforce employment preference that contained three counts. Thereafter, the parties filed a stipulated set of facts and agreement that the court would hear only Count I. The stipulation reserved all claims and defenses arising from Counts II and III. The District Court ruled on Count I, finding Jensen had been denied his veterans' preference, and the ruling was then appealed to the Supreme Court. While the appeal was pending, the Legislature met in special session and enacted a new Veterans' and Handicapped Persons' Employment Preference Act that retroactively repealed the old Veterans' Preference Act under which Jensen had filed his amended petition. The state then filed a motion to dismiss Counts II and III, and the motion was granted by the District Court. On appeal, Jensen questioned whether Count II, which has been expressly reserved by the stipulation, survived the Legislature's retroactive repealer. He argued that the stipulation created an obligation on behalf of the state to reserve the claim for an indefinite period and regardless of legislative action. The Supreme Court held that the stipulation must be viewed as an agreement to reserve a claim based not on a vested right but on a gratuity that the Legislature was empowered to repeal at any time, and that the stipulation reserved only what existed at the time it was entered into. Jensen v. St. 221 M 42, 718 P2d 1335, 43 St. Rep. 621 (1986).

Veterans' Preference a Gratuity — Retroactive Repeal: Plaintiff applied for a position with the Montana University System, claiming entitlement to the then statutory veterans' preference in employment. He was not interviewed for the job; a nonveteran was hired. Plaintiff petitioned the District Court for an order to show cause why he should not have been employed. Before a hearing was held, the veterans' preference was repealed. Plaintiff's filing of a claim to what was a government gratuity does not change the gratuity to a vested right. Because the preference was a gratuity, its repeal did not violate the Due Process Clause of the state or federal constitution. Violation of the preference statute did not result in a compensable injury within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., which provides that courts "shall be open to every person, and speedy remedy afforded for every injury of person, property, or character". Repeal of the preference statute did not deprive plaintiff of a remedy for an injury. Femling v. Mont. St. Univ., 220 M 133, 713 P2d 996, 43 St. Rep. 235 (1986).

Retroactivity of Employment Preference — No Equal Protection Violation: A provision (Ch. 1, sec. 14, Sp. L. 1983) in the 1983 employment preference law (Title 39, ch. 30), making the repeal of the former law retroactive, is not a violation of Art. II, sec. 4, of the Montana Constitution or the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th amendment to the United State Constitution. The proper standard of review in this case is the rational basis test since the employment preference law neither burdens a fundamental right nor involves a suspect class. The law is valid under the rational basis test since it was a rational response to the Legislature's legitimate concerns of fiscal integrity, employee competence, and academic freedom created by the implications of the decision in Crabtree v. Mont. St. Library, 204 M 398, 665 P2d 231, 40 St. Rep. 963 (1983). Nick v. Dept. of Highways, 219 M 168, 711 P2d 795, 42 St. Rep. 1926 (1985).

Veterans' Preference Gratuity — Not Vested Right: Plaintiff served in the capacity of deputy clerk of the Supreme Court for 20 years. He ran for the Clerk of Court position but was defeated. The newly elected Clerk terminated plaintiff and appointed a new deputy. Plaintiff contended that as a veteran he was entitled to a preference in employment and that the Legislature's repeal of the former veterans' preference law was invalid. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the veterans' preference rights granted under the repealed portion of the veterans' preference law are not rights earned through years of service to the state, but are a gratuity given to citizens of Montana by the state to show its appreciation for service in the armed forces. They do not amount to rights vested in the veterans. The Legislature could properly repeal the law by majority vote at any time, and veterans acting under the old law are considered to have acted in contemplation of the Legislature's power of repeal. Conboy v. St., 214 M 492, 693 P2d 547, 42 St. Rep. 120 (1985).

Crabtree Retroactively Applied: On June 16, 1982, the Department of Labor hired Waltermire to fill a position. Another Department employee filed a petition on June 21, 1983, claiming he was a veteran while Waltermire was not, and therefore he should have been hired instead. On June 16, 1983, the Supreme Court issued its Crabtree decision holding that the then current veterans' preference law (10-2-201 through 10-2-206, repealed in 1983) granted an absolute preference. That decision applies retroactively to Jensen's claim, and the potential impact upon one person, Waltermire, who may lose his job, was insufficient to rule that Crabtree did not apply retroactively. Jensen v. St., 213 M 84, 689 P2d 1231, 41 St. Rep. 1971 (1984).

Court Order to Hire Bypassed Veteran — Improper Remedy: Although under the former veterans' preference law (10-2-201 through 10-2-206, repealed in 1983) the lower court had authority to order an appointing authority to comply with the law, the court did not have authority to order an appointing authority to grant to a veteran a job it had improperly denied him and granted to a nonveteran. The judiciary does not have and cannot be granted the executive power of appointment. The lower court was directed to order the employer to reopen the position to the original applicants, grant preference to the petitioner-veteran in this case and the other preferred applicants, and otherwise fill the position in accordance with Crabtree. Jensen v. St., 213 M 84, 689 P2d 1231, 41 St. Rep. 1971 (1984).

Preference Absolute Between Enactment and Repeal of Statute: The plain and unambiguous language of the former veterans' preference law (10-2-201 through 10-2-206, repealed in 1983) created an absolute preference that existed from its enactment in 1921 through its 1983 repeal. Jensen v. St., 213 M 84, 689 P2d 1231, 41 St. Rep. 1971 (1984).

39-30-103. Definitions.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendments: Chapter 339 in definition of initial hiring, in (b) in two places, substituted "subsection (3)(a)" for "subsections (3)(a)(i) through (3)(a)(v)" (voided by Ch. 472 amendment); and in definition of position, in first sentence near beginning after "means a", substituted "position occupied by a permanent or seasonal employee" for "permanent or seasonal position", near middle, after "for", substituted "the state or a position occupied by" for "a state position or a", and after "seasonal" substituted "employee" for "position" and substituted language in (a) concerning temporary employee for former language that read: "a temporary position as defined in 2-18-101 for a state position or similar temporary position with a public employer other than the state". Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 472 in definition of eligible spouse substituted "person with a disability" for "handicapped person"; substituted person with a disability for handicapped person as defined term; in definition of mental impairment, in (a)(i) at beginning, deleted "suffering from" and substituted "disabling" for "handicapping"; adjusted internal references; and made minor changes in style.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 308 in definition of public employer, in (b) after "vocational-technical", deleted "center or"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 545 in definition of initial hiring, in (a)(ii) after "agency", deleted "such as the consumer counsel, environmental quality council, office of the legislative auditor, legislative council, or office of the legislative fiscal analyst"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definitions of eligible spouse and handicapped person substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1995 Transition: Section 81, Ch. 545, L. 1995, provided: "(1) The members of the legislative council, as provided in 5-11-101, the members of the legislative finance committee, as provided in 5-12-202, the members of the legislative audit committee, as provided in 5-13-202, and the members of the environmental quality council, as provided in 5-16-101, must be appointed as soon as possible following [the effective date of this section] [effective April 27, 1995].

(2) To implement the changes provided in [this act], the office of the legislative council, the office of budget and program planning, and the department of administration shall establish all necessary authorizations during the accounting preparation process known as the "turnaround" process, beginning in April or May 1995, to administer the several appropriations made by any means to programs of the legislative branch agencies consolidated under [sections 3 and 4] [5-2-503 and 5-2-504] for fiscal year 1996 or 1997 or the biennium ending June 30, 1997, as appropriations to a single legislative agency while maintaining the specific identification, legislative intent, and purpose for which the appropriations were made. During this transition, the executive director may authenticate documents as required to accomplish the purposes of [this act]. Appropriate changes on the statewide budgeting and accounting system and the payroll, personnel, and position control system must also be made and authorized as required to accomplish the purposes of [this act].

(3) Personnel and property of the environmental quality council are transferred to the legislative services division effective July 1, 1995."

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Termination Provision Repealed: Section 1, Ch. 12, L. 1991, repealed sec. 19, Ch. 646, L. 1989, which terminated the 1989 amendments to this section July 1, 1991. Repealer effective February 7, 1991.

1989 Amendment: Deleted definitions of active duty, disabled veteran, veteran, and war or declared national emergency; in definition of eligible spouse deleted (a) that read: "(a) the unremarried surviving spouse of a veteran who died while on active duty or whose death resulted from a service-connected disability" and after "the spouse of" deleted former (b)(i) and (b)(ii) that read: "(i) a disabled veteran determined by the United States veterans administration to have a 100% service-connected disability who is unable to use his employment preference because of his disability;

(ii) a person on active duty determined by the United States government to be missing in action or a prisoner of war"; corrected internal references; and made minor changes in form and phraseology.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 646, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: In (8)(b), before "vocational-technical", deleted "postsecondary".

1997 Amendment: Chapter 472 near end of first sentence substituted "persons with disabilities" for "handicapped persons".

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Senate Bill 2 (Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983) read: "A statement of intent is provided to address the nature of the employment preference granted in the bill. The legislature intends that public employers seek and hire the most qualified persons for positions in public employment. It is also the intent of the legislature that the nature of the preference is a relative one in that it is to be applied among two or more applicants for a position who have substantially equal qualifications. Substantially equal qualifications does not mean a situation in which two or more applicants are exactly equally qualified. It means a range within which two applicants must be considered to be substantially equal in view of the qualifications set for the job. Qualifications should include job-related knowledge, skill, and abilities. The legislature recognizes that public employers use a variety of scored and unscored selection procedures such as conventional written examinations, training and experience requirements, performance tests, structured oral interviews, or combinations of these. The legislature does not intend to specify the type of selection procedure to be used by a public employer.

A statement of intent is also required for this bill because section 9 [39-30-106] requires the department of administration to adopt rules implementing sections 1 through 10 [this chapter] and to consult with the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] in formulating rules for the certification of handicapped persons.

The legislature intends the rules to adequately provide for the administration of the employment preference law, but to include only those rules that are reasonably necessary to implement sections 1 through 10 [this chapter].

It is the desire of the legislature that the department take all necessary steps in formulating, proposing, and adopting rules to ensure that the public, particularly those persons and organizations that have shown past interest in the employment preference law, is afforded sufficient time and opportunity to participate in the rulemaking procedure. The department should give such notice and hold such hearings as will ensure adequate public participation.

Rules adopted by the department apply to all initial hirings to positions by all public employers. In formulating its rules the department should take this into consideration and adopt rules that can be used and applied by the broad spectrum of state and local public employers subject to sections 1 through 10 [this chapter].

It is the intent of the legislature that the department formulate and adopt rules relating, but not limited, to the following matters and take into account the following considerations.

(1) Claiming preference — documentation and verification. Rules relating to the job application process should include the manner in which a preference should be claimed when a job is applied for. They should prescribe the means by which the applicant must document and submit evidence of such things as the applicant's status as a Montana resident veteran, disabled veteran, handicapped person, or eligible spouse. It is the intent of the legislature that rules for claiming and documenting a preference do not place unreasonable burdens upon applicants.

(2) Handicapped persons — certification. The rules should provide that a person will not be denied handicapped status and certification merely because of his current or former employment, should address the matter of what constitutes a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, and outline in what instances a physical or mental impairment limits a person's ability to obtain, retain, or advance in employment. The department may wish to do this by a combination of a statement of general principles and specific examples.

Rules should provide for a certification process that allows, when appropriate, permanent certification of those impairments considered to be permanent in nature. A procedure for extension or loss of certification should be provided for those instances in which a handicap is or may be temporary.

(3) Military conflicts. The legislature intends the rules to apply federal law to determine what constitutes a campaign or expedition for which a campaign badge is authorized by the Congress of the United States or department of defense.

(4) Honorable discharges. The legislature intends the rules to apply federal law in defining honorable discharges.

(5) Hiring decision notices and explanations. The legislature intends the rules to provide for the form and content of written notices of hiring decisions, including whether the position was obtained as the result of application of the preference by the public employer, written requests for explanations of hiring decisions, and written explanations of hiring decisions.

(6) Reopening of selection process. The legislature intends the rules to provide for a method of reopening the selection process for a job should a court order the selection process reopened, and include a method of giving notice to those who applied for the job informing them of the reopening and the reason therefor.

(7) Jobs subject to federal law. The legislature intends the rules to identify or provide a method of identifying work or positions to which the employment preference does not apply by virtue of section 10 [39-30-108]."

Case Notes

Veterans' Preference Gratuity — Not Vested Right: Plaintiff served in the capacity of deputy clerk of the Supreme Court for 20 years. He ran for the Clerk of Court position but was defeated. The newly elected Clerk terminated plaintiff and appointed a new deputy. Plaintiff contended that as a veteran he was entitled to a preference in employment and that the Legislature's repeal of the former veterans' preference law was invalid. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the veterans' preference rights granted under the repealed portion of the veterans' preference law are not rights earned through years of service to the state, but are a gratuity given to citizens of Montana by the state to show its appreciation for service in the armed forces. They do not amount to rights vested in the veterans. The Legislature could properly repeal the law by majority vote at any time, and veterans acting under the old law are considered to have acted in contemplation of the Legislature's power of repeal. Conboy v. St., 214 M 492, 693 P2d 547, 42 St. Rep. 120 (1985).

Former Law Not Discriminatory: Section 10-2-203 (repealed Ch. 1, Sp. L. 1983), providing that veterans and certain other persons "shall be preferred for appointment and employment", was construed to grant an "absolute" preference to a preferred person with the minimum qualifications and with the business capacity, competence, and education to discharge the duties of the job. In this case a blind person sued for failure to grant her a job under the disabled civilians preference. The court stated that the statute did not conflict with Title 49 sex and other discrimination provisions and indicated that it did not run afoul of equal protection considerations. Crabtree v. Mont. St. Library, 204 M 398, 665 P2d 231, 40 St. Rep. 963 (1983).

Judicial Appointment to Job: The 1943 amendment to the former employment preference law, 10-2-201 through 10-2-206, insofar as it attempted to confer authority upon the court to make an appointment and insofar as it undertook to confer judicial power without notice and hearing was declared unconstitutional and void. No Duty Where No Vacancy Exists: Mandamus was improper to compel the Mayor of a city to transmit the application of an honorably discharged World War veteran for the position of patrolman on the police force to the city Police Commission, since neither under 10-2-211 nor under 7-32-4108, relating generally to appointments to the force, was the Mayor required to transmit such applications when no vacancy on the police force existed. State ex rel. Montgomery v. Mayor, 112 M 275, 114 P2d 1046 (1941).

Veteran to Qualify Physically: Although veteran's application must be transmitted to Police Commission by Mayor when a vacancy exists, he may not be coerced by Writ of Mandate to forward application after his investigation reveals veteran is not qualified physically due to a back injury. Court will not substitute its discretion for that of Mayor unless it is shown Mayor abused his discretion by making his decision unfairly or in bad faith. Horvath v. Chapter Case Notes

Clear Language of Collective Bargaining Agreement Excluding State Unfair Labor Practice Charge From Grievance and Arbitration Procedure — Deferral to Arbitration Procedure Improper: Winchester asserted that his employer, Mountain Line, committed unfair labor practices by discharging him for union activities and because he was shop steward. Mountain Line contended that Winchester was discharged for violation of the employee's handbook. The District Court decided that Winchester's unfair labor practice claim was subject to the final and binding arbitration clause in the collective bargaining agreement and held that the Board of Personnel Appeals properly deferred to the arbitration procedure. One section of the discrimination provisions in the collective bargaining agreement obviously covered Winchester's claim regarding union activities. However, the clear language of the very next section specifically excluded any alleged violation of state statutes from the arbitration procedure. The Supreme Court cited Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982), for the proposition that only in those cases in which it is certain that the arbitration clause is not susceptible to an interpretation that covers the dispute is an employee entitled to sidestep the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement. Therefore, the District Court erred in ruling that the Board properly deferred to the arbitration procedure in addressing the state law violations. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Winchester v. Mountain Line, 1999 MT 134, 294 M 517, 982 P2d 1024, 56 St. Rep. 540 (1999).

Proof of Retaliatory Discharge — Claim Outside Context of Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Preempted by Federal Law: To prove retaliatory discharge involving sexual harassment, it must be shown that: (1) the employee was discharged; (2) the employee was subjected to sexual harassment during the course of employment; and (3) the employer's motivation for the discharge was to retaliate for the employee's resistance to the sexual harassment. When this factual inquiry does not turn on the meaning of any term of a collective bargaining agreement, the wrongful discharge claim is considered independent of the agreement for purposes of preemption under federal law. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), following Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), and followed in Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), and, with respect to sexual discrimination, Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995).

Temporary Employment — No Recall Rights: A labor agreement provided that an employee would not have recall rights under a seniority clause unless he was employed for 6 continuous months. A union employee was hired to temporarily replace an injured permanent employee and worked for a period 2 days short of 6 months. The injured employee returned but worked only 3 days. Twenty days later, the union employee was rehired for a period 1 day short of 6 months. The employer then hired a permanent employee to replace the union employee, who contended the contract was violated by the employer's failure to recall him for the permanent position. Recall rights were not earned by the union employee under the contract because the position fell short of 6 months on both occasions. The 20-day break in employment represented a substantial break in service; therefore, the employment was not continuous or renewable. Local 1334 v. Great Falls, 233 M 432, 760 P2d 99, 45 St. Rep. 1611 (1988).

Alleged Violations of Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempted by Federal Labor Law: Although a collective bargaining agreement did not specifically address standards to be applied in a situation where an employee was discharged, tort claims alleging negligence and breach of good faith were substantially dependent on terms in the contract establishing wage schedules, union representation, and adherence to a grievance and arbitration procedure. In determining that summary judgment was proper, the Supreme Court cited Allis-Chalmers v. Lueck, 471 US 202, 85 L Ed 2d 206, 105 S Ct 1904 (1985), and reasoned that preemption of the tort claims by federal law was necessary to ensure a unified body of labor contract law and to preserve the central role of arbitration in labor disputes. Smith v. Mont. Power Co., 225 M 166, 731 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 124 (1987). See also Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 1293 (1987), where it was held that a party may not avoid the preemptive effect of federal labor law when a dispute involves an interpretation of a union contract by pleading in tort and that vacation pay is one item preempted by operation of federal law. But see Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), which relied on Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), to partially overrule Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301 (1986), and subsequent cases, including Smith, to the extent that a state law claim is preempted by federal law only when its resolution requires construing the collective bargaining agreement, even if the state law analysis involves the same factual considerations as the contractual determination under the collective bargaining agreement of whether the employee was discharged for just cause. Foster was followed in Hanley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 254 M 379, 838 P2d 408, 49 St. Rep. 755 (1992), Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Federal Law — Use of Compatible State Law to Effectuate: State law that is compatible with federal labor law may be resorted to in order to find a rule that will best effectuate federal policy. Audit Services, Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491, 41 St. Rep. 1388 (1984).

NLRA — Aid to Interpretation:

Because of the similarity between the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) and the Montana public employees' collective bargaining law, the Supreme Court found federal administrative and judicial construction of the NLRA instructive and often persuasive regarding the meaning of Montana's labor relations law. Great Falls v. Young, 211 M 13, 686 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 1174 (1984).

The Montana Supreme Court looks to the construction placed on the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) by the federal courts as an aid in interpretation of the Montana Public Employees Collective Bargaining Act. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982), followed in Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 2163 (1986).

Right to Strike: Employees under Montana's collective bargaining law are not prohibited from striking. If the Legislature had intended to limit their right to strike, it could have so expressly provided, as it has provided in other occupations. Dept. of Highways v. Pub. Employees Craft Council, 165 M 349, 529 P2d 785 (1974).

Case Notes

Elimination of Lay Reader Program Not Grievance Subject to Arbitration: The board of trustees' elimination of a lay reader program was not an alleged violation of a specific provision of the collective bargaining agreement and therefore did not constitute a grievance that was subject to arbitration. Summary dismissal of an application by a teachers' association to compel arbitration was proper. Missoula County High School Educ. Ass'n v. Thus, after a change in representation of a public employees' labor bargaining unit, it would be proper to exclude supervisory employees from membership in that unit even though supervisory employees had been members of the unit prior to passage of Montana's public employees collective bargaining law (Ch. 441, L. 1973). In re Unit Clarification No. 6-80 v. Dept. of Administration, 217 M 230, 703 P2d 862, 42 St. Rep. 1157 (1985).

Grandfather Clause — Supervisory Personnel Allowed to Remain in Unit — Two-Part Test: The city of Billings and its firefighters' union requested the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) to conduct a hearing to clarify the membership of the bargaining unit. At issue was whether Local No. 521, the bargaining unit since 1968, fell within the grandfather clause of 39-31-109, or whether the unit contained supervisory personnel in violation of 39-31-201. The hearing officer recommended an order concluding the unit fell within the grandfather clause's protection. The city appealed the recommendation to the BPA. The BPA remanded the case to use a two-part test: (1) a determination of the nature of each position; and (2) whether the inclusion of the position would create an actual substantial conflict. The BPA then adopted the recommended order. The city appealed to the District Court, which overturned the decision, finding it to be arbitrary and capricious because inclusion of supervisory personnel in the unit created an inherent conflict. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that BPA's interpretation of 39-31-109 was rational and did not involve an abuse of discretion. The decision recognized a violation of 39-31-201, but in light of 39-31-109, the two-part test applied by BPA was a rational approach for determining unit membership. The hearing officer's findings relating to each position were supported by substantial credible evidence. There was no arbitrary or capricious action. The order of the BPA was reinstated. Billings v. Duty of Fair Representation — Breach as Unfair Labor Practice — Jurisdiction in BPA and District Court: Appellant was hired by the Great Falls Public Library as a bookmobile driver. Upon receipt of his first paycheck, he discovered he was paid for 20 hours per week as a driver and 20 hours per week as a clerk, at a lower rate. He asked his union to file a grievance on his behalf. He made the same request for over a year. The union continually refused to file a grievance, stating that the union and the city had a long standing oral agreement that drivers would be paid in that manner. Appellant then filed an unfair labor practice charge against the union alleging that it had breached its duty of fair representation. The Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) concluded that the union had breached its duty of fair representation. The union appealed to District Court, and the court, relying on Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604 (1979), decided that the BPA lacked the jurisdiction to decide such a claim. The rule of Ford which recognizes original jurisdiction in state District Courts to decide questions of fair representation is correct and stands, but certain dicta in Ford were based on a misinterpretation of federal labor law, on which Montana law is based, and cannot stand. Ford erroneously concluded that breach of a duty of fair representation was not an unfair labor practice. The Supreme Court also no longer recognizes dicta in Ford, which stated that a finding by BPA on those matters would deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. BPA has jurisdiction to hear claims that a union has breached its duty of fair representation for administrative remedies, and original jurisdiction of such claims lies in the District Court. Teamsters Local 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 195 M 272, 635 P2d 1310, 38 St. Rep. 1841 (1981).

Jurisdiction: Defendant union's argument that the District Court had no jurisdiction because plaintiff's exclusive remedy was under Title 34, ch. 31, lacks merit. The chapter provides no remedy for an alleged breach of duty by a union's failure to fairly represent a grievance. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had jurisdiction, as opposed to the federal court. Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604, 36 St. Rep. 1485 (1979).

Collective Bargaining Agreement — Days of Leave in Addition to Legal Holidays: The Board of County Commissioners may enter into an agreement with county employees that grants a day of paid leave in addition to the enumerated legal holidays. The collective bargaining provision in question merely provides an additional paid day off to attend the county fair for those employees covered by the contract. The provision does not make "fair day" a "legal holiday" nor does it suggest that an employee may accumulate "fair days" as vacation. The provision contravenes no statutory determination of employee benefits. The provision falls within the area which is a proper subject for collective bargaining. 38 A.G. Op. 116 (1980).

Board of Personnel Appeals' Discretionary Power — Decertification Election: When unfair labor practices charges were pending against an employer, it was within statutory discretionary boundaries for the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) to refuse to hold a bargaining representative decertification election until the charges were no longer pending. A Writ of Mandamus to conduct a decertification election need not be obeyed by BPA under these conditions. Without a clear legal duty, mandamus does not lie. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. Case Notes

Payment of Fee in Lieu of Union Dues by Catholic Objecting to Union Stand on Abortion and Birth Control: A Roman Catholic teacher who opposed birth control and abortion on religious grounds objected to paying an agency fee under a collective bargaining agreement that allows payment of the fee in lieu of joining the unions, the fee being a payment for the collective bargaining efforts. She objected to paying the fee because one of the unions publicly supports birth control and abortion. The unions must reasonably accommodate her religious beliefs if they can do so without incurring undue hardship. Under federal civil rights law, a union with several means of reasonably accommodating an employee is free to select the one posing the least hardship to the union. Wolfe v. St., 255 M 336, 843 P2d 338, 49 St. Rep. 1042 (1992).

Case Notes

Three-Year Delay Between Filing of Grievance and Board of Personnel Appeals Hearing — Possible Union Interference: When appellant was not rehired by the city of Billings for a vacant position, he filed a grievance with the State Board of Personnel Appeals (Board), charging that the city was discriminating against him for earlier filing an unfair labor practice charge against the city. There was a 3-year delay between the filing of the grievance and a Board hearing, allegedly caused in part by labor union interference. Although the union does not owe appellant a duty of fair representation in this case under this statute because appellant was not attempting to resolve his claim through binding arbitration or internal union procedures, the union is not entitled to affirmatively interfere with appellant's unfair labor practice charge. Thus, the District Court erred in dismissing appellant's claim against the union for failure to state a claim; it cannot be said as a matter of law that appellant can prove no set of facts stating a claim against the union. Klundt v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 219 M 347, 712 P2d 776, 43 St. Rep. 1 (1986). See also In re Connell v. Ford erroneously concluded that breach of a duty of fair representation was not an unfair labor practice. The Supreme Court also no longer recognizes dicta in Ford, which stated that a finding by BPA on those matters would deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. BPA has jurisdiction to hear claims that a union has breached its duty of fair representation for administrative remedies, and original jurisdiction of such claims lies in the District Court. Teamsters Local 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 195 M 272, 635 P2d 1310, 38 St. Rep. 1841 (1981).

Duty of Union in Processing Members' Grievances: The District Court erred in finding that the union had breached its duty not to discriminate between its members in representing a member's grievance and in denying the union's motion to dismiss. A union is not liable for refusing to process a grievance so long as such a refusal is not arbitrary, the product of bad faith, or discriminatory. Further, a union has similar discretion in interpreting its own rules. Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604, 36 St. Rep. 1485 (1979).

Board of Personnel Appeals' Discretionary Power — Decertification Election: When unfair labor practices charges were pending against an employer, it was within statutory discretionary boundaries for the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) to refuse to hold a bargaining representative decertification election until the charges were no longer pending. A Writ of Mandamus to conduct a decertification election need not be obeyed by BPA under these conditions. Without a clear legal duty, mandamus does not lie. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. Case Notes

Duty of Fair Representation — Breach as Unfair Labor Practice — Jurisdiction in BPA and District Court: Appellant was hired by the Great Falls Public Library as a bookmobile driver. Upon receipt of his first paycheck, he discovered he was paid for 20 hours per week as a driver and 20 hours per week as a clerk, at a lower rate. He asked his union to file a grievance on his behalf. He made the same request for over a year. The union continually refused to file a grievance, stating that the union and the city had a long standing oral agreement that drivers would be paid in that manner. Appellant then filed an unfair labor practice charge against the union alleging that it had breached its duty of fair representation. The Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) concluded that the union had breached its duty of fair representation. The union appealed to District Court, and the court, relying on Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604 (1979), decided that the BPA lacked the jurisdiction to decide such a claim. The rule of Ford which recognizes original jurisdiction in state District Courts to decide questions of fair representation is correct and stands, but certain dicta in Ford were based on a misinterpretation of federal labor law, on which Montana law is based, and cannot stand. Ford erroneously concluded that breach of a duty of fair representation was not an unfair labor practice. The Supreme Court also no longer recognizes dicta in Ford, which stated that a finding by BPA on those matters would deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. BPA has jurisdiction to hear claims that a union has breached its duty of fair representation for administrative remedies, and original jurisdiction of such claims lies in the District Court. Part 3
Bargaining

Part Case Notes

Proof of Retaliatory Discharge — Claim Outside Context of Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Preempted by Federal Law: To prove retaliatory discharge involving sexual harassment, it must be shown that: (1) the employee was discharged; (2) the employee was subjected to sexual harassment during the course of employment; and (3) the employer's motivation for the discharge was to retaliate for the employee's resistance to the sexual harassment. When this factual inquiry does not turn on the meaning of any term of a collective bargaining agreement, the wrongful discharge claim is considered independent of the agreement for purposes of preemption under federal law. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), following Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), and followed, with respect to sexual discrimination, in Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995).

Alleged Violations of Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempted by Federal Labor Law: Although a collective bargaining agreement did not specifically address standards to be applied in a situation where an employee was discharged, tort claims alleging negligence and breach of good faith were substantially dependent on terms in the contract establishing wage schedules, union representation, and adherence to a grievance and arbitration procedure. In determining that summary judgment was proper, the Supreme Court cited Allis-Chalmers v. Lueck, 471 US 202, 85 L Ed 2d 206, 105 S Ct 1904 (1985), and reasoned that preemption of the tort claims by federal law was necessary to ensure a unified body of labor contract law and to preserve the central role of arbitration in labor disputes. Smith v. Mont. Power Co., 225 M 166, 731 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 124 (1987). See also Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 1293 (1987), where it was held that a party may not avoid the preemptive effect of federal labor law when a dispute involves an interpretation of a union contract by pleading in tort and that vacation pay is one item preempted by operation of federal law. But see Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), which relied on Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), to partially overrule Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301 (1986), and subsequent cases, including Smith, to the extent that a state law claim is preempted by federal law only when its resolution requires construing the collective bargaining agreement, even if the state law analysis involves the same factual considerations as the contractual determination under the collective bargaining agreement of whether the employee was discharged for just cause. Foster was followed in Hanley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 254 M 379, 838 P2d 408, 49 St. Rep. 755 (1992), Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Collective Bargaining Grievance Procedure to Be Utilized Prior to Court Action: An employee must use the contract grievance procedure contained in a collective bargaining agreement prior to seeking a remedy in District Court. Plaintiff argued that his constitutional right to due process was violated and that right cannot be waived by private contract, thereby allowing him to proceed directly to District Court. The court disagreed, holding that the grievance procedure contained in the collective bargaining agreement satisfied any due process requirement. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982), followed in Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 2163 (1986), Fellows v. Circumstances Warranting Good Faith Discharge — Claim Not Stating Public Concern — Summary Judgment Proper: An employee was issued reprimands, notices of corrective discipline, and notices of punitive discipline but still failed to perform assigned duties or correct job inadequacies. He had the chance to rebut charges of incompetency but chose not to do so. He had the right of grievance but failed to exercise it. His claim of wrongful discharge did not state a public policy concern, but rather was a personal matter. The Supreme Court declined to interfere with the employer's right to manage its affairs and hire employees who will perform their jobs so long as there is a standard of discipline and the employer abides by it in good faith. Summary dismissal of the wrongful discharge claim was proper. Belcher v. Dept. of State Lands, 228 M 352, 742 P2d 475, 44 St. Rep. 1591 (1987).

Arbitrator's Award Granting Reinstatement to Teachers Upheld: The Supreme Court rejected school district's contention that the arbitrator of a teacher termination case exceeded his authority by determining that the remedy for firing, in violation of union contract procedures, was to offer full reinstatement, which would thereby confer tenured status to the teachers. The school district, contrary to its assertion, had the statutory and constitutional authority to enter into collective bargaining agreements, and the provisions at issue were proper subjects of bargaining. The trustees, having entered into the agreement in good faith, were bound by it. When parties agree to binding arbitration, the role of a court in reviewing the arbitrator's findings is a narrow one. Reassignment From Administrator to Teacher Within Power of School Board — Tenure Laws Not Violated: Sorlie was an elementary teacher for 20 years prior to assuming an administrative position. In 1980, because a mill levy failed, the school board eliminated Sorlie's position and offered her a job as an elementary schoolteacher. Sorlie argued that she was demoted in violation of Montana's tenure laws. The Supreme Court found the two positions to be comparable positions for purpose of tenure although they are functionally dissimilar. The court concluded that the reassignment, without reduction in salary, for legitimate financial constraints, is justifiable and not contrary to tenure laws. Sorlie was removed from her administrative position pursuant to the board's power to financially manage the school district, and this action was in accordance with 39-31-303. Sorlie v. School District, 205 M 22, 667 P2d 400, 40 St. Rep. 1070 (1983).

Substituting Timeclocks Not Managerial Prerogative: The substituting of timeclocks as a more efficient method to record attendance was a change from the established rule since the past attendance policy did not apply to every union member under the contract. Thus, it was not a managerial prerogative but subject to mandatory and binding arbitration. Butte Teachers' Union v. Bd. of Educ., 173 M 215, 567 P2d 51 (1977).

District Residency Requirements of School Employees: A school board may, as a condition of employment, require that school district employees be residents of the school district. Mandatory Method of Calculating Longevity — Collective Bargaining Not Applicable: A Board of County Commissioners sought to implement a collective bargaining agreement provision that authorized longevity increases to Deputy Sheriffs, predicated on years of service, including any years during which the Deputy's base salary was set at the same level as the previous year. However, 7-4-2510 constitutes a mandatory condition of employment that a Board of County Commissioners may not deviate from or alter through collective bargaining. Therefore, the collective bargaining agreement provision was held unenforceable to the extent it permitted inclusion of service years for the purpose of calculating longevity pay increases expressly excluded under 7-4-2510. 43 A.G. Op. 34 (1989). See also 42 A.G. Op. 37 (1987).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 582 in (2) inserted exception clause; inserted (5) providing that if a school is a party to it, an agreement must contain a grievance procedure culminating in final and binding arbitration, that grievant may have either final and binding arbitration or any other available legal method and forum, but not both, that after submission to arbitration, grievant and the exclusive representative waive any right to pursue an action or complaint seeking the same remedy, and that if a complaint or other action is filed, arbitration seeking the same remedy is forbidden; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 28, 1993.

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 582, L. 1993, provided that [this act] applies to agreements entered into on or after [the effective date of this act], except that subsection (5) is applicable to agreements for school years that begin on or after July 1, 1996. Effective April 28, 1993.

Case Notes

Collective Bargaining — Arbitration — Once Matter Determined to Be Arbitrable Procedure, Wholly Within Jurisdiction of Arbitrator: The union filed a grievance on an employee's behalf, challenging the employee's transfer as a violation of the collective bargaining agreement. Later, the employee reached a retirement agreement with Montana Power Company (MPC) that included a release by the employee of grievances against MPC. MPC claimed that the arbitrability of the grievance was precluded by the private contract entered into by MPC and the employee. MPC went to court seeking an alternative writ of prohibition to prevent arbitration. The court issued a writ of prohibition and, after hearing, made the writ permanent. The union appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that this was a procedural, rather than a substantive, challenge to the collective bargaining agreement and that once a grievance is determined to be arbitrable according to the collective bargaining agreement, subsequent procedural questions are wholly within the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 55, 929 P2d 839, 53 St. Rep. 1296 (1996).

Statutory Duty of City Council to Hold Termination Hearing Not Superseded by City Policy or Collective Bargaining Agreement: Phillips was terminated from his employment as a full-time firefighter for the city of Livingston. Before his termination, the city manager held a termination hearing. Phillips argued that the hearing was held in violation of 7-33-4124, requiring the hearing to be held before the City Council. The city responded that the termination procedures followed were provided in the city policy and procedures manual that was included in the firefighters' collective bargaining agreement and that the provisions of that agreement controlled pursuant to subsection (3) of this section. The Supreme Court noted that the agreement adopted the city's procedures manual that allowed the manager to hold the hearing but that the agreement also referenced termination action "by the appropriate authority". Because the appropriate authority under 7-33-4124 was the City Council, the Supreme Court held that the agreement and the city's policies did not supersede state statute. Phillips v. Livingston, 268 M 156, 885 P2d 528, 51 St. Rep. 1227 (1994), followed, as to the inability of a city charter to supersede the statutory duty of a City Council to hold a disciplinary hearing, in Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Not All Disputes Subject to Arbitration by Mere Presence of Grievance Clause: Statutes governing collective bargaining for public employees do not provide a basis for requiring arbitration. Although a bargaining agreement may contain a grievance procedure culminating in arbitration, the mere existence of that provision does not require all controversies to be arbitrated, nor does entry by a party into a bargaining agreement containing a grievance procedure imply consent to submitting all disputes to arbitration. Under 27-5-115, the District Court must determine the arbitrability of a controversy when one party denies that the issue requires arbitration. If the court determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy does not exist, denial of an application for arbitration is proper. Missoula County High School Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 259 M 438, 857 P2d 696, 50 St. Rep. 870 (1993).

Alleged Violations of Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempted by Federal Labor Law: Although a collective bargaining agreement did not specifically address standards to be applied in a situation where an employee was discharged, tort claims alleging negligence and breach of good faith were substantially dependent on terms in the contract establishing wage schedules, union representation, and adherence to a grievance and arbitration procedure. Explicit Contractual Provision Giving Greater Protection Than Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — No Application of Covenant: Where a collective bargaining agreement provided explicitly that employees could be discharged "only for just cause", the Supreme Court declined to imply the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to the employment relationship since the contractual agreement provided greater protection than the implied covenant. Such a covenant generally applies to "at will" employment contracts. Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 2163 (1986). See also Riley v. Arbitration of Teacher Contract Nonrenewal: Nonrenewal of nontenured teacher's contract was not a "grievance" within a collective bargaining agreement with the school board and subject to arbitration provisions of the agreement when not allowed under former law regarding negotiations for teachers. Wibaux Educ. Ass'n v. Wibaux County High School, 175 M 331, 573 P2d 1162 (1978).

Repeal of Ordinance Establishing Contract Right: A contract was created for the benefit of firefighters by the city's adoption of a resolution concerning longevity pay. Therefore, a subsequent resolution repealing the provision was unconstitutional as applied to firefighters covered by the contract in effect between the city and labor organization representing the firefighters at time of the repeal. Monetary Limit on Employment Dispute as Precluding Arbitration: A labor agreement, which contained a provision that any grievance involving a monetary issue in excess of $500 was subject to arbitration only if mutually agreed upon, was properly relied on by the District Court in excusing an employer from arbitrating a claim in excess of $500. Local 1334 v. Great Falls, 233 M 432, 760 P2d 99, 45 St. Rep. 1611 (1988).

Part 4
Unfair Labor Practices

Part Case Notes

Effort to Compel Arbitration — Alleged Violation of Duty to Bargain Not Properly Resolved by Arbitration: An employees' association asserted that a board of trustees failed to bargain collectively and that the violation constituted a grievance subject to arbitration. However, alleged violations of the duty to bargain collectively are subject to procedures and remedies set forth in the unfair labor practices statutes and are not properly resolved by arbitration. Further, the board's failure to collectively bargain was not a violation of a specific provision of the bargaining agreement and therefore did not constitute a grievance under the terms of the agreement. Missoula County High School Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 259 M 438, 857 P2d 696, 50 St. Rep. 870 (1993), following Int'l Union v. Acme Precision Prod., 521 F. Supp. 1358 (E.D. Mich. 1981), and distinguishing First Nat'l Maintenance Corp. v. NLRB, 452 US 666, 107 LRRM 2705 (1981).

Alleged Violations of Collective Bargaining Agreement Preempted by Federal Labor Law: Although a collective bargaining agreement did not specifically address standards to be applied in a situation where an employee was discharged, tort claims alleging negligence and breach of good faith were substantially dependent on terms in the contract establishing wage schedules, union representation, and adherence to a grievance and arbitration procedure. In determining that summary judgment was proper, the Supreme Court cited Allis-Chalmers v. Lueck, 471 US 202, 85 L Ed 2d 206, 105 S Ct 1904 (1985), and reasoned that preemption of the tort claims by federal law was necessary to ensure a unified body of labor contract law and to preserve the central role of arbitration in labor disputes. Smith v. Mont. Power Co., 225 M 166, 731 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 124 (1987). See also Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 1293 (1987), where it was held that a party may not avoid the preemptive effect of federal labor law when a dispute involves an interpretation of a union contract by pleading in tort and that vacation pay is one item preempted by operation of federal law. But see Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), which relied on Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), to partially overrule Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301 (1986), and subsequent cases, including Smith, to the extent that a state law claim is preempted by federal law only when its resolution requires construing the collective bargaining agreement, even if the state law analysis involves the same factual considerations as the contractual determination under the collective bargaining agreement of whether the employee was discharged for just cause. Foster was followed in Hanley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 254 M 379, 838 P2d 408, 49 St. Rep. 755 (1992), in Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000).

Fiduciary Duty of Union Officers: It was proper to instruct the jury on the duty of fiduciary responsibility owed by union officers by comparing it to a trust relationship; stating that, as fiduciaries, the officers were required to act prudently; and allowing the jury to consider the duties, powers, and obligations in the union constitution and bylaws. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Burdens of Proof in Case Involving Claimed Breach of Fiduciary Duty by Union Officers: In a dispute between a union and its former business managers, the District Court gave a general instruction that the party who asserts the affirmative of an issue has the burden of proving that issue by a preponderance of the evidence. The court further instructed the jury that if a fiduciary profits personally from the use of union funds, the burden shifts to the fiduciary to show he acted reasonably. Finally, the court instructed that a person with the duty to keep proper accounts has the burden of proving that he is entitled to the credits he claims. These instructions were consistent, clear, and accurate. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Union Management Dispute — No Specific Form Required for Accounting Request: Generally the demand for accounting need not be in any particular form, so long as it is sufficiently explicit to leave no room for doubt in a defendant's mind that the plaintiff intended to demand an accounting. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Sufficient Evidence Supporting Jury Verdict Against Union Officials for Misappropriation of Funds: A union sued former officers and business managers, alleging, among other things, misappropriation and conversion of union funds and constructive fraud. The union prevailed, and money damages were awarded to the union. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the evidence supported the award of money damages even though no one had testified at trial as to the specific amount of money defendants allegedly owed to the union. The jury heard evidence on mismanagement and self-dealing with regard to union property and on the financial losses of the union during defendant Bosh's administration. Testimony of the union indicated that defendants had not kept adequate financial records. The evidence may have contained contradictions, but it was substantial and adequate. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Union-Employer Trust Fund for Employees and Union — Suing Employer in Separate Actions: A union sued an electrical contractor in federal court, claiming that the contractor failed to hire persons referred by the union and failed to require persons he hired to join the union and that persons referred who were not hired lost compensation and contributions to a benefit trust fund administered by the union and an electrical contractors' association. The assignee of the trust fund's claim against the contractor sued the contractor in a state District Court for contributions due the trust fund. The federal action was dismissed with prejudice by stipulation of the union and contractor. The state District Court then held that the state action was barred by res judicata. That ruling was erroneous, for the rights and claims sought to be enforced in the two actions were not the same and the claimants in the two actions were not in privity. Their functions and duties were different. Audit Services, Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491, 41 St. Rep. 1388 (1984).

Collective Bargaining Grievance Procedure to Be Utilized Prior to Court Action: An employee must use the contract grievance procedure contained in a collective bargaining agreement prior to seeking a remedy in District Court. Plaintiff argued that his constitutional right to due process was violated and that right cannot be waived by private contract, thereby allowing him to proceed directly to District Court. The court disagreed, holding that the grievance procedure contained in the collective bargaining agreement satisfied any due process requirement. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982), followed in Brinkman v. St., 224 M 238, 729 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 2163 (1986), Fellows v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 244 M 7, 795 P2d 484, 47 St. Rep. 1385 (1990), and in Lueck v. United Parcel Serv., 258 M 2, 851 P2d 1041, 50 St. Rep. 401 (1993).

Case Notes

Clear Language of Collective Bargaining Agreement Excluding State Unfair Labor Practice Charge From Grievance and Arbitration Procedure — Deferral to Arbitration Procedure Improper: Winchester asserted that his employer, Mountain Line, committed unfair labor practices by discharging him for union activities and because he was shop steward. Mountain Line contended that Winchester was discharged for violation of the employee's handbook. The District Court decided that Winchester's unfair labor practice claim was subject to the final and binding arbitration clause in the collective bargaining agreement and held that the Board of Personnel Appeals properly deferred to the arbitration procedure. One section of the discrimination provisions in the collective bargaining agreement obviously covered Winchester's claim regarding union activities. However, the clear language of the very next section specifically excluded any alleged violation of state statutes from the arbitration procedure. The Supreme Court cited Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982), for the proposition that only in those cases in which it is certain that the arbitration clause is not susceptible to an interpretation that covers the dispute is an employee entitled to sidestep the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement. Therefore, the District Court erred in ruling that the Board properly deferred to the arbitration procedure in addressing the state law violations. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Winchester v. Mountain Line, 1999 MT 134, 294 M 517, 982 P2d 1024, 56 St. Rep. 540 (1999).

Metropolitan Police Law Exclusive Remedy — Collective Bargaining Agreement Grievance Procedure Inapplicable: A police officer terminated pursuant to the metropolitan police law, Title 7, ch. 32, part 41, pursued remedies under the grievance procedure of his union's collective bargaining agreement. The Supreme Court noted that under the agreement a grievance arose only on a misapplication of a provision of the agreement. Neither party claimed a misapplication of the method of discharge. By the agreement's own terms, the metropolitan police law was applicable and provided adequate administrative and judicial determination and review. Butte-Silver Bow did not commit an unfair labor practice by refusing to grieve the matter as being outside the grievance procedure provided by 7-32-4164. City/County of Butte-Silver Bow v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 225 M 286, 732 P2d 835, 44 St. Rep. 237 (1987).

Derivative as Opposed to Independent Violation: Where it was held that the employer's conduct was motivated by a legitimate and substantial business reason, there can be no independent violation of this section. Missoula County High School District v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 224 M 50, 727 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 2008 (1986).

Discrimination Not Solely Based on Union Activity: The Supreme Court held that a school district's actions were not inherently destructive or antiunion motivated when the district discriminated in favor of nonstriking teachers because they took the affirmative step of agreeing to teach for 18 days and to forego other options for those days. The court noted that payments to the nonstriking teachers were made more than 1 year after the strike and only after threat of a lawsuit. Further, the conduct was not equivalent to permanently discharging strikers or granting superseniority to nonstrikers. Missoula County High School District v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 224 M 50, 727 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 2008 (1986).

Legitimate Business Justification Precluding Unfair Labor Practice: The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court reversal of a Board of Personnel Appeals decision that a high school committed an unfair labor practice by paying certain nonstriking teachers for 18 days of work when those teachers had agreed to work for 18 days but actually worked only 1 day. The Supreme Court held that the school district made a reasonable interpretation of the contract and paid the claim out of a bona fide belief that the claim was valid, which amounted to a substantial legitimate business justification for the payment. Missoula County High School District v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 224 M 50, 727 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 2008 (1986).

Unfair Labor Practices — Due Process — Collateral Estoppel: In an action charging unfair labor practices, an employee was collaterally estopped from relitigating the issue of whether his due process rights were violated by the 3-year delay between the filing of his charges and the administrative hearing on the charges. The issue was previously decided, a final judgment was rendered, and the party against whom the claim was advanced remained the same or was privy of the earlier party. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

Unfair Labor Practice Established but Claim Moot: In an action by teachers through their labor union to receive a continuing level salary during contract renewal negotiations, the Board of Personnel Appeals found that the school district's failure to advance teachers on the salary schedule contained in the expired collective bargaining agreement constituted a unilateral change in wages and was an unfair labor practice. However, the Board granted no relief because by the time the matter was reviewed a new contract had been negotiated, the teachers were paid at a new salary level, and they had received retroactive pay at the new level. The District Court dismissed the school district's appeal on the ground that the claims were moot. The Supreme Court upheld this ruling, stating this was not an occasion to apply the "capable of repetition, yet evading review" doctrine set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court. School District v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 214 M 361, 692 P2d 1261, 42 St. Rep. 21 (1985).

Unfair Labor — Merit Increase Not to Preclude Consideration of Prior Work History: Carlson, an animal warden employed by defendant, was terminated allegedly because of insubordination and noncooperation resulting from an incident involving a schnauzer and because of earlier noncooperation. Carlson filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) alleging that the actual reason for her termination was her union activity. BPA ruled in favor of Carlson and ordered her reinstated with backpay. On appeal, the District Court reversed on the basis of unlawful procedure, contending that BPA failed to consider Carlson's conduct prior to the time that she received a merit increase in salary. The District Court's position was correct, and BPA was instructed to consider evidence of events prior to the merit increase on remand. The fact of a merit increase does not cause prior work history to vanish; it remains relative and to ignore it is to place an unwarranted artificial limitation on the employer's review process. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. Billings, 199 M 302, 648 P2d 1169, 39 St. Rep. 1414 (1982).

Unfair Labor Practice — Statute of Limitations Not a Rule of Evidence: Carlson, an animal warden employed by defendant, was terminated allegedly because of insubordination and noncooperation resulting from an incident involving a schnauzer and because of earlier noncooperation. Carlson filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) alleging that the actual reason for her termination was her union activity. BPA ruled in favor of Carlson and ordered her reinstated with backpay. On appeal, the District Court reversed on the basis of unlawful procedure, contending that BPA gave primary weight to incidents occurring more than 6 months prior to the filing of Carlson's claim in violation of 39-31-404. The Supreme Court held that 39-31-404 requires an employee to file a charge within 6 months after an alleged unfair labor practice; it does not forbid the introduction of relevant evidence bearing on the issue of whether a violation has occurred during the 6-month period. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. Billings, 199 M 302, 648 P2d 1169, 39 St. Rep. 1414 (1982).

School District's Refusal to Arbitrate: A collective bargaining agreement between a school district and teachers guaranteed certain procedural rights to nontenured teachers upon termination. Terminated nontenured teachers submitted the matter of their nonrenewal to arbitration, but the school district refused to arbitrate. This refusal by the school district amounted to a failure to bargain in good faith and constituted an unfair labor practice. Savage Pub. Schools v. Savage Educ. Ass'n, 199 M 39, 647 P2d 833, 39 St. Rep. 1192 (1982).

Interference, Restraint, or Coercion — Laying Off Employee Who Filed Grievances: City street department employee's record of filing grievances affected the judgment of city officials responsible for laying him off and keeping a worker on the payroll who was of the same class, but with less seniority. This constituted an unfair labor practice within the meaning of this section's provision making it an unfair labor practice to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by this chapter. Young v. Great Falls, 198 M 349, 646 P2d 512, 39 St. Rep. 1047 (1982).

Tenure Discrimination — Laying Off Employee Who Filed Grievances: City's discriminatory motive, based on employee's record of filing grievances, was a factor and was probably the dominant factor in decision to lay off the employee even though an employee of the same class and with less seniority was not laid off, and city's actions caused unrest among union members working for the city and had the effect of discouraging membership. This constituted an unfair labor practice within the meaning of this section's provision making it an unfair labor practice to discriminate in regard to hiring, tenure, or conditions of employment in order to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization. Young v. Great Falls, 198 M 349, 646 P2d 512, 39 St. Rep. 1047 (1982).

Violations Following Complaint — Jurisdiction Over: The Board of Personnel Appeals found that an unfair labor practice against employee occurred after he filed an unfair labor practice charge. District Court reversed on the ground that violations alleged in the complaint must occur before filing of the complaint. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that employee could have amended his complaint to include the postcomplaint discrimination and that employer could not possibly have been prejudiced. Young v. Great Falls, 198 M 349, 646 P2d 512, 39 St. Rep. 1047 (1982).

Complaint in Compliance With Notice Requirements of MAPA: The Billings Education Association's complaint complied with the notice requirements of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act when it alleged that the mailing of individual contracts violated section 59-1605(1)(a) and (e), R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-31-401(1) and (5)), which prohibits coercion of employees in the exercise of certain rights protected by the collective bargaining law. The word "coercion" is not a talisman without which the complaint fails. The allegations were sufficient to inform the board of trustees that the issue of coercion would be litigated. Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 104, 604 P2d 778, 36 St. Rep. 2311 (1979).

Discharge of Teacher — Board's Lack of Knowledge of Protected Union Activity: Based on the recommendation of the principal, a striking teacher was not rehired by a board of trustees. The board had no knowledge of the teacher's union activities, but the principal did. The Supreme Court held that the board had committed an unfair labor practice despite its lack of knowledge of the teacher's union activity, because the board was responsible for the principal's tainted evaluation and in accepting his recommendation, committed the prohibited act of discrimination. This is not the usual employee-employer relationship, and the Legislature did not intend to allow a school board to insulate itself by claiming lack of knowledge when a public employee's rights have been disregarded. Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 89, 604 P2d 770, 36 St. Rep. 2289 (1979).

Dual Motivation for Teacher's Discharge — Burden of Proof — "But For" Test: Where a striking teacher was not rehired by a board of trustees based upon proper reasons related to the teacher's competence and improper reasons related to protected union activity of the teacher, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly affirmed the decision of the Board of Personnel Appeals, which in essence utilized the procedure and the "but for" test of Mt. Healthy City Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 US 274, 97 S Ct 568, 50 L Ed 2d 471 (1977). Under Mt. Healthy, the burden is first placed upon the teacher to show that the protected activity was a motivating factor in the discharge. The board of trustees then has the burden of showing that the teacher would have been discharged even in the absence of the protected activity. Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 89, 604 P2d 770, 36 St. Rep. 2289 (1979).

Dismissal Without Hearing: Because the collective bargaining agreement provided for a hearing prior to dismissal, the city's failure to provide such a hearing for a terminated employee constituted an unfair labor practice. Livingston v. Mont. Council No. 9, 174 M 421, 571 P2d 374 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

Refusal of Nonunion Member to Pay Dues — Merit System Council Powers: Section 39-31-401(3) gives legislative approval to agency shop agreements in labor contracts with public employees. The agreement requires an employee in a bargaining unit to pay to the union an amount equal to union dues if he does not join the union. The Merit System Council cannot intervene on behalf of employees who fail to pay. 36 A.G. Op. 102 (1976).

Case Notes

Duty of Fair Representation — Breach as Unfair Labor Practice — Jurisdiction in BPA and District Court: Appellant was hired by the Great Falls Public Library as a bookmobile driver. Upon receipt of his first paycheck, he discovered he was paid for 20 hours per week as a driver and 20 hours per week as a clerk, at a lower rate. He asked his union to file a grievance on his behalf. He made the same request for over a year. The union continually refused to file a grievance, stating that the union and the city had a long standing oral agreement that drivers would be paid in that manner. Appellant then filed an unfair labor practice charge against the union alleging that it had breached its duty of fair representation. The Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) concluded that the union had breached its duty of fair representation. The union appealed to District Court, and the court, relying on Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604 (1979), decided that the BPA lacked the jurisdiction to decide such a claim. The rule of Ford which recognizes original jurisdiction in state District Courts to decide questions of fair representation is correct and stands, but certain dicta in Ford were based on a misinterpretation of federal labor law, on which Montana law is based, and cannot stand. Ford erroneously concluded that breach of a duty of fair representation was not an unfair labor practice. The Supreme Court also no longer recognizes dicta in Ford, which stated that a finding by BPA on those matters would deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. BPA has jurisdiction to hear claims that a union has breached its duty of fair representation for administrative remedies, and original jurisdiction of such claims lies in the District Court. Teamsters Local 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 195 M 272, 635 P2d 1310, 38 St. Rep. 1841 (1981).

Jurisdiction: Defendant union's argument that the District Court had no jurisdiction because plaintiff's exclusive remedy was under Title 34, ch. 31, lacks merit. The chapter provides no remedy for an alleged breach of duty by a union's failure to fairly represent a grievance. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had jurisdiction, as opposed to the federal court. Ford v. Univ. of Mont., 183 M 112, 598 P2d 604, 36 St. Rep. 1485 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Discharge of Employee Refusing to Abide by Agreement: The Merit System Council cannot act on behalf of an employee who has refused to abide by the conditions of a negotiated, ratified collective bargaining agreement and prevent the employee's discharge for failure to contribute to the expenses of an elected bargaining agent. 36 A.G. Op. 102 (1976).

Case Notes

Effort to Compel Arbitration — Alleged Violation of Duty to Bargain Not Properly Resolved by Arbitration: An employees' association asserted that a board of trustees failed to bargain collectively and that the violation constituted a grievance subject to arbitration. However, alleged violations of the duty to bargain collectively are subject to procedures and remedies set forth in the unfair labor practices statutes and are not properly resolved by arbitration. Further, the board's failure to collectively bargain was not a violation of a specific provision of the bargaining agreement and therefore did not constitute a grievance under the terms of the agreement. Missoula County High School Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 259 M 438, 857 P2d 696, 50 St. Rep. 870 (1993), following Int'l Union v. Acme Precision Prod., 521 F. Supp. 1358 (E.D. Mich. 1981), and distinguishing First Nat'l Maintenance Corp. v. NLRB, 452 US 666, 107 LRRM 2705 (1981).

Deference by Board to Grievance Procedure: City street department employee filed unfair labor practice complaint after he was laid off, claiming other employees with less seniority were not laid off. It was proper for the Board of Personnel Appeals not to defer to the grievance procedure provided by the collective bargaining agreement because: (1) the city's conduct did not lead one to believe that a stable collective bargaining relationship existed between the parties; (2) there was no indication of a willingness on the part of the city to arbitrate; (3) the grievance procedure did not culminate in a final and binding decision; and (4) employee alleged interference with protected rights and employment discrimination intending to discourage the free exercise of those rights. The department apparently felt employee was a troublemaker due to his having filed three previous grievances under the collective bargaining agreement. Young v. Great Falls, 198 M 349, 646 P2d 512, 39 St. Rep. 1047 (1982).

39-31-404. Six-month limitation on unfair labor practice complaint — exception.

Case Notes

Duty of Fair Representation — Breach as Unfair Labor Practice — Failure to Properly Process Grievance: Union appealed District Court order affirming decision of Teamsters Local 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 195 M 272, 635 P2d 1310, 38 St. Rep. 1841 (1981), finding that the union had breached its duty to represent Great Falls bookmobile driver by failing to process a backpay grievance. The union argued that the court should have limited backpay damages to 6 months prior to the date on which the claim was filed, that the court abused its discretion in requiring notice to be mailed to each employee, and that the court incorrectly concluded that the union's conduct was so unreasonable and arbitrary as to constitute a breach of the duty of fair representation. The Supreme Court stated that limiting damages to 6 months before the filing of the charge would reward the union for procrastination. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering the union to mail a notice to all employees, acknowledging its unlawful refusal to process the employee's grievance. Accordingly, the court affirmed the District Court's finding that the union's conduct in processing the grievance was so unreasonable as to constitute a breach of duty of fair representation. Teamsters Local No. 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 223 M 89, 724 P2d 189, 43 St. Rep. 1555 (1986).

Unfair Labor Practice — Statute of Limitations Not a Rule of Evidence: Carlson, an animal warden employed by defendant, was terminated allegedly because of insubordination and noncooperation resulting from an incident involving a schnauzer and because of earlier noncooperation. Carlson filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) alleging that the actual reason for her termination was her union activity. BPA ruled in favor of Carlson and ordered her reinstated with backpay. On appeal, the District Court reversed on the basis of unlawful procedure, contending that BPA gave primary weight to incidents occurring more than 6 months prior to the filing of Carlson's claim in violation of 39-31-404. The Supreme Court held that 39-31-404 requires an employee to file a charge within 6 months after an alleged unfair labor practice; it does not forbid the introduction of relevant evidence bearing on the issue of whether a violation has occurred during the 6-month period. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. Billings, 199 M 302, 648 P2d 1169, 39 St. Rep. 1414 (1982).

Duty of Fair Representation — Breach as Unfair Labor Practice — Failure to Properly Process Grievance: Union appealed District Court order affirming decision of Teamsters Local 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 195 M 272, 635 P2d 1310, 38 St. Rep. 1841 (1981), finding that the union had breached its duty to represent Great Falls bookmobile driver by failing to process a backpay grievance. The union argued that the court should have limited backpay damages to 6 months prior to the date on which the claim was filed, that the court abused its discretion in requiring notice to be mailed to each employee, and that the court incorrectly concluded that the union's conduct was so unreasonable and arbitrary as to constitute a breach of the duty of fair representation. The Supreme Court stated that limiting damages to 6 months before the filing of the charge would reward the union for procrastination. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering the union to mail a notice to all employees, acknowledging its unlawful refusal to process the employee's grievance. Accordingly, the court affirmed the District Court's finding that the union's conduct in processing the grievance was so unreasonable as to constitute a breach of duty of fair representation. Teamsters Local No. 45 v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 223 M 89, 724 P2d 189, 43 St. Rep. 1555 (1986).

Remedial Period Proper: The remedial period adopted by the hearing examiner and affirmed by the Board of Personnel Appeals was proper. The period for calculating backpay typically begins to run at the time of the illegal discharge and ends when the aggrieved employee's reinstatement becomes effective. The remedial period can be reduced if there is proof of mitigating circumstances, but the burden of proof is on the employer. Great Falls v. Young, 211 M 13, 686 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 1174 (1984).

Backpay and Interest Formulas Upheld: The Woolworth formula, used to calculate the amount of backpay owed Young, and the Florida Steel formula, used to calculate the amount of interest awarded on backpay, were appropriate for this case. The first formula applied quarterly calculations, and the second formula applied a variable interest in excess of Montana's statutory limit. The statutory provision on interest must not supplant but should complement the legitimate ends of public policy. Great Falls v. Young, 211 M 13, 686 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 1174 (1984).

Reasonable Diligence in Seeking Interim Employment: Once the Board of Personnel Appeals has established the amount of backpay owed a wrongfully discharged employee, the burden is upon the employer to produce evidence to mitigate its liability. Here, the evidence of Young's job-hunting efforts and the detrimental effect of weather and economic conditions on the job market were uncontroverted. The City did not demonstrate how the available evidence could reasonably be interpreted as indicative of indifference, insincerity, or slothfulness on Young's part in his search for employment. There is substantial evidence to support the finding of the Board that Young had exercised reasonable diligence. Great Falls v. Young, 211 M 13, 686 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 1174 (1984).

Discharge of Teacher — Substantial Evidence of Unfair Labor Practices — Union Activity: Where a striking teacher had not been rehired by a board of trustees following a strike and where after an administrative hearing the teacher was ordered rehired with backpay, the hearing record of the Board of Personnel Appeals, including several pages of testimony from witness tending to show that the teacher's problems were strike-related, contained sufficiently substantial evidence to support the Board's findings that the teacher's discharge was the result of unfair labor practices and to support the order of the Board. Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 89, 604 P2d 770, 36 St. Rep. 2289 (1979).

39-31-407. Amendment of complaint.

Case Notes

Violations Following Complaint — Jurisdiction Over: The Board of Personnel Appeals found that an unfair labor practice against employee occurred after he filed an unfair labor practice charge. District Court reversed on the ground that violations alleged in the complaint must occur before filing of the complaint. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that employee could have amended his complaint to include the postcomplaint discrimination and that employer could not possibly have been prejudiced. Young v. Great Falls, 198 M 349, 646 P2d 512, 39 St. Rep. 1047 (1982).

School District's Refusal to Arbitrate — Scope of Judicial Review Exceeded: A decision by the Board of Personnel Appeals found that the refusal of a school district to arbitrate whether the procedural steps for nonrenewal of a nontenured teacher were followed was a breach of the collective bargaining agreement and constituted an unfair labor practice. On appeal, the District Court went on to decide the broader issue of whether the school district was required to arbitrate the substantive basis of nontenured teacher renewal. The District Court exceeded the proper scope of judicial review. Savage Pub. Schools v. Savage Educ. Ass'n, 199 M 39, 647 P2d 833, 39 St. Rep. 1192 (1982).

Case Notes
Assignment of Bargaining Rights: Where 9 of 17 nurses had assigned their bargaining rights to new nurses' association prior to "cutoff date", assignments were effective. The Board's request that assignments of bargaining rights be executed anew after employer asked for a redetermination was unnecessary and the fact that employee reaffirmed assignment of her bargaining rights after the cutoff date and also after termination of her employment had no effect on validity of assignment where she had previously assigned her bargaining rights to new association. Such assignment had not been revoked and she was an employee on the cutoff date. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., Inc. v. St. Bd. of Health, 161 M 406, 506 P2d 1378 (1973).

Case Notes

Ability to Contract Not Absolute — Public Policy Legislation May Not Be Avoided: Phoenix Physical Therapy argued that the intent of the contract for services entered into with an individual was to create an independent contractor relationship and that therefore it was not liable to pay unemployment insurance premiums. The Supreme Court ruled that the right to contract is not absolute, the purpose of the Unemployment Insurance Law is to protect the general welfare of the citizens of the state, and parties may not privately contract to waive public protection statutes. Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997).

Striking Employees: A striking employee is not considered voluntarily unemployed for purposes of the specific voluntary learning work provision, and therefore cannot be considered voluntarily unemployed for purpose of the general statement of public policy. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 178 M 143, 582 P2d 1236, 35 St. Rep. 1153 (1978).

Intention of Legislature: In construing sections 87-102 through 87-106, R.C.M. 1947 (now this section, 39-51-601, 39-51-2103 through 39-51-2110, 39-51-2201, 39-51-2204, 39-51-2205, and Title 39, ch. 51, parts 23 and 25), the fundamental purpose of the Supreme Court is to ascertain, if possible, and to give effect to the intention of the Legislature. McCarthy v. Mont. Power Co., 143 M 134, 387 P2d 438 (1963).

Purpose: The unemployment compensation law was not enacted for the purpose of providing benefits for one who ceases employment for purely personal reasons, but was intended only for those who are involuntarily unemployed. McCarthy v. Mont. Power Co., 143 M 134, 387 P2d 438 (1963).

Liberal Construction: By reason of the policy stated in this section, the unemployment compensation law should be liberally construed in favor of the allowance of benefits, keeping in mind, however, that such benefits are to be paid only to "persons unemployed through no fault of their own", as specifically charged by the law. Scott v. Smith, 141 M 230, 376 P2d 733 (1962).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 200 in definition of employing unit near beginning after "instrumentalities" inserted "or an Indian tribe or tribal unit"; inserted definition of Indian tribe; inserted definition of tribal unit; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 200, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, on December 21, 2000, federal law changed regarding state law treatment of employment by recognized Indian tribes for the purposes of state unemployment insurance programs by mandating the formerly optional state unemployment insurance coverage of employment by those Indian tribes; and

WHEREAS, as of December 21, 2000, federal law now requires states in which recognized Indian tribes exist to offer to those tribes a choice of experience-rating or direct reimbursable unemployment insurance accounts; and

WHEREAS, Montana's unemployment laws do not conform to the new federal requirements, and nonconformity of the state's unemployment insurance laws with the new federal provisions will jeopardize the ability of all Montana employers to take credit on federal taxes for the amounts paid to Montana's unemployment insurance program and will further depress Montana's economy; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that it is the best interests of all the people of Montana that Montana's unemployment insurance laws conform to those December 21, 2000, federal law changes with respect to the treatment of Indian tribes for unemployment insurance purposes."

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 200, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 2001, and applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to employment by recognized Indian tribes occurring on or after December 21, 2000."

1997 Amendments: Chapter 60 in third sentence of definition of base period, after "5", inserted "completed calendar"; near middle of first sentence of definition of employing unit inserted "or limited liability partnership"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 17, 1997.

Chapter 491 inserted definition of domestic household service; in definition of employing unit, at end of first sentence, substituted "39-51-204(1)(a) and (1)(q)" for "39-51-204(1)(a) and (1)(b)"; in definition of wages, in first sentence near beginning, inserted "unless specifically exempted under subsection (20)(b)", near middle, after "including", deleted "commissions and bonuses", and at end deleted "and backpay received pursuant to a dispute related to employment", inserted "The term includes but is not limited to", inserted (a)(i) through (a)(iii) concerning types of payment included in definition, in (b)(i) inserted "for employees" and after "payment was made" deleted "under a plan established for the employees in general or for a specific class or classes of employees, to or on behalf of the employee", in (b)(i)(A) inserted "or pension pursuant to a qualified plan as defined under the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code", in (b)(i)(B), at end, substituted "policy" for "law", in (b)(i)(C), near beginning, substituted "or" for "and" and at end inserted "including health insurance for the employee or the employee's immediate family", in (b)(i)(D) inserted "including life insurance for the employee or the employee's immediate family", and in (b)(ii) deleted former text that read: "remuneration paid by a county welfare office from public assistance funds for services performed at the direction and request of the county welfare office"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

WHEREAS, ARM 24.11.831 narrowed the scope of the federal definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, an original purpose of this House Bill No. 561 was to codify the narrower definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, this House Bill No. 561 is the appropriate place to repeal Rule 24.11.831, Administrative Rules of Montana."

Severability: Section 36, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 37, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 195 in definition of employing unit, in first sentence, inserted "limited liability company that has filed with the secretary of state"; in definition of institution of higher education, in (b) before "universities", deleted "colleges and"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1995.

Applicability: Section 19, Ch. 195, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to hearings or appeals requested on or after [the effective date of sections 2 through 10 and 12 through 19]." Sections effective March 23, 1995.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 261 in definition of wages inserted (b)(iii) referring to employee expense reimbursements or allowances; and made minor change in style.

Chapter 373 in definition of employing unit substituted "39-51-204(1)(a) and (1)(b)" for "subsections (8) and (9) of 39-51-203"; inserted definition of taxes; and in definition of wages, in (b)(i)(B) after "disability", deleted "but in the case of payments made by an employer directly to an employee, only those payments made" and after "law" deleted "are excluded from "wages"". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 373, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Amendment: In definition of base period, in middle of third sentence, inserted "or a similar statute of another state". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 234 near middle of (9), after "which has or", deleted "subsequent to January 1, 1936"; in (18)(b)(i), after "payment", substituted language excluding payment under a plan established for employees in general or for a specific class or classes of employees for "made to or on behalf of an employee by an employer on account of"; in (18)(b)(i)(B), after "disability", inserted language excluding, of those payments made directly by an employer to an employee, only workers' compensation payments; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 314 inserted definition of independent contractor.

Chapter 370 in (11), near middle after "are required", inserted "to be paid"; and made minor change in grammar.

1985 Amendments: Chapter 23 at end of definition of base period substituted "within 24 months of the date on which the individual's disability was incurred" for "within 18 months of the individual's last employment".

Chapter 125 deleted former (1) that read: "The word "administrator" refers to a person appointed by the commissioner of labor and industry to direct and administer the unemployment insurance laws and federal laws falling within the administrator's jurisdiction"; deleted former (3) that read: ""Annual total payroll" means the total of the four quarters of total payrolls of an employer preceding the computation date as fixed herein"; and in definition of wages, at end of first sentence, inserted clause relating to backpay.

Chapter 461 in definition of contributions, at end, inserted "but does not include assessments under 39-51-404(4)".

1983 Amendment: In definition of base period inserted last sentence establishing base period for person who is temporarily totally disabled.

1981 Amendment: Substituted the definition of "department of labor and industry" for "employment security division"; and in definitions of employment office and wages substituted "department" for "division".

Crop Adjusters as Employees, Not Independent Contractors — Administrative Findings Improperly Reversed: The Unemployment Insurance Division of the Department of Labor and Industry, a Department hearings office, and the Board of Labor Appeals successively determined that crop adjusters were employees of American Agrijusters Co. (American) for unemployment insurance tax purposes. The District Court reversed, holding that the crop adjusters were independent contractors. The Supreme Court applied the four-part test used in Sharp v. Hoerner Waldorf Corp., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298 (1978), to determine whether a right of control existed sufficient to give rise to an employer-employee relationship. The factors do not constitute a balancing test, however, so employee status may be established on the strength of evidence under one of the factors standing alone. Here, American exercised a right of control over the means and methods by which crop adjusters completed their job assignments through training, supervision, and review of completed job assignments. Further, payment by a unit of time and the right to terminate the work relationship without liability also evidenced employment status. The District Court erred in finding that crop adjusters were independent contractors, and the Supreme Court reversed. Am. Agrijusters Co. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 1999 MT 241, 296 M 176, 988 P2d 782, 56 St. Rep. 948 (1999). See also 3 Larson & Larson, Larson's Workers' Compensation Law §§61.04, 61.06, 61.07 (1999).

Carpenter and Mason Paid by Hourly Wage Properly Determined to Be Independent Contractor: Potter, a carpenter and mason who sold his own business in 1987, worked for three private parties and two construction companies and was paid by the hour by all of them. Because he was hired by some of the employers prior to 1987, the Supreme Court held that the Department of Labor and Industry hearing officer properly determined Potter to have satisfied the second part of the test for an independent contractor. The Supreme Court also determined that the hearing officer properly found that there was substantial evidence that Potter was free from control over the performance of his services when the Court examined the direct evidence of the right to exercise control, the method of payment, the furnishing of equipment, and the right of Potter's employers to fire him. Potter v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 258 M 476, 853 P2d 1207, 50 St. Rep. 621 (1993).

"Independently Established Occupation or Profession" Construed: Northwest Publishing sells advertisements that appear in Northwest's magazine, using salespersons employed under an "independent contractor agreement". They receive a set commission and are provided lodging, sales forms, and credit cards. The Department of Labor and Industry, the Board of Labor Appeals, and the District Court determined that these independent contractors were employees for unemployment insurance purposes. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Northwest did not satisfy subsection (14)(b) of this section. Citing Standard Chem. Mfg. Co. v. Employment Sec. Div., 185 M 241, 605 P2d 610 (1980), the Supreme Court held that satisfaction of one or two of the criteria discussed in Standard Chem. and in Zimmer-Jackson Associates, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 231 M 357, 752 P2d 1095 (1988), followed in Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997), was insufficient to overcome the requirement that the salespeople be "engaged in an independently established business". NW. Publishing v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 256 M 360, 846 P2d 1030, 50 St. Rep. 110 (1993).

Compensation for Travel Expenses — Constituted Wages: The petitioner's employee was paid 10 cents a mile as wages and 7 ½ cents a mile for travel expenses. The Board of Labor Appeals, relying on a test set out in the Division guidelines, ruled that the travel compensation constituted wages. The lower court upheld the Board's decision but relied on a statute rather than the Division guidelines. The Supreme Court held that in the case of conflict between a statute and an administrative rule or guideline, the statute governs. The court also held that under both the statute and the test set out in the Division guidelines, the travel compensation constituted wages. Berglund & Berglund, Inc., Inc. v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 241 M 49, 784 P2d 933, 47 St. Rep. 73 (1990).

"AB" Test of Independent Contractor Status — Measure of Control: The two-part test to determine whether an individual is an independent contractor, known as the "AB" test (formerly the "ABC" test prior to 1987 amendment), is set out in subsection (14) of this section. The emphasis of the test, and at common law, is control. The four factors to consider in determining if the right to control exists, as formerly recognized in Sharp v. Hoerner Waldorf Corp., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298 (1978), followed in Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997), include: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control; (2) method of payment; (3) furnishing of equipment; and (4) right to fire. Existence of three of the four control factors substantiated a finding of an independent contractor relationship under the "A" portion of the test, and coupled with the fact that the individual was engaged in an independently established occupation, satisfying the "B" portion, the Supreme Court concluded a worker was an independent contractor rather than an employee under this section. Johnson v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 240 M 288, 783 P2d 1355, 46 St. Rep. 2131 (1989).

Contract Providing Monthly Payments Not Establishment of Employment Relationship: A county contract for provision of certain legal services expressly provided independent contractor status because: (1) the county had no right to control the firm that was awarded the contract; (2) the firm was customarily engaged in independent practice; and (3) the contract was unnecessary for the firm to continue its business. Because an independent contract was indicated by these facts, the veterans' preference did not apply to hiring of the contractor, despite the contention that a contract provision for monthly payments established an employment relationship. Hamner v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 233 M 271, 760 P2d 76, 45 St. Rep. 1481 (1988).

Determination of Employment Status — Administrative Findings Upheld: In determining whether salesmen for a livestock product manufacturer were independent contractors and therefore exempt from the unemployment compensation tax, the court will uphold an administrative agency's finding where there is sufficient credible evidence in the record to support its holding. Where there are several factors weighing on both sides of the issue, the court will look to 39-51-203(4)(c) as controlling. This subsection concerns whether an individual is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, profession, or business. Here, the court found that the salesmen had no business apart from their relationship with the company, were dependent upon the company for their employment, had no authority to hire subordinates, had no liability for a peremptory termination of their relationship, and therefore found the salesmen to be employees rather than independent contractors. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co. v. Employment Sec. Div., 185 M 241, 605 P2d 610, 37 St. Rep. 105 (1980), distinguished in Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985). (Annotator's note: Definition of independent contractor was transferred from 39-51-203 to 39-51-201, and second prong of three-prong test was repealed by Ch. 314, L. 1987.)

1995 Amendment: Chapter 195 in (1) inserted "by a manager or member of a manager-managed limited liability company that has filed with the secretary of state"; in (5), after "universities", deleted "any of its colleges"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1995.

Applicability: Section 19, Ch. 195, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to hearings or appeals requested on or after [the effective date of sections 2 through 10 and 12 through 19]." Sections effective March 23, 1995.

1991 Amendment: Deleted (8) and (9) describing certain agricultural labor and domestic service exempted from definition of employment. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 373, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Amendment: In (8) substituted second sentence revising definition of employment relating to agricultural labor (see 1989 Session Law for text) for former sentence concerning agricultural wages (see 1987 MCA for former text); and in (9) substituted second sentence revising definition of employment relating to domestic service (see 1989 Session Law for text) for former provision concerning domestic employment (see 1987 MCA for former text). Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 234 throughout section deleted "after December 31, 1971"; in (5), after "performed", deleted "after July 1, 1975"; in (8) and (9), after "employment", deleted "subject to this chapter effective January 1, 1978"; at end of (8) inserted third sentence providing that if otherwise subject wages are paid for outfitter and guide services, the wages are not covered; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 314 at end of (4), after "that", substituted "the individual is an independent contractor" for "(a) such individual has been and will continue to be free from control or direction over the performance of such services, both under his contract and in fact;

(b) such service is either outside the usual course of the business for which such service is performed or that such service is performed outside of all the places of business of the enterprise for which such service is performed; and

(c) such individual is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, profession, or business".

1981 Amendment: Substituted "department" for "division" in (3) and (4).

Case Notes

Vacation Pay Not Considered Wages for Purposes of Determining Eligibility for Unemployment Benefits — Claim Independent of Contract Not Precluded by Federal Labor Law: Lumber company employees filed for unemployment insurance benefits following a week-long shutdown of the lumber mills. Their claims were denied in turn by the Department of Labor and Industry, a referee, and the Board of Labor Appeals. The Department reasoned that the employees received vacation pay during their time away from work and that because they earned wages, they could not be considered totally unemployed and were thus ineligible for benefits. On appeal to the District Court, the ineligibility determination was reversed when the court determined that the Department had incorrectly concluded that, as a matter of law, wages previously paid to the employees had been properly imputed to the shutdown period. The company appealed to the Supreme Court, and the primary issue was whether the employees were eligible for benefits during the shutdown. The employees argued that their collective bargaining agreement did not require time off in order to take vacation pay, but rather that vacation pay is an entitlement once an employee works the specified number of hours during the vacation base year. The Supreme Court agreed. Vacation pay is payment in exchange for an employee's work in the vacation base year. Even though time off could be scheduled unilaterally by the employer when the mill was closed, the vacation pay received was not considered compensation for time off during the shutdown. Thus, the employees did not earn wages during the shutdown that would prevent them from qualifying for unemployment benefits. The employer's argument that the employees were "voluntarily unemployed" because they consented to the shutdown in their collective bargaining agreement was also unpersuasive. A collective bargaining agreement cannot waive rights ensured to an employee by state law. Lastly, this action was not precluded by sec. 301 of the federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 185) because the case involved matters implicating state rules and obligations independent of the labor contract, as evidenced by the inclusion as parties those state agencies charged with determining unemployment eligibility. The District Court was affirmed, and the case was remanded to the appropriate state agencies for decisions on each individual claim. Multiple Stimson Employees v. Stimson Lumber Co., 2001 MT 56, 304 M 333, 21 P3d 613 (2001), distinguishing Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397 (1987), and Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720 (1992).

Woodcutters Held to Be Employees — Not Independent Contractors: A post company argued that woodcutters working for the company were independent contractors but failed to produce evidence demonstrating that the services performed by the woodcutters did not constitute employment. The Supreme Court ruled that the company had not overcome the statutory presumption of employment because the company could not prove all three elements of the ABC test. Specifically, the company's control over the woodcutters' activities was too great for the woodcutters to be considered independent contractors. Larry's Post Co., Inc. v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 238 M 190, 777 P2d 325, 46 St. Rep. 1193 (1989).

Contract Providing Monthly Payments Not Establishment of Employment Relationship: A county contract for provision of certain legal services expressly provided independent contractor status because: (1) the county had no right to control the firm that was awarded the contract; (2) the firm was customarily engaged in independent practice; and (3) the contract was unnecessary for the firm to continue its business. Because an independent contract was indicated by these facts, the veterans' preference did not apply to hiring of the contractor, despite the contention that a contract provision for monthly payments established an employment relationship. Hamner v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 233 M 271, 760 P2d 76, 45 St. Rep. 1481 (1988).

"ABC" Test of Employment Met: The three-part standard to be met in order for a service to be considered employment, referred to as the "ABC" test, is: (1) Tier "A", that an individual be free from control over the performance of his services; (2) Tier "B", that the nature of an individual's services falls outside the usual course of the employer's business or that the services be performed outside the place where the employer's business is carried on; and (3) Tier "C", that the individual be customarily engaged in an independently established trade or occupation. A person meeting all three tiers of this standard is properly considered an employee. (Annotator's note: The statutory language outlining the three-tier test was replaced through 1987 amendment by a requirement that the individual be shown to be an independent contractor. See 39-71-120.) Zimmer-Jackson Associates, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 231 M 357, 752 P2d 1095, 45 St. Rep. 679 (1988), followed with respect to employment of a baseball league umpire in In re Unemployment Ins. Tax Contribution, Pioneer Baseball League v. Friedrichs, 233 M 384, 760 P2d 93, 45 St. Rep. 1573 (1988).

Employment or Joint Venture: A contractor obtained services of a worker on various jobs, referring to the relationship as a partnership or joint venture. Where worker was paid $500 a week, all contracts were signed by contractor only, there were no documents, correspondence, or accounts indicating a partnership or joint venture, no partnership income tax was filed, and all materials were purchased by contractor using his personal accounts with suppliers, the court upheld the finding of an employment relationship for unemployment insurance tax purposes. Hammerquist v. Employment Sec. Div., 230 M 347, 749 P2d 535, 45 St. Rep. 261 (1988).

Amount of Control Determinative: Kirby trained dealers in marketing methods and provided them with materials. Kirby suggested retail prices which dealers generally adhered to. Kirby received the dealers' sales receipts and paid the dealers their commissions. The dealers had to be authorized to sell Kirby products through a wholesale outlet, and Kirby could terminate the contract without cause on 30 days' notice. Applying the test set out in 39-51-203 and the common-law test, the Supreme Court found that the dealers were employees and not independent contractors. Kirby Co. of Bozeman, Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 189 M 1, 614 P2d 1040, 37 St. Rep. 1255 (1980), followed in Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997). (Annotator's note: Definition of independent contractor was transferred from 39-51-203 to 39-51-201, and second prong of three-prong test was repealed by Ch. 314, L. 1987.)

Determination of Employment Status — Administrative Findings Upheld: In determining whether salesmen for a livestock product manufacturer were independent contractors and therefore exempt from the unemployment compensation tax, the court will uphold an administrative agency's finding where there is sufficient credible evidence in the record to support its holding. Where there are several factors weighing on both sides of the issue, the court will look to 39-51-203(4)(c) as controlling. This subsection concerns whether an individual is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, profession, or business. Here, the court found that the salesmen had no business apart from their relationship with the company, were dependent upon the company for their employment, had no authority to hire subordinates, had no liability for a peremptory termination of their relationship, and therefore found the salesmen to be employees rather than independent contractors. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co. v. Employment Sec. Div., 185 M 241, 605 P2d 610, 37 St. Rep. 105 (1980), distinguished in Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985). (Annotator's note: Definition of independent contractor was transferred from 39-51-203 to 39-51-201, and second prong of three-prong test was repealed by Ch. 314, L. 1987.)

Employee or Independent Contractor:

Despite fact that this section is used as a guide in the determination of the relationship between an employer and an individual performing services, the well established test in determining whether an individual is an employee or an independent contractor is also a guide to be used; lessee of self-service gasoline station was an employee for purposes of this act where he was required to make three reports weekly and daily bank deposits to lessor accounts, where the lessee was required to order gasoline from a distributor named by the lessor, and where the total control of the gasoline lay with the lessor. Pat Griffin Co. v. Employment Sec. Comm'n, 163 M 529, 519 P2d 147 (1974).

Logging trucker was an independent contractor and not covered by unemployment compensation under this section where he provided his own truck, licensed and insured it in his own name, repaired it and paid operational costs himself, hauled logs from paper company's logging operation site to its log pond, was compensated by weight hauled, could take off any days he chose or could work for others, could hire any relief driver he wanted, could refuse any load he did not want, could choose any route of travel he wanted, and was working under a written contract describing him as an independent contractor and requiring him to carry his own industrial insurance, despite the fact that he had to enter the company's premises to load and unload and that the company determined the hours when crews would be available to assist in loading and unloading. St. Regis Paper Co., Forest Prod. Div. v. Unemployment Comp. Comm'n, 157 M 548, 487 P2d 524 (1971). (Annotator's note: Definition of independent contractor was transferred from 39-51-203 to 39-51-201, and second prong of three-prong test was repealed by Ch. 314, L. 1987.)

Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Chapter 339 substituted (1)(d) concerning services performed by qualified real estate agents or insurance salespeople by commission for former text that read: "service performed as a real estate broker or salesperson who is licensed pursuant to Title 37, chapter 51". Amendment effective April 21, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 200, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, on December 21, 2000, federal law changed regarding state law treatment of employment by recognized Indian tribes for the purposes of state unemployment insurance programs by mandating the formerly optional state unemployment insurance coverage of employment by those Indian tribes; and

WHEREAS, as of December 21, 2000, federal law now requires states in which recognized Indian tribes exist to offer to those tribes a choice of experience-rating or direct reimbursable unemployment insurance accounts; and

WHEREAS, Montana's unemployment laws do not conform to the new federal requirements, and nonconformity of the state's unemployment insurance laws with the new federal provisions will jeopardize the ability of all Montana employers to take credit on federal taxes for the amounts paid to Montana's unemployment insurance program and will further depress Montana's economy; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that it is the best interests of all the people of Montana that Montana's unemployment insurance laws conform to those December 21, 2000, federal law changes with respect to the treatment of Indian tribes for unemployment insurance purposes."

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 200, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 2001, and applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to employment by recognized Indian tribes occurring on or after December 21, 2000."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 61 in (1)(q) inserted reference to subsections (4) and (6) of 39-51-202. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Chapter 491 in (1)(a) deleted former text that read: "agricultural labor, except as provided in 39-51-202(2). If an employer is otherwise subject to this chapter and has agricultural employment, all employees engaged in agricultural labor must be excluded from coverage under this chapter if the employer:

(i) in any quarter or calendar year, as applicable, does not meet either of the tests relating to the monetary amount or number of employees and days worked, for the subject wages attributable to agricultural labor; and

(ii) keeps separate books and records to account for the employment of persons in agricultural labor"; in (1)(b), in second sentence in two places, and in (1)(b)(i) and (i)(b)(ii) inserted "or household"; in (1)(b), after "service performed by", substituted current text concerning a sole proprietor's dependent member or spouse for "an individual in the employ of that individual's son, daughter, or spouse and service performed by a child under the age of 21 in the employ of the child's father or mother"; in (1)(d) substituted "broker or salesperson who is licensed pursuant to Title 37, chapter 51" for "securities, and insurance salespeople paid solely by commissions and without guarantee of minimum earnings"; deleted former (1)(k) that read: "(k) service performed in the employ of a hospital if the service is performed by a patient of the hospital"; in (1)(g), at beginning, substituted "service performed by" for "employment of" and at end inserted "or partners in a limited liability partnership that has filed with the secretary of state"; in (1)(i) substituted "services performed as" for "employment of"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) For the purposes of 39-51-203(6), the term "employment" does not apply to service performed:

(a) in the employ of a church or convention or association of churches or an organization that is operated primarily for religious purposes and that is operated, supervised, controlled, or principally supported by a church or convention or association of churches"; inserted (1)(o) concerning individual sentenced to perform court-ordered community service; inserted (1)(q) concerning agricultural labor; inserted (1)(w) concerning alien admitted to perform agricultural work; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 476, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

WHEREAS, ARM 24.11.831 narrowed the scope of the federal definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, an original purpose of this House Bill No. 561 was to codify the narrower definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, this House Bill No. 561 is the appropriate place to repeal Rule 24.11.831, Administrative Rules of Montana."

Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

WHEREAS, ARM 24.11.831 narrowed the scope of the federal definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, an original purpose of this House Bill No. 561 was to codify the narrower definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, this House Bill No. 561 is the appropriate place to repeal Rule 24.11.831, Administrative Rules of Montana."

Case Notes

Notice of Administrative Hearing Regarding Unemployment Insurance Proceedings Not Violative of Due Process Rights — Administrative Hearings Not Governed by Rules of Civil Procedure: In an unemployment insurance case, the notice of appeal sent to the attorney for Wheelsmith Fabrication, Inc. (Wheelsmith), stated that the purpose of an administrative hearing was to determine whether Hall was discharged for misconduct connected with her work or directly affecting her employment. Wheelsmith contended that the notice failed to adequately inform Wheelsmith of the factual claims involved, constituting a denial of due process of law. Applying the traditional due process balancing test in Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 US 319, 47 L Ed 2d 18, 96 S Ct 893 (1976), the Supreme Court held that Wheelsmith failed to show a risk of erroneous deprivation of a private interest affected by official government action. Further, unemployment insurance proceedings are governed by administrative rule, rather than the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and pursuant to 2-4-601, a notice of hearing must contain a short and plain statement of the matters asserted. The notice sent to Wheelsmith's attorney met the statutory criteria of a short and plain statement, and the District Court did not err in holding that Wheelsmith's due process rights were not violated by the notice of hearing. Wheelsmith Fabrication, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2000 MT 27, 298 M 187, 993 P2d 713, 57 St. Rep. 131 (2000). See also ARM 24.11.201 and 24.11.317.

Case Notes

Attorney Entitled to Absolute Quasi-Judicial Immunity for Actions in Contested Case Proceedings: The doctrine of immunity evolved to protect not only judges but also certain participants in the judicial process whose functions are closely associated with those of judicial officers. The immunity that those participants receive is quasi-judicial immunity, which is not a mere defense to liability but an absolute immunity from suit. Like judicial immunity, quasi-judicial immunity benefits the public by ensuring that quasi-judicial officers exercise their functions unfettered by fear of legal consequences, as long as the functions are within the scope of the officers' jurisdiction and authorized by law. A state attorney who discharged his duty under professional rules of conduct when notifying a contested case hearings examiner that a certified public accountant who was representing a client was practicing law without a license was protected by quasi-judicial immunity and was not subject to suit. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

Hearings Examiner Entitled to Judicial Immunity: The state Department of Labor and Industry's hearings examiners perform adjudicatory functions comparable to those performed by judges under similar safeguards. As a result, those hearings examiners are entitled to absolute judicial immunity when acting in their adjudicatory capacities. This immunity results from the independence that judges need to make decisions in matters involving such things as monetary and liberty interests, without fear of reprisal from dissatisfied litigants. Absolute immunity is immunity from suit, rather than a mere defense to liability. Judicial immunity is dependent on the challenged conduct being an official act within the judge's broad statutory jurisdiction but does not depend on acting correctly. A person acting in a judicial capacity will not be deprived of immunity simply because that person acted maliciously, mistakenly, or in excess of authority. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

Job Service Office as "Employment Agency" — Private Employment Agency Not Entitled to Fee: Plaintiff employment agency is not entitled to an employment fee under 39-5-310 (now repealed) when the applicant was referred to the same position by the Job Service Office before the plaintiff contacted the applicant about the position. The Job Service Office is an "employment agency" within the definition established in 39-5-102 (now repealed). To interpret the employment contract between the applicant and the plaintiff as counter to the purpose for the existence of the state employment service is against the public policy of the state. Employment or Joint Venture: A contractor obtained services of a worker on various jobs, referring to the relationship as a partnership or joint venture. Where worker was paid $500 a week, all contracts were signed by contractor only, there were no documents, correspondence, or accounts indicating a partnership or joint venture, no partnership income tax was filed, and all materials were purchased by contractor using his personal accounts with suppliers, the court upheld the finding of an employment relationship for unemployment insurance tax purposes. Statutory rules of evidence and civil procedure do not apply to a hearing on the appeal. A hearing may be conducted by telephone or by videoconference. The decision of the appeals referee and any subsequent appeal must be made in the same manner as prescribed in 39-51-2403 through 39-51-2410." Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 36, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to disputes arising with the department after June 30, 1999."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 491 in (1), in first sentence near beginning, substituted "an employer-employee relationship" for "contribution liability, contribution rate, application for refund, employment status" and after "benefit payments to employers" deleted "making payment in lieu of contributions"; inserted (2) concerning decisions by Department of Revenue; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

Severability: Section 36, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 37, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 195 at end of first sentence substituted "notification submits a written appeal of the decision, determination, or redetermination" for "notice thereof applies for an appeal to an appeals referee"; inserted fourth sentence authorizing conduct of hearing by telephone or videoconference; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1995.

Applicability: Section 19, Ch. 195, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to hearings or appeals requested on or after [the effective date of sections 2 through 10 and 12 through 19]." Sections effective March 23, 1995.

1989 Amendment: At beginning of first sentence substituted "A" for "Any person aggrieved by any", near middle, after "contributions", deleted "may appeal to an appeals referee. Such decision, determination, or redetermination", at end substituted "an appeal to an appeals referee" for "a review within 10 days after notification was mailed to the last-known address, provided that the period may be extended for good cause", inserted second and third sentences that read: "The appeal must be made in the same manner as provided in 39-51-2402 for the appeal of a decision relating to a claim for unemployment insurance benefits. Statutory rules of evidence and civil procedure do not apply to hearings in the appeal", and at end substituted "through 39-51-2410" for "and 39-51-2404".

Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 302, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to any decision, determination, or redetermination of the department of labor and industry on or after October 1, 1989, involving contribution liability, contribution rate, application for refund, employment status, or the charging of benefit payments to employers making payment in lieu of contributions."

1987 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 234 inserted second sentence providing decision is final unless review is sought within 10 days and that period may be extended for good cause.

Chapter 314 near middle of first sentence inserted "employment status" and at end of first sentence, after "in lieu of contributions", substituted "may appeal to an appeals referee within 10 days after notice of the decision is mailed to that person's last-known address, except the period for timely appeal may be extended by the referee upon a showing of good cause" for "is entitled to a review in accordance with Title 2, chapter 4, parts 6 and 7"; and inserted last sentence prescribing manner of appeal. The Code Commissioner, in codifying the amendments made to this section by Ch. 314, has not codified the language providing that the period for timely appeal after notice by mail to the last-known address may be extended for good cause because that provision is contained in the amendment to the section made by Ch. 234.

1985 Amendment: At end after "review", (see 1987 amendment note) substituted "in accordance with Title 2, chapter 4, parts 6 and 7" for "by the department or its authorized representative, hereinafter referred to as a deputy. The decision of the deputy is considered the decision of the department. The department or the deputy conducting the review may refer the matter to an appeals referee, may decide the application for review on the basis of such facts and information as may be obtained, or may hear argument to secure further facts. After such review, notice of the decision must be given to the employing unit. Such decision made pursuant to such review is considered the final decision of the department unless the employing unit or any other such interested party, within 5 calendar days after delivery of such notification or within 7 calendar days after such notification was mailed to his last-known address, files an appeal from this decision. Such appeal will be referred to an appeals referee who shall make his decisions with respect thereto in accordance with the procedure prescribed in 39-51-2403."

1981 Amendment: Substituted "department" for "division" throughout the section.

1997 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 42 in (3) substituted "the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. 3304, as amended" for "section 1603 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, 1939"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

Chapter 491 in (1) substituted current text concerning adjustments and overpayments for "If not later than 3 years after the date on which any taxes or interest thereon became due or not later than 1 year from the date on which payment was made, whichever is later, an employer who has paid such taxes or interest thereon shall make application for an adjustment thereof in connection with subsequent tax payments or for a refund thereof because such adjustment cannot be made and the department shall determine that such taxes or interest or any portion thereof was erroneously collected, the department shall allow such employer to make an adjustment thereof, without interest, in connection with subsequent tax payments by him or, if such adjustment cannot be made, the department shall refund said amount, without interest, from the fund. For like cause and within the same period, adjustment or refund may be so made on the department's own initiative"; in (2), near beginning, inserted "or its delegate pursuant to 39-51-301(5)"; in (3) substituted "26 U.S.C. 3304" for "section 1603 of the Internal Revenue Code"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the more appropriate.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

Case Notes

Construction: This section is general in scope while section 87-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 39-51-201(3), 39-51-1103, 39-51-1106 through 39-51-1109, and 39-51-1201 through 39-51-1206), lends itself to the specific subject of experience ratings and where one statute deals with a subject in general and comprehensive terms and another in a more minute and definite way, the two should be read together if possible but to the extent of any repugnancy between them the special will prevail over the general statute. Hence, an employer could not make application for an adjustment under this section where he did not avail himself of the right to file a written request for a redetermination of classification within 30 days after receipt of such notice as provided for by section 87-109, R.C.M. 1947. 1989 Amendment: In definition of eligible employer, before "years", inserted "fiscal"; inserted definition of taxable wage base; and made minor change in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendment: In (3) substituted "an employer who is subject under this chapter and" for "a covered employer" and after "date" deleted "and has a minus experience factor"; in (5), after "means", substituted language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for "a covered employer"; in (5)(a) through (5)(d) substituted language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for: "(a) paid contributions during each of the 3 fiscal years immediately preceding the computation date;

(b) with respect to such 3 fiscal years, filed all contribution reports prescribed by the department;

(c) paid all contributions due with respect to the 3 fiscal years before the cutoff date of the rate year;

(d) established a record of accumulated contributions in excess of benefits charged to his account; and"; deleted former (5)(e) that read: "(e) achieved a plus experience factor"; in (8), after "means", substituted language defining unrated employer as one who is subject to the chapter and is not an eligible or a deficit employer for "a covered employer who has not paid contributions in each of the 3 fiscal years immediately preceding the computation date or an employer who has established a record of accumulated contributions in excess of benefits charged to his account but has not filed all required payroll reports or paid contributions by the cutoff date for any of the quarters in the 3 fiscal years immediately preceding the computation date"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1981 Amendments: Chapter 3 substituted "the reporting period ending September 30" for "June 30" in (1), "December 31" for "September 30" in (2), and "September 30" for "June 30" in (6).

Chapter 349 substituted "department" for "division" in two places; substituted the definition of "department of labor and industry" for "employment security division".

Codification: Section 20, Ch. 685, L. 1979, provided: "It is intended that sections 1 through 7 and 9 through 16 of this act be codified as an integral part of Title 39, chapter 51, part 21, and the provisions of Title 39, chapter 51, apply to sections 1 through 7 and 9 through 16 of this act." The reference to part 21 is apparently a typographical error. Part 11 is more appropriate for sections 1 through 7, and they have been codified as 39-51-1121 through 39-51-1126. Section 1 provides definitions and specifically states that they apply to part 11. The Code Commissioner codified sections 9 through 16 in part 12 as 39-51-1212 through 39-51-1219 because part 12 more specifically deals with the subject matter. Section 39-51-1211 was added by the Code Commissioner to ensure that the definitions in section 1 apply.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 200, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, on December 21, 2000, federal law changed regarding state law treatment of employment by recognized Indian tribes for the purposes of state unemployment insurance programs by mandating the formerly optional state unemployment insurance coverage of employment by those Indian tribes; and

WHEREAS, as of December 21, 2000, federal law now requires states in which recognized Indian tribes exist to offer to those tribes a choice of experience-rating or direct reimbursable unemployment insurance accounts; and

WHEREAS, Montana's unemployment laws do not conform to the new federal requirements, and nonconformity of the state's unemployment insurance laws with the new federal provisions will jeopardize the ability of all Montana employers to take credit on federal taxes for the amounts paid to Montana's unemployment insurance program and will further depress Montana's economy; and

Codification: Section 20, Ch. 685, L. 1979, provided: "It is intended that sections 1 through 7 and 9 through 16 of this act be codified as an integral part of Title 39, chapter 51, part 21, and the provisions of Title 39, chapter 51, apply to sections 1 through 7 and 9 through 16 of this act." The reference to part 21 is apparently a typographical error. Part 11 is more appropriate for sections 1 through 7, and they have been codified as 39-51-1121 through 39-51-1126. Section 1 provides definitions and specifically states that they apply to part 11. The Code Commissioner codified sections 9 through 16 in part 12 as 39-51-1212 through 39-51-1219 because part 12 more specifically deals with the subject matter. Section 39-51-1211 was added by the Code Commissioner to ensure that the definitions in section 1 apply.

Chapter 487 in second sentence of (1) substituted "certificate" for "lien"; inserted (2) stating when lien is not valid against a third party; and inserted (3) providing when grantor is subject to penalties and allowing Department to proceed against a delinquent employer.

Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 487, L. 1987, provided: "This act is effective on passage and approval and applies to contributions due after the effective date of this act." Effective April 15, 1987.

1985 Amendment: Substituted language creating lien for unpaid contributions and providing for levy and execution (see sec. 2, Ch. 514, L. 1985, for full text) for "(1) If any contributions payable by an employer under this chapter or any portion thereof is not paid within 25 days after the same becomes due, the department may issue a certificate under its official seal, setting forth the amount of contributions due and interest accrued, directed to the sheriff of any county of the state commanding him to levy upon and sell the real and personal property of the employer owing the same, found within his county, for the payment of the amount thereof, with the added penalties, interest, and costs of executing the same and to return such certificates to the department and pay to the department the money collected by virtue thereof by a time to be therein specified, not more than 90 days from the date of the certificate.

(2) The sheriff shall, within 5 days after the receipt of the certificate, file with the clerk of the district court of his county a copy thereof and thereupon the clerk of the district court shall enter in the judgment docket in the column for judgment debtors the name of the employer mentioned in the certificate and in the appropriate columns the amount of contributions due and the penalties for which the certificate is issued and the date when such copy is filed, and thereupon the amount of such certificate so docketed shall become a lien upon the title to and interest in real property or chattels real of the employer against whom it is filed in the same manner as a judgment docketed in the office of such clerk.

(3) The sheriff shall thereupon proceed upon the same in all respects, with like effect, and in the same manner prescribed by law in respect to executions issued against property upon judgment of a court of record and shall be entitled to the same fees for his services in executing the certificate, to be collected in the same manner."

1981 Amendment: Substituted "department" for "division" throughout (1).

Vacation Pay Not Considered Wages for Purposes of Determining Eligibility for Unemployment Benefits — Claim Independent of Contract Not Precluded by Federal Labor Law: Lumber company employees filed for unemployment insurance benefits following a week-long shutdown of the lumber mills. Their claims were denied in turn by the Department of Labor and Industry, a referee, and the Board of Labor Appeals. The Department reasoned that the employees received vacation pay during their time away from work and that because they earned wages, they could not be considered totally unemployed and were thus ineligible for benefits. On appeal to the District Court, the ineligibility determination was reversed when the court determined that the Department had incorrectly concluded that, as a matter of law, wages previously paid to the employees had been properly imputed to the shutdown period. The company appealed to the Supreme Court, and the primary issue was whether the employees were eligible for benefits during the shutdown. The employees argued that their collective bargaining agreement did not require time off in order to take vacation pay, but rather that vacation pay is an entitlement once an employee works the specified number of hours during the vacation base year. The Supreme Court agreed. Vacation pay is payment in exchange for an employee's work in the vacation base year. Even though time off could be scheduled unilaterally by the employer when the mill was closed, the vacation pay received was not considered compensation for time off during the shutdown. Thus, the employees did not earn wages during the shutdown that would prevent them from qualifying for unemployment benefits. The employer's argument that the employees were "voluntarily unemployed" because they consented to the shutdown in their collective bargaining agreement was also unpersuasive. A collective bargaining agreement cannot waive rights ensured to an employee by state law. Lastly, this action was not precluded by sec. 301 of the federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 185) because the case involved matters implicating state rules and obligations independent of the labor contract, as evidenced by the inclusion as parties those state agencies charged with determining unemployment eligibility. The District Court was affirmed, and the case was remanded to the appropriate state agencies for decisions on each individual claim. Multiple Stimson Employees v. Workers' Compensation Denied — Claimant Receiving Unemployment Benefits: The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court denying claimant disability benefits will not be disturbed on appeal as it is supported by substantial credible evidence. Claimant was receiving unemployment benefits during the period he claims he was disabled, asserting on his application for unemployment benefits that he was able and available to work and had no medical condition that prevented him from accepting immediate employment in his field. Type of Work: Under statute providing that claimant must be available for work and seeking work, claimant was not eligible where all his applications were either for work in which he had no experience or work which he had no prospect of securing. Claimant voluntarily removed himself from only then-existing labor market in area for which he was qualified by refusal to accept farm or ranch work because he despised it. Noone v. 1991 Amendment: Near beginning of introductory clause, before "employment", substituted "been paid total wages for" for "had at least 20 weeks of work with an average of $50 per week in subject" and at end inserted "in an amount"; inserted (1) setting amount of wages at 1 ½ times the wages earned in the quarter in which wages were highest but at least equal to or greater than 7% of the average annual wage; at beginning of (2) deleted "On and after July 5, 1987, to qualify for benefits, an individual's total base period wages must be", after "greater than" substituted "50%" for "7%", deleted reference to subsection (2) of 39-51-2201, and deleted former second sentence that read: "To qualify for benefits, an individual's total base period wages must be $1,000 or more"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 7, 1991.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 153 substituted language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "(1) To qualify as an insured worker an individual must have been paid wages for insured work in the quarters of his base period an amount totaling not less than 1 ½ times his base period high quarter wages.

(2) On and after July 1, 1980, to qualify for benefits, an individual must have had at least 20 weeks of work with an average of $50 per week in subject employment in the base period. To qualify for benefits, the total base period wages must be $1,000 or more.

(3) With respect to weeks of unemployment beginning on or after January 1, 1978, wages for insured work shall include wages paid for previously uncovered services. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "previously uncovered services" means services:

(a) which were not employment as defined in 39-51-204(1)(a) and (1)(b) at any time during the 1-year period ending December 31, 1975; and

(b) which:

(i) are agricultural labor, as defined in 39-51-203(8), or domestic service, as defined in 39-51-203(9); or

(ii) are services performed by an employee of this state or a political subdivision thereof, as provided in 39-51-203(5), or by an employee of a nonprofit educational institution which is not an institution of higher education, as provided in 39-51-203(6), except to the extent that assistance under Title II of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974 was paid on the basis of such services."

Chapter 234 substituted language of (1) and language similar to second sentence of (2) (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read as in amendment note for Ch. 153.

The Code Commissioner has codified the section as amended by Ch. 153 because those amendments contain the substance of the Ch. 234 amendments.

Teachers — "Reinstated" Distinguished From "Rehired" — Repayment of Benefits: Appellants were notified in March that their teaching contracts would not be renewed for the coming year. Each challenged the nonrenewal and was reinstated with backpay, the right to full advancement on the salary schedule, and no loss of seniority, tenure rights, or benefits. The Unemployment Insurance Division of the Department of Labor and Industry notified appellants that each would have to repay all unemployment compensation received during the summer. The Board of Labor Appeals reversed and held appellants did not have to repay benefits. The District Court reversed the decision of the Board and held that benefits would have to be repaid. Termination Provision Repealed: Section 1, Ch. 12, L. 2001, repealed sec. 4, Ch. 400, L. 1999, which terminated the temporary version of this section July 1, 2001. Effective February 14, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 400 in first and second sentences inserted "for employment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999, and terminates July 1, 2001.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 400, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1999, and applies to claims for benefits first filed on or after July 1, 1999."

1983 Amendment: Near end of last sentence, substituted "nearest lower full dollar amount" for "nearest dollar".

1995 Amendment: Chapter 195 deleted last sentence in (2) that read: "A pension plan negotiated under a collective bargaining agreement is considered a direct employee contribution under this section." Amendment effective March 23, 1995.

Applicability: Section 19, Ch. 195, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to hearings or appeals requested on or after [the effective date of sections 2 through 10 and 12 through 19]." Sections effective March 23, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 171 near beginning of (1), after "reduced", inserted "(but not below zero)" and near middle, after "based on", substituted "the previous work of the individual and that is reasonably attributable to the week" for "for and entirely contributed to by a base-period employer"; substituted (1)(a) concerning plan, (1)(b) excepting certain payments, and (2) concerning direct employee contributions for former (2) through (4) that read: "(2) However, if the service performed for the base-period employer does not affect either the eligibility for or the amount of the pension or other type of retirement benefit received from the plan maintained or contributed to by the base-period employer, the reduction requirement of subsection (1) does not apply.

(3) The exception in subsection (2) is not applicable to the receipt of social security and/or railroad retirement benefits.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), the department shall, by rule, adopt minimum federal offset requirements as imposed by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, P.L. 94-566, as amended in 1980 by P.L. 96-364, and as may be amended after March 11, 1981"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 25, 1993.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 171, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: In (1), at end of first sentence, substituted "entirely contributed to by a base-period employer" for "contributed to in whole or in part by a base-period employer" and deleted second sentence providing reduction amount determined by ratio of employer's contributions to fund from which payment made so claimant receives credit only for proportion of his contributions to fund. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1983 Amendment: In (1), substituted last sentence concerning determination of amount by which weekly benefits are to be reduced for "If a claimant is receiving payments under the federal Social Security Act or the federal Railroad Retirement Act or from a pension to which he has contributed in part, his weekly benefit amount must be reduced by 50% of the amount that he is receiving from such payments."

1981 Amendments: Chapter 41 deleted "This provision does not apply to the receipt of benefits under the federal Social Security Act, as amended" from (1); added the last sentence of (1) requiring offset of benefits if claimant is receiving federal social security or railroad retirement benefits and added (2) and (3) stating circumstances under which benefits may not be reduced and exception to those circumstances. Subsection (4) requiring Division to adopt minimum federal offset requirements was added by Governor's amendment.

Chapter 349 substituted "department" for "division" in (4).

Reference to Federal Law: The Employee Retirement Income Security Act minimum federal offset provisions referred to in this section are codified at 26 U.S.C. 3304.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent added by Governor's amendment to HB 76 (Ch. 41, L. 1981) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it delegates rulemaking authority to the Employment Security Division of the Department of Labor and Industry in subsection (4). It is the intent of this bill to grant the Division the authority to adopt the minimum federal offset requirements as set forth in the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended. This is a conformity requirement of the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act which is imposed on the states."

Employer Given No Opportunity to Address Employee's Concerns — Benefits Denied: Plaintiff appealed from a District Court order that upheld the Board of Labor Appeals' denial of unemployment insurance benefits, claiming that she left employment for good cause after being subjected to retaliation for making statements about workers' compensation claims and for complaining about the employer's public policy violations. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that plaintiff's failure to give management an opportunity to address her employment concerns disqualified plaintiff from receiving benefits when the plaintiff left work without good cause attributable to employment. No Basis for Charge of Misconduct by Police Officer — Error in Dismissal of Action for Unemployment Benefits: Police officer McKay was charged in District Court with official misconduct for his involvement in an altercation and was suspended from his job, but the charge was dismissed without prejudice for failure to show probable cause. McKay was subsequently charged in City Court with assault, convicted, and terminated from employment. McKay then filed an unemployment insurance claim. The appeals referee determined that McKay was ineligible for benefits under this section because of misconduct. The Board of Labor Appeals affirmed the referee's decision, and McKay appealed to District Court. The District Court took judicial notice of McKay's acquittal on the misconduct charges, but concluded that the acquittal was immaterial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Absent the City Court conviction, no facts existed upon which to base a legal conclusion that McKay engaged in misconduct that would preclude unemployment benefits. Thus, the District Court committed reversible error in affirming the Board's conclusion that McKay was discharged for misconduct. McKay v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1999 MT 329, 297 M 357, 990 P2d 1251, 56 St. Rep. 1313 (1999), distinguishing Smith v. Roosevelt County, 242 M 27, 788 P2d 895, 47 St. Rep. 506 (1990).

Discharge for Misconduct — Tactics in Negotiation for Raise Held Not to Constitute Threat to Employer: Moody, a gas plant field inspector for Northland, told his supervisor, Sheehan, that he had been offered a job by a competitor, that he needed a raise, that he needed an answer by noon, and that if he left employment with Northland, he would take another employee of Northland with him. Sheehan then offered the other employee a raise, which was accepted, and telephoned another individual and offered Moody's job, which offer was also accepted. Sheehan then terminated Moody's employment. Moody applied for unemployment benefits, which Northland opposed. At first, Moody's actions to secure a raise were held not to constitute misconduct, but that determination was later reversed. In the process of Moody's application and the reversal of the award for benefits, Northland discovered that Moody had been offered less money by the competitor and therefore claimed that Moody was guilty of misconduct in failing to disclose that fact. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that Northland could not have discharged Moody for misconduct if it was unaware of the salary disparity at the time that Moody was discharged. The Supreme Court found that although Moody may have been somewhat deceptive, that deception did not equate with "misconduct" as used in the statute or administrative rule. Further, the Supreme Court held that Moody's action in saying that he had to have a decision by noon that day or that he would take another employee with him did not constitute a threat to Northland. The Supreme Court found that Northland had adequate means to protect itself from such a threat and in fact did use those means effectively. Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 281 M 26, 930 P2d 1100, 54 St. Rep. 43 (1997).

Failure to Notify Employer of Conflict of Interest — Misconduct Question of Law, Not Fact: Hafner was fired for failure to inform the employer of Hafner's pending litigation against the employer's client while continuing to work on the client's account on behalf of the employer. Hafner was denied unemployment compensation benefits based on employee misconduct. Reversing prior precedent, the Supreme Court held that "misconduct" is a question of law reviewable by the court on appeal. Hafner's failure to inform the employer of the conflict of interest constituted willful disregard of the interests of the employer and of reasonable standards of behavior that the employer had the right to expect. The District Court's determination that Hafner's conduct amounted to misconduct was correct. Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Payment of Severance Benefits — Not Proof That Employee's Actions Leading to Firing Were Unintentional: Stine, who was denied unemployment insurance benefits based on employee misconduct, argued that Western Federal's payment of posttermination severance benefits demonstrated that her conduct was unintentional and did not rise to the level of misconduct. The Supreme Court held that the payment of severance benefits was irrelevant to the issue of whether Stine's conduct was intentional. Stine v. W. Fed. Sav. Bank, 266 M 83, 879 P2d 53, 51 St. Rep. 746 (1994). Stine was reversed on the issue of whether "misconduct" is a question of fact or law in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Negligent Act — No Misconduct: Employee's inadvertent failure to replace oil in a customer's automobile was not a willful, wanton, deliberate disregard of the employer's interest and therefore did not constitute "misconduct" as statutorily defined. LaVe v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 239 M 339, 780 P2d 189, 46 St. Rep. 1730 (1989). See also Stine v. W. Fed. Sav. Bank, 266 M 83, 879 P2d 53, 51 St. Rep. 746 (1994), clarifying deliberate or willful conduct. Stine was reversed on the issue of whether "misconduct" is a question of fact or law in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Writing Bad Checks as Sufficient Grounds for Denial of Unemployment Benefits: An employee who issued 11 bad checks to his employer over a 3-month period and allowed them to remain unpaid for up to 6 weeks clearly went beyond the conduct an employer may reasonably expect from an employee. The repeated criminal violations, which were directly adverse to the employer's interests, constituted misconduct as a matter of law, affected the employee's ability to perform his duties, and warranted denial of unemployment benefits. Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 235 M 72, 765 P2d 727, 45 St. Rep. 2169 (1988).

Misconduct as Question of Fact — Right to Claim Not Waived by Delayed Termination: An employee claimed that: (1) by waiting 11 days after the decision to terminate was made, the employer should have been estopped from claiming misconduct; and (2) since waiver is a legal question, the District Court erred in not ruling on the issue. The Supreme Court found that an employer is not obligated to immediately terminate an employee once the decision has been made and that, in this case, the employer acted reasonably in waiting 11 days in order to find a replacement and to allow other employees to take vacations. Further, the District Court properly concluded that misconduct was a factual question properly left to the appeals referee and the Board of Labor Appeals. Connolly v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 226 M 201, 734 P2d 1211, 44 St. Rep. 587 (1987). Connolly was reversed on the issue of whether "misconduct" is a question of fact or law in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Participation in Illegal Strike — "Misconduct": Participation in an unlawful strike constitutes misconduct within the meaning of this section as a matter of law. Therefore, members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers' Organization (PATCO) who participated in a labor strike in August 1981 were not eligible for unemployment benefits. F.A.A. v. Mont. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 212 M 1, 685 P2d 365, 41 St. Rep. 1542 (1984).

Refusal to Train New Employee or Work Overtime: The court properly concluded that refusal to train a new employee and refusal to work overtime constituted simple misconduct under this statute. Gaunce v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 164 M 445, 524 P2d 1108 (1974).

Case Notes

No Substantial Curtailment of Operations of Employer — Not Work Stoppage:

Stoppage of work refers to the employer's operation rather than to the individual employee's work. Employees may (prior to 1985 amendment) collect benefits so long as their activities do not substantially curtail the productive operations of the employer. In this case, the petitioner coal company stockpiled coal in anticipation of the strike and there was no backlog of orders and no accumulation of work to be done following the strike. The Supreme Court reinstated the Board of Labor Appeals' holding that there had not been a work stoppage. Decker Coal Co. v. Employment Security Div., 205 M 1, 667 P2d 923, 40 St. Rep. 1056 (1983).

Montana has adopted the "American rule" which states that the phrase "stoppage of work" refers to the employer's operations rather than to the individual employee's work. This rule applies to a governmental employer. The city has failed to establish a substantial curtailment of its normal operations in delivering municipal government services. Therefore, there was no "stoppage of work" within the meaning of this section (as it read prior to 1985 amendment). Billings v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 204 M 38, 663 P2d 1167, 40 St. Rep. 648 (1983).

Stoppage of work (see 1985 amendment note) refers to the employer's operations rather than the individual employee's work. The correct test is that there must be a substantial curtailment of operations in the employer's business to constitute a stoppage of work. Where a plant is engaged in the production of a final product, the first and major measure of stoppage of work must be whether such production is curtailed or stopped. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 178 M 143, 582 P2d 1236, 35 St. Rep. 1153 (1978).

Stoppage of Work — Not Synonymous With "Strike" or "Lockout": The phrase "stoppage of work" (see 1985 amendment note) was not intended by the Legislature to be a synonym for a strike or a lockout. There may be a labor dispute and yet no stoppage of work. Billings v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 204 M 38, 663 P2d 1167, 40 St. Rep. 648 (1983).

Service on State Governmental Division — Substance Over Form: Retail clerks went on strike against petitioner in a labor dispute. The clerks claimed unemployment benefits. Benefits are denied during a strike if unemployment results from a "stoppage of work" existing because of a labor dispute (see 1985 amendment note). A deputy of the Employment Security Division (now the Unemployment Insurance Division) found claimants disqualified from benefits. Claiming strikers appealed to a referee who sustained the denial of benefits. Claimants then appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals which reversed the referee. Petitioner filed petitions for review with the District Court, naming as respondent the Board of Labor Appeals. Following a motion to dismiss the petition, the appellants and counsel for the Employment Security Division entered an agreement to substitute the Division and the court ordered the substitution. The clerks were not made parties, and at the time service was made on the Board, appellants did not provide sufficient copies. The clerks' union moved to intervene and the motion was granted. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, concluding that failure to name all parties and failure to provide a sufficient number of copies of the petition for service were fatal jurisdictional flaws. Since the Board and the Division are housed within the same department of state government and were represented by the same counsel, granting summary judgment on purely technical grounds would be an unconscionable elevation of form over substance. F.W. Woolworth Co., Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Lockout Unemployment Not Fault of Employees: The disqualification provisions (as they read prior to 1985 amendment) were not intended by the Legislature to apply to a fact situation wherein there was no voluntary action on the part of the employees precipitating the employer's lockout. The employees involved in the labor dispute were unemployed through no fault of their own. Application of the disqualification statute did not interfere with federal labor policy. Mont. Ready Mixed Concrete Ass'n v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 175 M 143, 572 P2d 915 (1977).

Temporary Employment During Strike:

A member of a striking union was not entitled to unemployment compensation where he quit temporary employment taken during strike. Sprague v. MacPherson, 142 M 581, 386 P2d 572 (1963).

Union members on strike against mining company, by whom they were regularly employed, who took other stop-gap employment during the labor dispute with intention of returning to work for the mining company when the dispute was settled, were improperly awarded unemployment compensation by the District Court based on termination of temporary employment before settlement of the dispute, after which the members returned to work for the mining company. Scott v. Smith, 141 M 230, 376 P2d 733 (1962).

Labor Dispute: Under this section, an applicant for compensation is ordinarily ineligible for benefits if his unemployment is due to a labor dispute in which he participates or is interested, unless the commission finds that the dispute was caused by the employer's failure or refusal to conform to the provisions of any law, federal or state, pertaining to collective bargaining, hours of work, wages, or other conditions of work. Jordan v. Craighead, 114 M 337, 136 P2d 526 (1943).

Part 24
Claims for Benefits

Part Case Notes

Adequate Findings Required for Review: Greenwood was hired as a truck driver by plaintiff. During the 14 months of his employment, six incidents of alleged misconduct occurred. Plaintiff discharged Greenwood on the basis of those incidents. Greenwood applied for unemployment benefits. Plaintiff challenged, contending Greenwood was ineligible because he was discharged for misconduct. Greenwood was awarded benefits, and plaintiff appealed to the appeals section of the Employment Security Division (now the Unemployment Insurance Division). After the hearing, Greenwood was found ineligible. Greenwood appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals. The Board found for Greenwood. Plaintiff then filed for judicial review with the District Court. The District Court reversed the decision of the Board, and Greenwood appealed. Greenwood contended the District Court erred by making findings different from those of the Board, without first determining whether there was substantial evidence to support the Board's findings. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had violated the standard of review by entering findings without determining whether the Board's findings were supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court also found that the Board's findings were inadequate for the District Court to review. The case was remanded to the District Court with directions to remand to the Board for entry of complete findings. Dick Irvin, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor, 207 M 336, 673 P2d 1271, 40 St. Rep. 2086 (1983).

Montana Administrative Procedure Act Not Applicable to Unemployment Insurance Claims: The unemployment compensation insurance law contains a complete procedure for hearing and determining undisputed claims for unemployment insurance. The Board of Labor Appeals, as a quasi-judicial board, may consider not only the record made before the appeals referee but also new evidence produced at the Board hearing. The provisions of MAPA are unworkable when an attempt is made to apply them to determine claims for unemployment insurance benefits. It is an incorrect interpretation of statutory law to hold that the Board has no power to overturn the findings of fact of the appeals referee. In reviewing the Board's decision, the District Court is limited by the provisions of 39-51-2410. Decker Coal Co. v. Employment Security Div., 205 M 1, 667 P2d 923, 40 St. Rep. 1056 (1983).

Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Plaintiff was precluded from bringing a legal action in District Court when he failed to utilize the rehearing and appeal processes provided in this part. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapters 153 and 234 in (1), near beginning after "found by", substituted "the deputy" for "him"; in (4), near middle, substituted "10 days" for "5 days after delivery of such notification or within 7 days"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 153 in (1), near middle of first sentence after "maximum", substituted "benefit amount" for "duration thereof".

Chapter 234 in (4), before "last-known address", substituted "the interested party's" for "his".

1981 Amendment: Substituted "department" for "division" in (1).

Case Notes

Attorney Entitled to Absolute Quasi-Judicial Immunity for Actions in Contested Case Proceedings: The doctrine of immunity evolved to protect not only judges but also certain participants in the judicial process whose functions are closely associated with those of judicial officers. The immunity that those participants receive is quasi-judicial immunity, which is not a mere defense to liability but an absolute immunity from suit. Like judicial immunity, quasi-judicial immunity benefits the public by ensuring that quasi-judicial officers exercise their functions unfettered by fear of legal consequences, as long as the functions are within the scope of the officers' jurisdiction and authorized by law. A state attorney who discharged his duty under professional rules of conduct when notifying a contested case hearings examiner that a certified public accountant who was representing a client was practicing law without a license was protected by quasi-judicial immunity and was not subject to suit. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

Hearings Examiner Entitled to Judicial Immunity: The state Department of Labor and Industry's hearings examiners perform adjudicatory functions comparable to those performed by judges under similar safeguards. As a result, those hearings examiners are entitled to absolute judicial immunity when acting in their adjudicatory capacities. This immunity results from the independence that judges need to make decisions in matters involving such things as monetary and liberty interests, without fear of reprisal from dissatisfied litigants. Absolute immunity is immunity from suit, rather than a mere defense to liability. Judicial immunity is dependent on the challenged conduct being an official act within the judge's broad statutory jurisdiction but does not depend on acting correctly. A person acting in a judicial capacity will not be deprived of immunity simply because that person acted maliciously, mistakenly, or in excess of authority. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

De Novo Board Hearing Discretionary, Not Required, Under Rule: Neither ARM 24.7.314(2), providing that the Board of Labor Appeals may "affirm, modify, or set aside any decision of an appeal tribunal on the basis of the evidence previously submitted in such case, or direct the taking of additional evidence", nor this court's former opinion that the Board "may consider not only the record made before the appeals referee, but new evidence produced at the board hearing" requires the Board to allow the presentation of new evidence, much less requires the Board to conduct a de novo evidentiary hearing. The Board is required to review the entire record. Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 270 M 253, 891 P2d 516, 52 St. Rep. 169 (1995).

Failure to Follow Procedure for Review of Administrative Ruling — Dismissal Proper: The Board of Labor Appeals upheld a decision regarding assessments made by the Unemployment Insurance Division relating to classification of three corporation workers as employees. About the same time, the employer requested a contested case hearing before the Division of Workers' Compensation. Following an adverse decision by the Division of Workers' Compensation, the employer filed a complaint in District Court alleging bad faith and seeking damages. The proper procedure was to file a petition in District Court seeking review of the Board of Labor Appeals' decision. Dismissal of the complaint, based on failure to follow the proper procedure for judicial review, was proper. Cottonwood Hills, Inc. v. St., 238 M 404, 777 P2d 1301, 46 St. Rep. 1371 (1989).

Agency's Unemployment Compensation Decision — Not Res Judicata in Separate Wrongful Discharge Suit: The Board of Labor Appeals ruled that the plaintiff left his employment voluntarily and was not entitled to unemployment compensation. In a separate suit for wrongful discharge, the employer argued that the agency's decision was res judicata as to the issue of whether the plaintiff had been wrongfully discharged or had quit. The Supreme Court held that the agency's decision was not res judicata in the wrongful discharge suit in that the full panoply of issues that arises in a wrongful discharge suit is not within the realm of the agency's consideration in determining eligibility for unemployment benefits. Niles v. Weissman & Sons, Inc., 241 M 230, 786 P2d 662, 47 St. Rep. 240 (1990), following Fetherston v. ASARCO, Inc., 635 F. Supp. 1443 (D.C. Mont. 1986), and distinguishing Nasi v. Dept. of Highways, 231 M 395, 753 P2d 327 (1988).

District Court Required to Adhere to Board's Findings: The District Court must treat the findings of the Board of Labor Appeals as conclusive if the findings are supported by the evidence and there is no fraud. Here, the District Court affirmed the decision of the Board but in so doing entered findings of fact different from those adopted by the Board. Although this was improper, the Supreme Court did not reverse because the eventual result of the case would be the same. Kirby Co. of Bozeman, Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 189 M 1, 614 P2d 1040, 37 St. Rep. 1255 (1980).

Case Notes

No Basis for Charge of Misconduct by Police Officer — Error in Dismissal of Action for Unemployment Benefits: Police officer McKay was charged in District Court with official misconduct for his involvement in an altercation and was suspended from his job, but the charge was dismissed without prejudice for failure to show probable cause. McKay was subsequently charged in City Court with assault, convicted, and terminated from employment. McKay then filed an unemployment insurance claim. The appeals referee determined that McKay was ineligible for benefits under 39-51-2303 because of misconduct. The Board of Labor Appeals affirmed the referee's decision, and McKay appealed to District Court. The District Court took judicial notice of McKay's acquittal on the misconduct charges, but concluded that the acquittal was immaterial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Absent the City Court conviction, no facts existed upon which to base a legal conclusion that McKay engaged in misconduct that would preclude unemployment benefits. Thus, the District Court committed reversible error in affirming the Board's conclusion that McKay was discharged for misconduct. McKay v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1999 MT 329, 297 M 357, 990 P2d 1251, 56 St. Rep. 1313 (1999), distinguishing Smith v. Roosevelt County, 242 M 27, 788 P2d 895, 47 St. Rep. 506 (1990).

Scope of Judicial Review: Under that portion of statute relating to court review, findings of fact by commission, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive and confine scope of judicial review to questions of law. Am. Agrijusters Co. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 1999 MT 241, 296 M 176, 988 P2d 782, 56 St. Rep. 948 (1999); Brothers v. Cargill, Inc., 276 M 105, 915 P2d 226, 53 St. Rep. 299 (1996); Connolly v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 226 M 201, 734 P2d 1211, 44 St. Rep. 587 (1987); Gaunce v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 164 M 445, 524 P2d 1108 (1974); Noone v. Reeder, 151 M 248, 441 P2d 309 (1968), followed in Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997).

Admission of Inadmissible Hearsay — Denial of Due Process Right: Allowing an employer to submit hearsay statements of witnesses with personal knowledge of alleged work misconduct without requiring that the witnesses testify in person at the eligibility hearing denied claimant of the right to confront and cross-examine the witnesses and was a violation of the constitutional right to due process, warranting reversal and remand. Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 290 M 496, 965 P2d 256, 55 St. Rep. 927 (1998), distinguishing Richardson v. Perales, 402 US 389 (1971). See also In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Required Evidentiary Findings — Burden of Proof: As appellate tribunal, the Supreme Court reviews decisions of the Board of Labor Appeals for errors of law. The Board's decision will be upheld if substantial evidence supports it. Whether substantial evidence supports the decision is a question of law. In determining whether substantial evidence exists, only admissible evidence may be considered and testimony that is inadmissible hearsay may not be considered in determining if substantial evidence exists to support an agency's findings. An employer who challenges the eligibility of an unemployment compensation benefits claimant on grounds that the claimant was discharged for employee misconduct bears the burden of proving that the employee was in fact discharged for misconduct. Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 290 M 496, 965 P2d 256, 55 St. Rep. 927 (1998), following Parker v. St. Maries Plywood, 614 P2d 955 (Idaho 1980).

Failure to Notify Employer of Conflict of Interest — Misconduct Question of Law, Not Fact: Hafner was fired for failure to inform the employer of Hafner's pending litigation against the employer's client while continuing to work on the client's account on behalf of the employer. Hafner was denied unemployment compensation benefits based on employee misconduct.

Reversing prior precedent, the Supreme Court held that "misconduct" is a question of law reviewable by the court on appeal. Hafner's failure to inform the employer of the conflict of interest constituted willful disregard of the interests of the employer and of reasonable standards of behavior that the employer had the right to expect. The District Court's determination that Hafner's conduct amounted to misconduct was correct. Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

"Regular" and "Comparable Suitable" Work Construed: Absent statutory definitions, "regular" work means normal, typical, or natural work and "comparable suitable" work means equivalent or similar work with matching duties. Even though he was originally hired as a millman, for the 9 months prior to his back surgery, Brothers was not performing the work that he had originally been assigned because of a prior back injury, but rather was doing a light duty job created especially for him by his employer to allow his continued employment. Even though the job description was modified, Brothers' continued employment in that capacity constituted his regular work. Thus, it was error for the Board of Labor Appeals and the District Court to deny Brothers unemployment benefits under the rationale that the work was not his regular work. To conclude otherwise would allow an employer to defeat an employee's claim for unemployment benefits by the simple expedient of directing the employee to perform duties different from those in his job description and then claiming that the employee was not engaged in his regular work. Brothers v. Cargill, Inc., 276 M 105, 915 P2d 226, 53 St. Rep. 299 (1996).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Referee's Decision: The Board of Labor Appeals adopted the findings and decision of the hearings referee that an employee had been improperly fired by her employer and was entitled to unemployment benefits. The District Court reversed the Board and found that the firing was justified. The Supreme Court held that even though the evidence was subject to more that one interpretation, substantial evidence existed to support the Board's and referee's decision and that therefore the lower court had no jurisdiction to reexamine the facts. Ward v. Johnson, 242 M 225, 790 P2d 483, 47 St. Rep. 748 (1990).

Failure to Follow Procedure for Review of Administrative Ruling — Dismissal Proper: The Board of Labor Appeals upheld a decision regarding assessments made by the Unemployment Insurance Division relating to classification of three corporation workers as employees. About the same time, the employer requested a contested case hearing before the Division of Workers' Compensation. Following an adverse decision by the Division of Workers' Compensation, the employer filed a complaint in District Court alleging bad faith and seeking damages. The proper procedure was to file a petition in District Court seeking review of the Board of Labor Appeals' decision. Dismissal of the complaint, based on failure to follow the proper procedure for judicial review, was proper. Cottonwood Hills, Inc. v. St., 238 M 404, 777 P2d 1301, 46 St. Rep. 1371 (1989).

Error to Dismiss Appeal: The District Court erred when it dismissed the appeal of a Board of Labor Appeals decision when the case was fully submitted on briefs and all that remained was a decision by the District Court. The District Court dismissed the appeal 4 days after the motion to dismiss was made and 1 day after the petitioner had received notice of the motion. It was as much the responsibility of the hospital and the Department of Labor as it was the petitioner's to bring to the District Court's attention the fact that the pending motions had not been ruled upon. The policy favoring the resolution of a case on its merits is more compelling than the policy of dismissal for failure to prosecute. The District Court abused its discretion by failing to provide the petitioner with meaningful access to the judicial system. Martin v. Board of Labor Appeals, 227 M 145, 737 P2d 488, 44 St. Rep. 951 (1987).

Standard of Review — Board of Labor Appeals Decisions: The statutory standard of judicial review of Board of Labor Appeals decisions outlined in 39-51-2410 limits District and Supreme Court review to a consideration of whether the findings of the Board are supported by the evidence. In the present case, the Supreme Court upheld a District Court decision affirming an award of unemployment compensation benefits to a gas plant employee where the employee quit due to hazardous working conditions. The Supreme Court held that an employee need not be seriously injured before acting to remove himself from an unsafe working environment. Gypsy Highview Gathering Sys., Inc. v. Stokes, 221 M 11, 716 P2d 620, 43 St. Rep. 595 (1986), followed in Phoenix Physical Therapy v. Unemployment Ins. Div., 284 M 95, 943 P2d 523, 54 St. Rep. 791 (1997).

Selective Treatment of Record Prohibited: Wessell was terminated from her position with plaintiff. Plaintiff contended Wessell quit, and Wessell contended she was fired. Wessell filed for unemployment benefits. Plaintiff alleged she had been terminated for misconduct. A claims examiner determined there was no evidence of misconduct and approved Wessell's application. Plaintiff appealed, and a hearing appeals referee affirmed the award of benefits, finding Wessell had been terminated for reasons other than misconduct. The Board of Labor Appeals affirmed the referee. Plaintiff then appealed to District Court, which concluded that Wessell had been fired for misconduct and terminated her benefits. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that although testimony was sometimes conflicting and equivocal, there was substantial credible evidence to support the Board's determination. The District Court's determination could be supported only by selective treatment of certain aspects of the record. The court also had to weigh testimony and credibility differently from the referee and the Board. Because the Board's finding was not clearly erroneous in view of the whole record, the decision of the District Court was reversed. Slater v. Employment Sec. Div., 208 M 166, 676 P2d 220, 41 St. Rep. 243 (1984).

Adequate Findings Required for Review: Greenwood was hired as a truck driver by plaintiff. During the 14 months of his employment, six incidents of alleged misconduct occurred. Plaintiff discharged Greenwood on the basis of those incidents. Greenwood applied for unemployment benefits. Plaintiff challenged, contending Greenwood was ineligible because he was discharged for misconduct. Greenwood was awarded benefits, and plaintiff appealed to the appeals section of the Employment Security Division (now the Unemployment Insurance Division). After the hearing, Greenwood was found ineligible. Greenwood appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals. The Board found for Greenwood. Plaintiff then filed for judicial review with the District Court. The District Court reversed the decision of the Board, and Greenwood appealed. Greenwood contended the District Court erred by making findings different from those of the Board, without first determining whether there was substantial evidence to support the Board's findings. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had violated the standard of review by entering findings without determining whether the Board's findings were supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court also found that the Board's findings were inadequate for the District Court to review. The case was remanded to the District Court with directions to remand to the Board for entry of complete findings. Dick Irvin, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor, 207 M 336, 673 P2d 1271, 40 St. Rep. 2086 (1983).

Montana Administrative Procedure Act Not Applicable to Unemployment Insurance Claims: The unemployment compensation insurance law contains a complete procedure for hearing and determining undisputed claims for unemployment insurance. The Board of Labor Appeals, as a quasi-judicial board, may consider not only the record made before the appeals referee but also new evidence produced at the Board hearing. The provisions of MAPA are unworkable when an attempt is made to apply them to determine claims for unemployment insurance benefits. It is an incorrect interpretation of statutory law to hold that the Board has no power to overturn the findings of fact of the appeals referee. In reviewing the Board's decision, the District Court is limited by the provisions of 39-51-2410. Decker Coal Co. v. Employment Security Div., 205 M 1, 667 P2d 923, 40 St. Rep. 1056 (1983).

The Montana Administrative Procedure Act does not apply to agency and court handling of claims for unemployment insurance benefits. Billings v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 204 M 38, 663 P2d 1167, 40 St. Rep. 648 (1983), followed in Brothers v. Cargill, Inc., 276 M 105, 915 P2d 226, 53 St. Rep. 299 (1996).

Factual Findings of Board Conclusive: It was error for the District Court, in reviewing the decision of the Board of Labor Appeals, to determine if the findings of the Board were supported by evidence. Billings v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 204 M 38, 663 P2d 1167, 40 St. Rep. 648 (1983).

Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Plaintiff was precluded from bringing a legal action in District Court when he failed to utilize the rehearing and appeal processes provided in this part. Barnicoat v. Comm'r of Dept. of Labor and Industry, 201 M 221, 653 P2d 498, 39 St. Rep. 2070 (1982).

Jurisdiction — Proper Parties and Timeliness: Retail clerks went on strike against petitioner in a labor dispute. The clerks claimed unemployment benefits. Benefits are denied during a strike if unemployment results from a "stoppage of work" existing because of a labor dispute. A deputy of the Employment Security Division (now the Unemployment Insurance Division) found claimants disqualified from benefits. Claiming strikers appealed to a referee who sustained the denial of benefits. Claimants then appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals which reversed the referee. Petitioner filed petitions for review with the District Court, naming as respondent the Board of Labor Appeals. Following a motion to dismiss the petition, the appellants and counsel for the Employment Security Division entered an agreement to substitute the Division and the court ordered the substitution. The clerks were not made parties, and at the time service was made on the Board, appellants did not provide sufficient copies. The clerks' union moved to intervene and the motion was granted. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, concluding that failure to name all parties and failure to provide a sufficient number of copies of the petition for service were fatal jurisdictional flaws. Petitioners argued that intervention by the union conferred jurisdiction. It did not. The answer raised lack of jurisdiction. Petitioners argued the applicability of Rule 21, M.R.Civ.P., which provides that parties may be added or dropped at any stage of the proceeding. The rule presupposes in personam jurisdiction. The rule does not confer that jurisdiction. Under this section, the decision of the Board became final as to claimants 30 days after notification of the decision. The District Court thereafter had no jurisdiction over the clerks and could acquire none. Claimants' benefits could not be adversely affected, but they are not indispensable to a review of legal questions by the District Court. There is a justiciable controversy between petitioners and the Employment Security Division concerning "work stoppage". F.W. Woolworth Co., Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Service on State Governmental Division — Substance Over Form: Retail clerks went on strike against petitioner in a labor dispute. The clerks claimed unemployment benefits. Benefits are denied during a strike if unemployment results from a "stoppage of work" existing because of a labor dispute. A deputy of the Employment Security Division (now the Unemployment Insurance Division) found claimants disqualified from benefits. Claiming strikers appealed to a referee who sustained the denial of benefits. Claimants then appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals which reversed the referee. Petitioner filed petitions for review with the District Court, naming as respondent the Board of Labor Appeals. Following a motion to dismiss the petition, the appellants and counsel for the Employment Security Division entered an agreement to substitute the Division and the court ordered the substitution. The clerks were not made parties, and at the time service was made on the Board, appellants did not provide sufficient copies. The clerks' union moved to intervene and the motion was granted. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, concluding that failure to name all parties and failure to provide a sufficient number of copies of the petition for service were fatal jurisdictional flaws. Since the Board and the Division are housed within the same department of state government and were represented by the same counsel, granting summary judgment on purely technical grounds would be an unconscionable elevation of form over substance. F.W. Woolworth Co., Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

District Court Required to Adhere to Board's Findings: The District Court must treat the findings of the Board of Labor Appeals as conclusive if the findings are supported by the evidence and there is no fraud. Here, the District Court affirmed the decision of the Board but in so doing entered findings of fact different from those adopted by the Board. Although this was improper, the Supreme Court did not reverse because the eventual result of the case would be the same. Kirby Co. of Bozeman, Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 189 M 1, 614 P2d 1040, 37 St. Rep. 1255 (1980).

Findings of Commission: Finding of Unemployment Compensation Commission (now Board of Labor Appeals) that claimant was not available for and seeking work as required by 39-51-2104 was proper where the evidence showed that claimant quit his job to protect his social security retirement benefits; he knew that his employer would not rehire him if he failed to report off from work; he went to Minnesota to take a rest; and he failed to seek full-time employment. Ollila v. Reeder, 148 M 134, 417 P2d 473 (1966).

When Findings of Commission Conclusive Upon Courts: The provision of this section that the findings of the Unemployment Compensation Commission (now Board of Labor Appeals) as to the facts, if supported by evidence and in the absence of fraud, shall be conclusive was held to mean not a mere scintilla but substantial evidence, or such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. In a judicial review of the commission's decision, the District Court is precluded from considering the preponderance of the evidence and is limited to questions of law, the question whether there is substantial evidence to sustain them being one of law. Jordan v. Craighead, 114 M 337, 136 P2d 526 (1943).

Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 171 inserted (1)(b) establishing wage amounts applicable to determining eligibility for extended benefits; in (2) substituted "subsection (1)(c)" for "subsection (1)(b)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 25, 1993.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 171, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1983 Amendment: At end of (1)(b), deleted "except that subsections (1), (2), and (4) of 39-51-2304 do not apply to this section"; at end of first sentence of (2), substituted "if he fails to seek work" for "if he fails without good cause either to apply for available and suitable work, to accept suitable work offered to him, or, when so directed by the department, to return to his customary occupation, if any"; at end of (2), deleted ", with 4 weeks' reduction in benefit duration, as determined by the department, provided he has not left this work under disqualifying circumstances"; inserted (3) disqualifying claimant discharged for gross misconduct until he purges disqualification by returning to work; inserted (4) requiring claimant who leaves work to attend school to requalify with certain period of earnings; at beginning of (5), substituted "For the purposes of determining eligibility for extended benefits" for "For the purposes of subsection (2)".

1983 Title: The title to HB 301 (Ch. 272, L. 1983) read: "A bill for an act entitled: "An act to comply with federal requirements for disqualification for failing to seek work and to provide for federal minimum disqualifications in the case of extended benefits; amending section 39-51-2508, MCA.""

1981 Amendments: Chapter 99 added (1)(b), relating to disqualification and requalification under part 23 of this chapter; in (1)(c), inserted "other" before "requirements"; deleted ", including not being subject to a disqualification for the receipt of benefits" at the end of (1)(c); inserted (2) disqualifying claimant who does not seek or accept suitable work and stating method of purging such disqualification; and inserted (3) stating method for defining suitable work.

Chapter 349 substituted "department" for "division" throughout the section.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 464 (Ch. 99, L. 1981), provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it delegates rulemaking authority to the Department of Labor and Industry in section 1, subsection (3).

It is the intent of this bill that the Department adopt the same definition for "suitable work" that is used in the federal Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act of 1974, as amended. This is a conformity requirement of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act which is imposed on the states."

The "federal Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act", referred to in this statement of intent, as adopted by the House Labor and Employment Relations Committee, was also referred to in HB 464 as originally introduced but was changed to the "Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1980, P.L. 96-499" (see subsection (5) of this section) by the House Committee of the Whole.

Vacation Pay Not Considered Wages for Purposes of Determining Eligibility for Unemployment Benefits — Claim Independent of Contract Not Precluded by Federal Labor Law: Lumber company employees filed for unemployment insurance benefits following a week-long shutdown of the lumber mills. Their claims were denied in turn by the Department of Labor and Industry, a referee, and the Board of Labor Appeals. The Department reasoned that the employees received vacation pay during their time away from work and that because they earned wages, they could not be considered totally unemployed and were thus ineligible for benefits. On appeal to the District Court, the ineligibility determination was reversed when the court determined that the Department had incorrectly concluded that, as a matter of law, wages previously paid to the employees had been properly imputed to the shutdown period. The company appealed to the Supreme Court, and the primary issue was whether the employees were eligible for benefits during the shutdown. The employees argued that their collective bargaining agreement did not require time off in order to take vacation pay, but rather that vacation pay is an entitlement once an employee works the specified number of hours during the vacation base year. The Supreme Court agreed. Vacation pay is payment in exchange for an employee's work in the vacation base year. Even though time off could be scheduled unilaterally by the employer when the mill was closed, the vacation pay received was not considered compensation for time off during the shutdown. Thus, the employees did not earn wages during the shutdown that would prevent them from qualifying for unemployment benefits. The employer's argument that the employees were "voluntarily unemployed" because they consented to the shutdown in their collective bargaining agreement was also unpersuasive. A collective bargaining agreement cannot waive rights ensured to an employee by state law. Lastly, this action was not precluded by sec. 301 of the federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 185) because the case involved matters implicating state rules and obligations independent of the labor contract, as evidenced by the inclusion as parties those state agencies charged with determining unemployment eligibility. The District Court was affirmed, and the case was remanded to the appropriate state agencies for decisions on each individual claim. Multiple Stimson Employees v. Because the more particular statute must control to the extent of any inconsistency, the Department of Labor and Industry is limited to recovery of those amounts of benefits wrongfully received by the claimant (plus, under the 1985 amendment, interest). 39-51-3206. Collection of benefit overpayments.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 61 at end of second sentence inserted exception clause providing 100% offset of benefits in cases of theft and fraud; at end of third sentence after "contributions" deleted "unless the department finds that the benefits were received through no fault of the person and the recovery of the benefits would be against equity and good conscience"; inserted fourth sentence authorizing department to waive benefit overpayment upon finding that claimant did not conceal or misrepresent material facts to obtain overpaid benefits and that recovery would cause long-term financial hardship; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Saving Clause: Section 12, Ch. 61, L. 1999, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 61, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 171 inserted second sentence limiting benefit offset to 50% of weekly benefits absent written consent. Amendment effective March 25, 1993.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 171, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: Near end substituted "the laws of this state or another state" for "this state or another state law".

1987 Amendment: Substituted text (see 1987 Session Law) for former text that read: "Any person who, by reason of the nondisclosure or misrepresentation by him or by another of a material fact, irrespective of whether such nondisclosure or misrepresentation was known or fraudulent, has received any sum as benefits under this chapter while any conditions for the receipt of benefits imposed by this chapter were not fulfilled in his case or while he was disqualified from receiving benefits shall, in the discretion of the department, either be liable to have such sum deducted from any future benefits payable to him under this chapter or shall be liable to repay to the department for the unemployment insurance fund a sum equal to the amount so received by him, and such sum shall be collectible in the manner provided in this chapter for the collection of past due contributions. An action for collection of overpaid benefits must be brought within 5 years after the date of such overpayment or it is barred."

1981 Amendment: Substituted "department" for "division" throughout the section.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 7 in (1) near end of second sentence after "department of" substituted "revenue" for "administration"; and in (2) in first and third sentences after "department of" substituted "revenue" for "administration" and in fourth sentence after "collected, the" substituted "department of revenue" for "state auditor". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.
1995 Amendment: Chapter 325 throughout section substituted "department of administration" for "state auditor"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.
1989 Amendment: Throughout section changed "department of revenue" to "state auditor". Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

CHAPTER 71
WORKERS' COMPENSATION

Chapter Compiler's Comments
1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 464, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because of the following:
The division of workers' compensation needs to adopt rules to efficiently and fairly implement the Workers' Compensation Act. There are numerous references throughout the act to rules, rates, procedures, and forms to be prescribed by the division (e.g., 39-71-208, 39-71-307, 39-71-410, 39-71-604, 39-71-2102, 39-71-2303 [renumbered 39-71-2336], and 39-71-2304 [now repealed]). However, there is no explicit statutory grant of rulemaking authority in the chapter.
The Montana supreme court, in Garland v. The Anaconda Company, 177 Mont. 240, 581 P.2d 431 (1978), tacitly recognized 39-71-203 as a general grant of rulemaking authority. To preserve the division's rulemaking authority and extend it to the amendments promulgated in this bill, the legislature explicitly grants and extends rulemaking authority to the division to implement the Workers' Compensation Act.
The division may adopt rules as necessary to implement the act. The division shall provide the rules, procedures, and forms specifically referred to in sections of the act and implement other sections as necessary and appropriate by providing specific guidelines, policies, and procedures to serve the efficient and fair administration of the act."
Applicability: Section 72, Ch. 464, L. 1987, provided: "(1) Sections 8 [39-71-2401] and 52 through 57 [39-71-2406 through 39-71-2411] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all injuries and diseases, regardless of the date of occurrence. With respect to rehabilitation disputes, sections 8 [39-71-2401] and 52 through 57 [39-71-2406 through 39-71-2411] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, unless the division had jurisdiction over the dispute under the law in effect at the time of injury.
(2) The remaining portions of this act apply only to injuries, diseases, and events occurring after June 30, 1987."

Chapter Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Inability to Pay for Second Medical Examination Held Not to Deny Access to Justice: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability under the Workers' Compensation Act and requested the Department of Labor and Industry to process the claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by providing her with a medical examination. Subsequently, Grooms claimed that her inability to pay for a second medical examination denied her right to access to justice. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that when her claim was denied under the Workers' Compensation Act, Grooms retained the right under 39-72-611 (now repealed) to have her claim resolved by the Workers' Compensation Court. Therefore, Grooms was not precluded from pursuing her claim and thereby denied access to justice. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court, noting that when her claim was denied, Grooms was informed by an order of the Department that she had the right to request a second examination under 39-72-602, which she would pay for, and a right to request a hearing pursuant to 39-72-611 (now repealed) before the Department issued its final determination. The Supreme Court noted that Grooms' right to a hearing to pursue her claim was not dependent upon a second medical examination. Thus, she was not denied access to justice by the requirement that she pay for any second medical examination. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Equitable Estoppel Against Discontinuation of Worker's Benefits — Element of Representation or Concealment of Material Facts Not Satisfied: After Beery was injured in a fall from an oil rig in 1984, his employer's workers' compensation insurer, CNA Insurance Company, paid domiciliary care benefits for a period of time. Correspondence from CNA indicated that payment was being made to prevent future litigation but that CNA had reservations about the necessity for the payments and care. After Beery was evaluated by a medical panel that concluded that he did not need domiciliary care, CNA terminated benefits. The Supreme Court held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel did not apply to prevent CNA from terminating coverage because one of the criteria announced in Mellem v. Kalispell Laundry & Dry Cleaners, 237 M 439, 774 P2d 390 (1989), that there be an act amounting to a representation or concealment of material facts, had not been satisfied by Beery. Beery's reliance on a letter from the CNA adjuster that stated that the insurer did not contest Beery's right to care was taken out of context because the evidence showed that CNA did reserve the right to determine the value and extent of the care paid for. Other correspondence and the settlement agreement between the parties covering benefits during an earlier period of time support this finding. The Supreme Court also held that although Beery argues he did not have an opportunity to establish the satisfaction of all of the elements of the test for estoppel, the record shows that Beery had ample opportunity before the Workers' Compensation Court to establish the medical necessity for the care and, therefore, he cannot argue that he was put in a worse situation than he would have been in had there not been a representation or concealment. Beery v. Grace Drilling, 260 M 157, 859 P2d 429, 50 St. Rep. 980 (1993).

Claimant Not Eligible to Receive Benefits Under Both Workers' Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act: As held in Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983), an eligible claimant may seek benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act or the Occupational Disease Act; however, a claimant may not receive benefits under both Acts. Poppleton v. Rollins, Inc., 226 M 267, 735 P2d 286, 44 St. Rep. 644 (1987).

Allergic Contact Dermatitis as Injury and Disease — Claimant's Election of Remedy: Claimant developed allergic contact dermatitis unexpectedly after a single exposure to chemicals that triggered an immunological response creating antibodies that were his allergy, even though he had been exposed to the chemicals for many years without any response. This reaction met the tests of 39-71-119, constituting the allergy as an injury within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Act, as well as an occupational disease within the meaning of the Occupational Disease Act. Claimant could elect his remedy between the Acts. Bremer v. Buerkle, 223 M 495, 727 P2d 529, 43 St. Rep. 1942 (1986).

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973), and distinguished in Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314, 52 St. Rep. 705 (1995).

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Election by Claimant Between Occupational Disease Act and Workers' Compensation Act Permissible: The fact that a person may have a compensable disease under the Occupational Disease Act does not preclude eligibility under the Workers' Compensation Act. Thus a claimant who meets the requirements of both acts may choose his remedy. The phrase "exclusive remedy" in 39-72-305 means that an employee does not have a common-law action against his employer. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court: A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court has declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers' Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981).

Purpose of Workers' Compensation:

The object of such legislation is to compensate injured workers for disabilities caused from industrial accidents. The law was not enacted to provide for payments of damages in tort-connected liability cases. The principle on which it is based is social insurance, to insure the injured worker against disability from connected injuries. Mahlum v. Broeder, 147 M 386, 412 P2d 572 (1966).

It is the theory of the workers' compensation law that loss occasioned by injury to a worker shall not be borne by the worker alone, but by the industry directly and indirectly through the cost of the product by the public. St. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 272, 301 P2d 954 (1956).

Act to Be Liberally Construed in Favor of the Claimant: The Workers' Compensation Act must be construed liberally in favor of the claimant, and to authorize recovery the law does not require demonstration or such a degree of proof as, excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty. Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958).

Allowance Permitted Under Act Does Not Provide Measure of Damages in Tort Action: In an action by an employee for negligence of employer who had not elected to be bound by the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the compensation provided by the Act is not to be taken as a yardstick to measure plaintiff's damages, since the compensation is not based upon a cause of action for tort and omits entirely the element of pain and suffering. Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 M 603, 69 P2d 764 (1937).

Cause of Action for Damages Not Created: The right to secure compensation for the results of an industrial accident, as provided for in the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), is not a cause of action for damages for the resulting injury. In determining the amount of an award of compensation under the Act, the element of pain and suffering has no place. Chisholm v. Vocational School for Girls, 103 M 503, 64 P2d 838 (1936).

Hospitalization of Employees — Act as Part of Contract: A contract entered into between a mining company and a hospital for the hospitalization of its employees under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) must be construed in the light of the intent and purpose of the Act which became a part of the contract. Sample v. Murray Hosp., 103 M 195, 62 P2d 241 (1936).

Enforcement of Court's Decision: The Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) is required to obey direction of District Court made in pursuance of the opinion of the Supreme Court, as against the contention that Writ of Mandate did not lie since the Board's functions in the matter were quasi-judicial, its functions under the remand being ministerial only. State ex rel. Miller v. Indus. Accident Bd., 102 M 206, 56 P2d 1087 (1936).

Act to Be Administered to Give Employee Greatest Protection: The Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) was enacted for the benefit of the employee and the act implies that the first duty of the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) is to administer it so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection consistent with its purposes. Miller v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 101 M 212, 53 P2d 704 (1936).

Effect to Be Given to Act as a Whole: In the construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), all of its sections, as originally enacted or amended, must be considered together in such manner as to give effect to the Act as a whole. State ex rel. Roundup Coal Min. Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 94 M 386, 23 P2d 253 (1933).

Theory of Act: The theory of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) is that loss occasioned by injury to the worker shall not be borne by him alone, but directly by the industry and indirectly by the public, the same as is the deterioration of the buildings, machinery, and other appliances necessary to enable the employer to carry on the particular industry. Murray Hosp. v. Angrove, 92 M 101, 10 P2d 577 (1932).

Compensation to Be Awarded Only When Provided For: The purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) is to provide that the loss occasioned to an employee by reason of an injury shall not be borne by him alone, but directly by the industry and indirectly by the public. Its provisions must be liberally construed, but in so construing it the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) and the courts may not disregard its plain provisions or award compensation in a case for which no provision is made. Kerns v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 87 M 546, 289 P 563 (1930). See also Betor v. Nat'l Biscuit Co., 85 M 481, 280 P 641 (1929), and Dosen v. E. Butte Copper Min. Co., 78 M 579, 254 P 880 (1927).

Absolute Remedy: It is competent for a party to waive his right to have a cause of action determined by a court before it actually arises, especially where the Legislature has provided a substitute remedy, as under the Workers' Compensation Act, which renders his right to relief absolute. Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

Constitutionality: The rule that a statute will not be declared invalid on constitutional grounds unless its invalidity is made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt applies with peculiar force where, as in the case of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the statute seems to have been found satisfactory after a 4-year period of operation by those directly affected by it, namely the employer and the employee. The Workmen's Compensation Act is not repugnant to the state constitution. Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

Applicable to County Employees: The Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) is applicable to counties and county employees, and as such it is not class legislation, nor is it in violation of the constitutional prohibition against donations to individuals. Lewis & Clark County v. Indus. Accident Bd., 52 M 6, 155 P 268 (1916).

OPINIONS PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Salary Payments to Municipal Policemen After Disabling Injury: Section 7-32-4132 requires a municipality to pay an injured policeman's full salary during the period of disability or 1 year, whichever ends first. The Workers' Compensation Fund is not liable for any wage loss benefits during that period because the municipality pays the policeman in full and he has suffered no wage loss. 37 A.G. Op. 156 (1978).

Applicability of Workers' Compensation Act on Indian Reservations: The Montana Workers' Compensation Act does not apply to Indian businesses being conducted within the borders of an Indian reservation. 37 A.G. Op. 28 (1977).

Part Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Work-Related Injury Following Nonwork-Related Injury — Permanent Total Disability Found — Workers' Compensation Court's Findings of Fact Reviewed De Novo and Reversed: Larson, a parts manager for a truck dealership, suffered a nonwork-related heart attack in 1980 but returned to work full-time in 1981. Then, in July 1981, Larson suffered a left inguinal hernia after lifting a heavy truck spring at his job. The Workers' Compensation Court found that Larson's heart attack and other medical problems had rendered him totally disabled prior to the industrial injury. For that reason, Larson was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits. The court also found that even if Larson's employer had the burden of proving that Larson could still work, the employer's insurance company had proved that Larson was employable despite his industrial accident. The Supreme Court, applying the 1979 workers' compensation statutes liberally and in favor of the injured worker, noted that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's existing physical condition at the time of employment. Citing McIntyre v. Glen Lake Irrigation District, 249 M 63, 813 P2d 451 (1991), and White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787 (1992), the Supreme Court held that to the extent that the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of fact are based upon deposition testimony, the Supreme Court sits in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to review the evidence de novo. The Supreme Court therefore reviewed the deposition testimony of the physicians and rehabilitation counselors and found that there was insufficient evidence from which the Workers' Compensation Court could determine that Larson had a reasonable prospect for employment. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), citing Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 271 M 98, 894 P2d 327 (1995).

Independent Disabling Conditions — One Work-Related, Another Not: The Workers' Compensation Court held that Larson was ineligible to receive permanent total disability benefits for a work-related hernia because he first became totally disabled by a preexisting, nonwork-related and independent heart condition. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court, noting that the liberal construction provision in 39-71-104 (now repealed) favored the injured worker, relied on Bond v. St. Regis Paper Co., 174 M 417, 571 P2d 372 (1977), for the proposition that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's physical condition at the time of employment and on Shea v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 529 P2d 1131 (Wash. Ct. App. 1974), and Estate of Ensley v. Anglo Alaska Constr., 773 P2d 955 (Alaska 1989), in holding that if evidence showed that Larson's hernia produced a permanent total disability, total disability benefits were payable regardless of the fact that the preexisting, nonwork-related heart condition also could be considered a cause of the permanent total disability. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 271 M 98, 894 P2d 327, 52 St. Rep. 369 (1995). See also Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

Medical Evidence Entered by Deposition — No Substantial Evidence to Deny Claim — Liberal Construction: Because the record on appeal of a Workers' Compensation Court decision consisted mainly of testimony by deposition, the court's function on review is different than the usual limited standard of review. When the critical evidence, particularly medical evidence, is entered by deposition, the Supreme Court is in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to judge the weight to be given to such record testimony. A review of the medical experts' depositions in this case reveals a sharp conflict in the medical evidence presented in regard to the claimant's injury. The court held that the testimony of the expert relied on in the Workers' Compensation Court's findings did not amount to substantial evidence and that there was no causal relation between claimant's current symptoms and the original injuries suffered while in defendant's employ. Moreover, the Legislature has mandated that the Workers' Compensation Act be liberally construed. Shupert v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 215 M 182, 696 P2d 436, 42 St. Rep. 277 (1985), followed in Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985).

Restrictions on Liberal Construction:

The rule of liberal construction does not relieve the court of its duty to consider carefully all of the evidence before determining whether the weight of the evidence presented supports the worker's claim. Soelter v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 211 M 50, 683 P2d 480, 41 St. Rep. 1205 (1984).

The court cannot liberally construe a statute to the point of repealing it. Klein v. Independent Wholesale Assoc. Grocers, 167 M 341, 538 P2d 1358 (1975).

While the Workers' Compensation Act must be liberally construed, it does not mean that the employer becomes the insurer of his employees at all times during the employment. Williams v. Glacier Park Co., 140 M 440, 373 P2d 517 (1962); Sullivan v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Helena, 103 M 117, 61 P2d 838 (1936).

While 39-71-104 (now repealed) directs a liberal construction of the Act, it is not meant thereby that the Workers' Compensation Administrative Agency or the courts may disregard its clear statutory provisions. State ex rel. Magelo v. Indus. Accident Bd., 102 M 455, 59 P2d 785 (1936); Davis v. Indus. Accident Bd., 92 M 503, 15 P2d 919 (1932).

Offset Statute Includes All of Social Security Provisions: In construing the Offset Statute of the Workers' Compensation Act, the court found that it was the intention of the Legislature to incorporate all of the relevant subchapters of the Social Security Act into the Statute and not merely section 301 (since repealed), which was the beginning subchapter of the Social Security Act. Limiting the Statute to just section 301 would defeat the Statute's meaning and purpose and would lead to an absurd result whereas a reasonable construction avoids it. The court therefore held that the Offset Statute is effective and that despite the repeal of section 301, federal disability insurance benefits are covered under the Statute. McClanathan v. St. Compensation Ins. Fund, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, 37 St. Rep. 113 (1980).

Liberal Construction — Employee to Keep Full Amount of Common-Law Recovery: The Legislature has commanded the courts to construe the Workers' Compensation Act liberally in favor of the claimant. It is plainly the intent of the Act that if an employee is injured in the course of his employment, through the negligence of one other than his employer or his employer's servants, the injured employee may sue, recover, and keep the full amount of his common-law recovery from the responsible third party, plus one-half of his costs or 50% of the benefits he received from the employer under the Act. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86, 36 St. Rep. 2107 (1979).

Changing Physicians — Effect on Compensation: Although an administrative rule adopted pursuant to 39-71-203 properly requires prior employer authorization before an injured employee changes physicians and denies coverage in the absence of authorization, the Workers'

Compensation Court must consider the medical reports and diagnosis of the second doctor in order to determine physical disability of claimant because statutory provisions have always been liberally construed in favor of the injured worker, even though the employer cannot be charged for services of second doctor. Garland v. The Anaconda Co., 177 M 240, 581 P2d 431 (1978).

Function of Supreme Court: The function of the Supreme Court in workers' compensation cases is to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support the finding of the Workers' Compensation Court. Flansburg v. Pack River Co., 172 M 163 , 561 P2d 1329 (1977).

Wages at Time of Injury: Notwithstanding the directive in 39-71-104 (now repealed) to construe provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act liberally, the court found no room for interpretation of the words "wages received at the time of the injury" in section 92-703, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Olson v. Manion's, Inc., 162 M 197, 510 P2d 6 (1973).

Failure to List Children in Claim: Where claimant failed to list all of his children in his claim for compensation, it did not constitute a waiver of the claim. Stokes v. Delaney & Sons, Inc., 143 M 516, 391 P2d 698 (1964).

Liberal Construction in Favor of Claimant:

Section 39-71-104 (now repealed) means that the Workers' Compensation Act shall be liberally construed in favor of the claimant. Stokes v. Delaney & Sons, Inc., 143 M 516, 391 P2d 698 (1964); Marker v. Zeiler, 140 M 44, 367 P2d 311 (1961); Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958); Grief v. Indus. Accident Fund, 108 M 519, 93 P2d 961 (1939), distinguished in Roberts v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 273 M 266, 903 P2d 782, 52 St. Rep. 967 (1995).

The Industrial Accident Board's (now Department of Labor and Industry's) first duty is to administer the Workers' Compensation Act so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act. Yurkovich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 132 M 77, 314 P2d 866 (1957).

The court cannot under the guise of liberal interpretation disregard plain provisions of 39-71-104 (now repealed), but when it is open to more than one interpretation, one favorable to the employee and the other against him, the court must give it the construction most favorable to the injured worker. Geary v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 120 M 485, 188 P2d 185 (1947).

Where board assumed jurisdiction by allowing physician's claim for medical services rendered to employee who lost no wages by his injury, it could subsequently award compensation for loss of injured eye notwithstanding 39-71-601, under liberal construction of this Act in favor of beneficiaries as required by 39-71-104 (now repealed). Gugler v. Indus. Accident Bd., 117 M 38, 157 P2d 89 (1945).

The Workers' Compensation Act, and every part and section thereof, is to be liberally construed in order that the humane purposes of the legislation shall not be defeated by narrow and technical construction, Tweedie v. Indus. Accident Bd., 101 M 256, 53 P2d 1145 (1936); and the intention of such a requirement is for the benefit and protection of the injured worker and the worker's beneficiaries. Gaffney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 129 M 394, 287 P2d 256 (1955); Levo v. General-Shea-Morrison, 128 M 570, 280 P2d 1086 (1955).

Deposition of Doctor: Where claimant petitioned for the granting of further compensation, which was denied, and the court admitted her testimony as to her physical condition subsequent to the hearing before the board, claimant was entitled to have admitted a doctor's deposition which had been taken while the appeal from the board's ruling was pending. Zachariasen v. Meeks, 133 M 278, 322 P2d 1115 (1958).

Scope of Employment: In determining whether or not an employee was acting within the scope of his employment, a fundamental rule is that in cases where some reasonably immediate service to the employer can be discerned the claim has been sustained, but where no immediate service is found the claim is denied. Morgan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 133 M 254, 321 P2d 232 (1958).

Accidents Occurring Outside of State: Employees who are resident citizens of the state, employed and paid in Montana through the only office of their employer, a Montana corporation, are entitled to the benefits of the workers' compensation laws of Montana although they were injured in another state. State ex rel. Morgan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 272, 300 P2d 954 (1956). (Dissenting opinion, 130 M 272, 300 P2d 954 (1956).)

Liberal Construction Not in Conflict With Other Rules of Construction: The liberal construction required by 39-71-104 (now repealed) is not one which violates 1-2-106 under which words shall be construed according to the context of a statute and approved usage of the language thereof. Section 1-2-101 says that the office of the judge is to ascertain and declare what has been omitted, not to omit what has been inserted or to favor the claimant regardless of the effect of the decision upon the Workers' Compensation Act as a whole or upon its application in future cases, but rather to give effect to the general legislative purposes of the Act as a whole. Hendy v. Indus. Accident Bd., 115 M 516, 146 P2d 324 (1944).

Denial of Compensation: A claim was filed within time required by 39-71-601 but was defective because it was not made under oath as required by the same statute. The claim was refiled under oath after the statutory period had run. Section 39-71-104 (now repealed) requires that Title 39, ch. 71, be liberally construed and therefore the board was in error in denying and dismissing the claim. Chisholm v. Vocational School for Girls, 103 M 503, 64 P2d 838 (1936).

Liberal Construction — Specific Mandate: Under 39-71-104 (now repealed), liberal construction of the general compensation law is a specific mandate. Koppang v. Sevier, 101 M 234, 53 P2d 455 (1936).

Amount of Compensation: In the course of his employment a coal miner lost his left eye and received full compensation under the provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act. Nine years later while working at the same occupation under a different employer he again suffered an accident destroying the vision of his right eye, thus rendering him totally blind. Under a liberal construction of the Act the coal miner was entitled to compensation for a total permanent disability for a period of 500 weeks, less payments previously received for 200 weeks rather than compensation for the loss of one eye. McDaniel v. Eagle Coal Co., 99 M 309, 43 P2d 655, 99 ALR 1492 (1935).

Case Notes

Liability of Employer for Tortious Act: Although the language of 39-71-413 provides for a cause of action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, pursuant to Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986), such an action may be brought against an employer as well. To fail to hold employers liable in the same manner as their employees by permitting an employer to commit an intentional and malicious act or omission that causes an injury to an employee and then to allow the employer to hide behind the exclusivity statutes would defeat the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

Failure to Provide Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits — Occupational Disease Act Violative of Equal Protection: Henry's on-the-job injury claim was accepted under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, but his request for rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that providing rehabilitation benefits to workers covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, but not to workers covered by the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, was not rationally related to the legitimate government interest of returning workers to work as soon as possible after suffering a work-related injury. The historical justification for treating workers differently under the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana no longer exists. Therefore, to the extent that it fails to provide vocational rehabilitation benefits as are provided under the Workers' Compensation Act, the Occupational Disease Act of Montana violates the equal protection clause, Art. II, sec. 4, of the Montana Constitution. Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999), distinguishing Eastman v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989).

Independent Medical Examination — Qualifications of Examining Physician — Determination of Applicable Law: In 1989, Blythe was stuck by a needle that had previously been used on an AIDS patient, and after that time, Blythe alleged that he was suffering from depression and hallucinations that prevented him from working. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that Blythe was malingering. The insurer required an independent medical examination (IME), and the Workers' Compensation Court allowed testimony on the issue of malingering from two Ph.D. clinical psychologists, one of whom conducted the IME by the order of the Workers' Compensation Court. Citing St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Sky Country, Inc., 239 M 376, 780 P2d 1135

(1989), the Supreme Court held that the applicable substantive law is the law as it was at the time of injury and that the applicable law for procedural purposes is the law at the time of trial. The issue of who is qualified to conduct an IME is procedural rather than substantive, so the applicable law is the 1993 version of 39-71-605. The Supreme Court also held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it treated the listing of types of treating physicians in 39-71-116 to be exemplary rather than exclusive. The Supreme Court noted that even if the list of types of physicians included a clinical psychologist, which it did not, the law also required that the physicians be licensed in Montana. The psychologist who conducted the IME was not licensed as a physician. The testimony of one of the psychologists was therefore inadmissible, but because the Supreme Court could not determine whether the outcome of the trial would have been different without the inadmissible testimony, it remanded the case to the Workers' Compensation Court for that determination. EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 281 M 50, 931 P2d 38, 54 St. Rep. 54 (1997).

Lack of Compensable Injury Precludes Exclusivity of Workers' Compensation Remedy — Definition of Injury — Tort Action Allowed: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Citing case law from other states and the public policy expressed by the Legislature, the Supreme Court held that the refusal of the Legislature to provide coverage under the workers' compensation laws precluded the applicability of the exclusive remedy theory upon which those laws are based. The Supreme Court also held that because the definition of injury contained in 39-71-411 must be construed consistently with the definition of injury in 39-71-119, an injury excluded by the definition in 39-71-119 must also be excluded from the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411. Because Stratemeyer did not suffer an injury covered by the exclusive remedy provision of the workers' compensation laws, he was free to bring a separate tort action against the county. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep 245 (1996), followed in Kleinhesselink v. Chevron, U.S.A., 277 M 158, 920 P2d 108, 53 St. Rep. 668 (1996), and Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999). Stratemeyer and Kleinhesselink were distinguished in Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Waiver of Workers' Compensation Benefits Allowed — Distribution of Proportionate Share of Benefits: Decedent who died in the course of employment was survived by two children of a prior marriage and by the widow of a second marriage. Decedent's insurer and others with potential liability for death claims settled with the widow for substantial sums, but the children were not parties to the settlement. No workers' compensation claim was filed by the widow, though one was filed by decedent's employer. The compensation carrier began paying one-third of the compensation benefits to the widow and reserved two-thirds pending final determination of the children as beneficiaries. The widow advised the carrier that she did not wish to receive workers' compensation benefits and returned those she had been issued. The Workers' Compensation Court held that, as a matter of public policy, the widow could not waive death benefits and that the children's interest in the benefits would vest only if the widow died or remarried prior to the passing of 500 weeks after decedent's death. On rehearing, the court found the children to be stepchildren of the widow and therefore entitled to benefits, to be equally divided between the parties. The children appealed, contending that the widow should not be compelled to receive benefits she did not claim or intended to waive and that the children were each entitled to one-half of all available benefits. The Supreme Court held that under 1-3-204, the surviving widow could waive or abandon her right to benefits and that upon waiver the surviving children were entitled to no more than their proportionate share provided by law. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Section 3, Ch. 500, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 33(1), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 6(35)(f) [39-71-116(36)(f)] and 10] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring prior to [the effective date of sections 6(35)(f) and 10]." Effective April 16, 1997.

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 500, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] [39-71-116 and 39-71-118] is effective July 1, 1997, and applies to injuries occurring on or after [the effective date of this act]."

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 234 in definition of temporary service contractor, after "association", inserted "partnership, limited liability company", after "business that" deleted "employs individuals directly for the purpose of furnishing the services of those individuals on a part-time or temporary basis to others", and inserted remainder of sentence relating to employees used for periods of employee absences, skill shortages, seasonal workloads, and special assignments and projects; in definition of temporary worker, after "temporary basis", substituted remainder of sentence relating to employees used for periods of employee absences, skill shortages, seasonal workloads, and special assignments and projects for "to substitute for a permanent employee on leave or to meet an emergency or short-term workload"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 243 inserted definition of actual wage loss; deleted definition of disability that read: ""Disability" means a condition in which a worker's ability to engage in gainful employment is diminished as a result of physical restrictions resulting from an injury. The restrictions may be combined with factors, such as the worker's age, education, work history, and other factors that affect the worker's ability to engage in gainful employment. Disability does not mean a purely medical condition"; inserted definition of objective medical findings; in definition of permanent partial disability, before "condition", inserted "physical", in (a) substituted current language concerning medical findings for "has a medically determined physical restriction as a result of an injury as defined in 39-71-119", in (b) substituted "permanent impairment" for "physical restriction", and inserted (c) requiring a wage loss; in definition of permanent total disability, near beginning before "condition", inserted "physical"; in definition of secondary medical services inserted (b) defining disability; in definition of temporary partial disability, before "condition", inserted "physical"; in definition of temporary total disability, before "condition", inserted "physical"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 516 inserted definitions of aid or sustenance, household or domestic employment, limited liability company, and sole proprietor; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Chapter 480 inserted definition of construction industry; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1992.

Chapter 574 in definition of permanent partial disability, in (b) after "to work in", deleted "the worker's job pool pursuant to one of the options set forth in 39-71-1012 but suffers impairment or partial wage loss, or both" and inserted remainder of sentence concerning physical restrictions on ability to work; and in definition of permanent total disability, at end of first sentence after "in which a worker", substituted "has no reasonable prospect of performing regular employment" for "is unable to return to work in the worker's job pool after exhausting all options set forth in 39-71-1012" and inserted second and third sentences setting forth criteria for regular employment and excluding lack of immediate job openings. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1990 Special Session Amendment: Inserted definition of administer and pay; in (3)(e) changed references to subsections (2)(a) through (2)(d) to references to subsections (3)(a) through (3)(d); and in (3)(f) changed references to subsections (2)(a) through (2)(e) to references to subsections (3)(a) through (3)(e). Amendment effective July 1, 1990.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 333 at end of definition of payroll inserted requirement that payroll be computed by calculating all wages, as defined in 39-71-123, that are paid by employer; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 613 throughout section changed "division of workers' compensation" and "division" to "department"; deleted definition of Division; and in definition of insurer changed "state compensation insurance fund" to "state fund". Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

1987 Amendment: In (2)(a) substituted "a surviving spouse living with or legally entitled to be supported by the deceased at the time of injury" for "a surviving wife or husband"; in (2)(c) decreased age from 25 years to 22 years and at end inserted "or is enrolled in an accredited apprenticeship program"; in (3) deleted second sentence that read: "Any person hauling or assisting in hauling of sugar beets or grains, in case of emergency, is considered engaged in casual employment"; in (4), at end, deleted "and an illegitimate child legitimized prior to the injury"; inserted definitions of days, Department, and maximum healing; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) "Husband" or "widower" means only a husband or widower living with or legally entitled to be supported by the deceased at the time of her injury"; in (9), near middle, substituted "state compensation insurance fund" for "industrial insurance account"; in (14) substituted language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for ""Permanent partial disability" means a condition resulting from injury as defined in this chapter that results in the actual loss of earnings or earning capability less than total that exists after the injured worker is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit. Disability shall be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence"; in (15) substituted language defining permanent total disability as condition resulting from injury in which worker has reached maximum healing but cannot work in his job pool after exhausting options in 39-71-1012 (now repealed) for ""Permanent total disability" means a condition resulting from injury as defined in this chapter that results in the loss of actual earnings or earning capability that exists after the injured worker is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit and which results in the worker having no reasonable prospect of finding regular employment of any kind in the normal labor market. Disability shall be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence"; in (21), at end, substituted "reaches maximum healing" for "is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit. A worker shall be paid temporary total disability benefits during a reasonable period of retraining. Disability shall be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence"; and deleted former (20) and (21) that read: "(20) "Wages" means the average gross earnings received by the employee at the time of the injury for the usual hours of employment in a week, and overtime is not to be considered. Sick leave benefits accrued by employees of public corporations, as defined by subsection (16) of this section, are considered wages.

(21) "Wife" or "widow" means only a wife or widow living with or legally entitled to be supported by the deceased at the time of the injury."

1985 Amendment: In definition of temporary total disability inserted second sentence allowing benefits during reasonable period of retraining.

1981 Amendments: Chapter 47 inserted "Disability shall be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence" in definitions of permanent partial disability, permanent total disability, and temporary total disability.

Chapter 349 deleted "the division of employment security of" before "the Montana department of labor and industry" in definition of average weekly wage.

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Permanent Total Disability and Regular Employment Construed — Part-Time Work Not Substantial and Significant: After McFerran was injured at his job, his employer, Consolidated Freightways, hired Addy, a vocational consultant, to assess McFerran's employability. Addy found five job possibilities for McFerran. The Workers' Compensation Court found that one of those five, a job as a pharmacy delivery driver, constituted "regular employment" for the purposes of determining whether McFerran suffered from a permanent total disability. The Supreme Court, although agreeing with the analysis used by the Workers' Compensation Court to determine whether a worker is permanently and totally disabled, disagreed that the work as a pharmacy delivery driver was substantial and significant and that the work constituted regular employment. The Supreme Court pointed out that Addy's written report found that the period of work could vary between 1 to 4 hours a day, 6 days a week. The Supreme Court held that a job offering no assurance of more than 1 hour of work each day was not "substantial and significant" enough to be considered regular employment. The court therefore held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it concluded that McFerran was not totally and permanently disabled. McFerran v. Consol. Freightways, 2000 MT 365, 303 M 393, 15 P3d 935, 57 St. Rep. 1558 (2000).

Change in Circumstances of Treating Physician in Workers' Compensation Case — Equitable Estoppel Applied to Prevent Inequitable Result: Selley suffered a work-related injury, and Liberty Northwest Insurance Corporation (Liberty) began paying wage loss and medical benefits. Prior to beginning treatment for the injury, Selley's treating physician resigned his admitting privileges because of a move to an area outside that required by area hospitals. Liberty became aware of the situation after paying benefits for 2 years and notified Selley that payments would no longer be made to the same doctor as treating physician. The issue was submitted to the Workers' Compensation Court, which decided that Liberty was not equitably estopped from refusing reimbursement. The Supreme Court noted that estoppel generally arises when a party, through its acts, conduct, or acquiescence, has caused another party in good faith to change its position for the worse. Applying the elements of equitable estoppel outlined in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991), the court invoked the doctrine in this case because it would be unconscionable to permit Liberty to maintain a position inconsistent with one in which it had acquiesced. Although Liberty's conduct did not amount to concealment of a material fact, nevertheless, Liberty's silence and acquiescence for 2 full years amounted to a misrepresentation that the treating physician was considered appropriate for Selley's work-related injuries. Further, it would not be fair to require Selley to determine whether the physician qualified as an appropriate treating physician because the burden of determining a physician's qualifications lies with the insurer. Requiring Selley to change physicians in the middle of the course of progressively favorable treatment would result in Selley effectively changing position for the worse and suffering a loss by being forced to forego the well-established physician-patient relationship. Thus, the Workers' Compensation Court committed reversible error in determining that Liberty was not estopped from asserting this section as a defense to Selley's claim. Selley v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2000 MT 76, 299 M 127, 998 P2d 156, 57 St. Rep. 333 (2000), following Smith v. Krutar, 153 M 325, 457 P2d 459 (1969), and distinguishing Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131, 54 St. Rep. 293 (1997).

Workers Serving Daily Business as Core Workers Not Considered Temporary Employees: Some of Dahl's employees were supplied by an employment service, which also agreed to provide workers' compensation insurance for the employees whom it supplied. Dahl argued that because the workers were temporary and because the employment service provided insurance, Dahl was not an uninsured employer. However, the employees worked for Dahl between 6 and 15 weeks on one occasion and between 8 and 20 weeks on another occasion. The employees were not used to meet either an immediate unforeseen need or short-term demands, but rather were used as core workers to serve daily business functions, and thus could not be considered temporary employees. Dahl v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 168, 295 M 173, 983 P2d 363, 56 St. Rep. 649 (1999), following C. Loney Concrete Constr., Inc. v. Employment Relations Div., 1998 MT 230, 291 M 41, 964 P2d 777, 55 St. Rep. 961 (1998).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Maximum Healing Prior to Nonwork-Related Injury — Claim Denied: Paterson sought temporary total disability benefits, claiming that a nonwork-related injury had exacerbated a prior work-related injury and was thus compensable. To determine whether maximum healing of the work-related injury had occurred, the insurer presented a hypothetical scenario to Paterson's physician, consisting of three components that the insurer intended to establish through its witnesses in subsequent testimony. Based on the hypothetical, the doctor agreed that Paterson did reach maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson then paraphrased his version of events based on his witnesses' testimony, and the doctor opined that Paterson had not reached maximum healing. The Workers' Compensation Court found more credible the evidence presented in proving the hypothetical, including findings regarding Paterson's work history and back symptomology, his lack of fear of losing current employment or not obtaining future employment, and the affordability and availability of medical care. The court did not err in holding that Paterson had reached maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson v. Mont. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

Definition of Temporary Worker Not Retroactively Applied: The 1991 version of the definition of temporary worker did not include a seasonal worker, which was added in 1995. The Workers' Compensation Court properly applied the 1991 definition, in effect at the time that the action accrued, because a retroactive application of the 1995 definition would have caused a different legal effect on the transaction than that under the law when the transaction occurred. C. Loney Concrete Constr., Inc. v. Employment Relations Div., 1998 MT 230, 291 M 41, 964 P2d 777, 55 St. Rep. 961 (1998), following Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143 (1996).

Independent Medical Examination — Qualifications of Examining Physician — Determination of Applicable Law: In 1989, Blythe was stuck by a needle that had previously been used on an AIDS patient, and after that time, Blythe alleged that he was suffering from depression and hallucinations that prevented him from working. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that Blythe was malingering. The insurer required an independent medical examination (IME), and the Workers' Compensation Court allowed testimony on the issue of malingering from two Ph.D. clinical psychologists, one of whom conducted the IME by the order of the Workers' Compensation Court. Citing St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Sky Country, Inc., 239 M 376, 780 P2d 1135 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the applicable substantive law is the law as it was at the time of injury and that the applicable law for procedural purposes is the law at the time of trial. The issue of who is qualified to conduct an IME is procedural rather than substantive, so the applicable law is the 1993 version of 39-71-605. The Supreme Court also held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it treated the listing of types of treating physicians in this section to be exemplary rather than exclusive. The Supreme Court noted that even if the list of types of physicians included a clinical psychologist, which it did not, the law also required that the physicians be licensed in Montana. The psychologist who conducted the IME was not licensed as a physician. The testimony of one of the psychologists was therefore inadmissible, but because the Supreme Court could not determine whether the outcome of the trial would have been different without the inadmissible testimony, it remanded the case to the Workers' Compensation Court for that determination. EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 281 M 50, 931 P2d 38, 54 St. Rep. 54 (1997).

Physical Inability to Perform Work as Triggering Entitlement to Total Disability Benefits: Only when a person is unable to physically perform any employment is that person entitled to either temporary total disability benefits or permanent total disability benefits under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Notwithstanding Smart's argument regarding the definition of "worker's job pool" that was set out in a prior section and then repealed, even though Smart could not return to his former work, he was physically able to perform other available work for which he was qualified and thus was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits under 39-72-701. The Workers' Compensation Court properly limited Smart's compensation to an award of up to $10,000, pursuant to 39-72-405. Smart v. Mont. Historical Soc'y, 277 M 89, 918 P2d 670, 53 St. Rep. 554 (1996).

Pain Coupled With Lack of Motivation to Return to Work — Lack of Permanent Total Disability Upheld: Kloepfer injured her back while at work and had a lumbar fusion performed to cure the pain. The pain was not cured by the surgery. Her treating physician testified that because of the pain, Kloepfer could do only light work, with a high amount of absenteeism, and was therefore permanently and totally disabled. Kloepfer was examined by a panel of specialists who found that she could do light work. The Workers' Compensation Court found that she could do light work but was unmotivated to work. The Supreme Court noted that although some deference is paid to the opinion of a worker's treating physician, the Workers' Compensation Court is in the best position to judge the credibility of witnesses and that the standard is still whether there was substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's decision. The Supreme Court held that there was substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's opinion that Kloepfer was not permanently and totally disabled. Kloepfer v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 276 M 495, 916 P2d 1310, 53 St. Rep. 486 (1996).

Case Presented on Depositions — District Court Finding of Lack of Causal Connection Between Injury and Disability Sustained: Wilson was injured twice while working for United Parcel Service (UPS) and was treated pursuant to UPS's workers' compensation coverage. Later, while working for another employer, Wilson again suffered back pain and, despite conflicting medical evidence, was diagnosed by Dr. Chambers as no longer suffering as a result of the two earlier injuries. The Workers' Compensation Court denied permanent partial disability benefits based upon Dr. Chambers' findings. Citing Sciuchetti v. Hurt Constr., 238 M 170, 777 P2d 308 (1989), the Supreme Court held that although it could review the weight of the evidence given to Dr. Chambers' testimony by the Workers' Compensation Court because all of the testimony was presented by deposition, the Supreme Court would uphold the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court because those findings were supported by substantial credible evidence. Here, that evidence was in the form of Dr. Chambers' testimony and problematic testimony from Wilson's witnesses and in the form of other evidence contradicting Wilson's claims of continuing back pain. Wilson v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins., 273 M 313, 903 P2d 785, 52 St. Rep. 990 (1995), followed in Taylor v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 432, 913 P2d 1242, 53 St. Rep. 201 (1996).

Job "No Longer Available": When the employer worked the employee beyond the employee's medical restrictions and caused the episode that triggered the employee's discharge, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in determining that the employee's job was "no longer available" and therefore did not err in ruling that the employee was entitled to temporary total disability benefits. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Loss of Part of Toe, Fracture of Another, and Resultant Sensitivity to Cold as Permanent Partial Disability — Justifiable Dispute as to Benefits: The insurer did not act unreasonably in denying permanent partial disability benefits. Therefore, the court properly denied claimant legal fees and a 20% penalty. There was a valid factual dispute and a valid question of legal interpretation of the pertinent statute. Claimant lost part of his fifth toe and had a fracture of his largest toe. Cold temperatures caused the foot and toes to ache. He was given an impairment rating of 1% of the whole man. The treating doctor's treatment notes did not indicate impairment of work, and the doctor's deposition was not clear on the issue. Claimant and the insurer disagreed on whether there was work impairment, and the Workers' Compensation Court found impairment. The pertinent statute had been amended in 1991 to provide that a claimant was not entitled to permanent partial disability benefits unless the medically determined physical restriction impaired the claimant's ability to work. Claimant's interpretation of the statute was justifiably disputed by the insurer, and there was no case law to aid in interpretation. Williams v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 270 M 209, 891 P2d 502, 52 St. Rep. 148 (1995).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Increase in Disability Over That Which Existed Prior to Injury — Benefits for Permanent Partial Disability Denied: Kuntz was injured numerous times during his employment history. In this proceeding, Kuntz asserted that his 1987 back injury was an aggravation of a previous injury and thus compensable. After hearing testimony from the examining physicians and failing to find wholly credible Kuntz's testimony concerning the nature and extent of his pain and disability, the Workers' Compensation Court properly found that the 1987 injury was not material or significant on a permanent basis and did not increase Kuntz's disability over that which existed prior to the injury. Because Kuntz failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the 1987 injury caused his current disability, the burden did not shift to the employer. Denial of permanent partial benefits was affirmed. Kuntz v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 1998 MT 5, 287 M 142, 952 P2d

422, 55 St. Rep. 12 (1998), following Kloepfer v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 276 M 495, 916 P2d 1310 (1996).

Work-Related Injury Following Nonwork-Related Injury — Permanent Total Disability Found — Workers' Compensation Court's Findings of Fact Reviewed De Novo and Reversed: Larson, a parts manager for a truck dealership, suffered a nonwork-related heart attack in 1980 but returned to work full-time in 1981. Then, in July 1981, Larson suffered a left inguinal hernia after lifting a heavy truck spring at his job. The Workers' Compensation Court found that Larson's heart attack and other medical problems had rendered him totally disabled prior to the industrial injury. For that reason, Larson was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits. The court also found that even if Larson's employer had the burden of proving that Larson could still work, the employer's insurance company had proved that Larson was employable despite his industrial accident. The Supreme Court, applying the 1979 workers' compensation statutes liberally and in favor of the injured worker, noted that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's existing physical condition at the time of employment. Citing McIntyre v. Glen Lake Irrigation District, 249 M 63, 813 P2d 451 (1991), and White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787 (1992), the Supreme Court held that to the extent that the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of fact are based upon deposition testimony, the Supreme Court sits in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to review the evidence de novo. The Supreme Court therefore reviewed the deposition testimony of the physicians and rehabilitation counselors and found that there was insufficient evidence from which the Workers' Compensation Court could determine that Larson had a reasonable prospect for employment. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), citing Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 271 M 98, 894 P2d 327 (1995).

Independent Disabling Conditions — One Work-Related, Another Not: The Workers' Compensation Court held that Larson was ineligible to receive permanent total disability benefits for a work-related hernia because he first became totally disabled by a preexisting, nonwork-related and independent heart condition. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court, noting that the liberal construction provision in 39-71-104 (now repealed) favored the injured worker, relied on Bond v. St. Regis Paper Co., 174 M 417, 571 P2d 372 (1977), for the proposition that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's physical condition at the time of employment and on Shea v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 529 P2d 1131 (Wash. Ct. App. 1974), and Estate of Ensley v. Anglo Alaska Constr., 773 P2d 955 (Alaska 1989), in holding that if evidence showed that Larson's hernia produced a permanent total disability, total disability benefits were payable regardless of the fact that the preexisting, nonwork-related heart condition also could be considered a cause of the permanent total disability. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 271 M 98, 894 P2d 327, 52 St. Rep. 369 (1995). See also Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Thoracic Outlet Syndrome Causally Related to Injury: The testimony of Ferguson, his wife, and several doctors who saw Ferguson, coupled with the opinion of a thoracic specialist who recommended surgery for thoracic outlet syndrome, that Ferguson's current condition stemmed from a 1986 injury, constituted substantial evidence upon which the trial court could base its opinion that the condition resulted from that injury. The court did not err in finding that the surgery was reasonable and necessary as supported by the medical evidence. The court properly reinstated temporary total disability benefits until Ferguson's condition was restored as far as the permanent character of the injuries permitted. Ferguson v. Am. Stores, 268 M 421, 888 P2d 417, 51 St. Rep. 603 (1994).

Permanent Total Disability — Osteoarthritis — Benefits Denied: When microtrauma to the hand temporarily aggravated the symptoms of naturally occurring and progressing osteoarthritis, claimant failed to demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that her current condition was attributable to her employment. Without the causal connection, claimant did not meet the criteria of the statutory definition of permanent total disability that would qualify her to receive permanent disability benefits. Hash v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 256 M 252, 846 P2d 981, 50 St. Rep. 76 (1993).

Appropriate Rehabilitation Option for Permanent Partial Disability: In order to qualify as permanently totally disabled, claimant was required to show that after exhausting all rehabilitation options in 39-71-1012 (now repealed), he remained unable to return to work in his job pool. Absent such a showing, claimant's classification as permanently partially disabled was proper, and his return to a related occupation suited to his education and marketable skills was the appropriate rehabilitation option. Kelly v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 200, 835 P2d 774, 49 St. Rep. 699 (1992).

Ongoing Psychological Condition Precluding Termination of Benefits Until Maximum Healing Reached: Although much of claimant's physical condition relative to muscle contraction and pain was psychological in origin, the psychological condition was nevertheless related to the physical injury and the mixture of physical and psychological components was therefore compensable until maximum healing was reached. Meidinger v. W. Energy Co., 254 M 18, 834 P2d 1382, 49 St. Rep. 601 (1992).

Room and Board as Gross Earnings Includable in Postinjury Wages: Room and board provided to claimant as partial compensation for working on a ranch were not considered a reimbursement for out-of-pocket expenses but rather constituted a real economic gain. The value of the room and board was equivalent to gross earnings includable in claimant's postinjury wages. Anderson v. Hammer, 252 M 73, 826 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 165 (1992). See also Weaver v. Buttrey Food & Drug, 255 M 90, 841 P2d 476, 49 St. Rep. 897 (1992), when earnings from a bartending business, although not in the form of direct wages or benefits, constituted economic gain sufficient to preclude a claim of total loss of wages necessary to qualify claimant for temporary total disability.

Evidence Supports Permanent Disability Caused by Previous Accident: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant's current condition was not the result of a 1979 shoulder injury, but rather was aggravated by a 1984 accident. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that there was sufficient evidence to establish that the claimant's shoulder condition was caused by the 1979 accident and that the claimant had become permanently disabled because of the arthritic condition of his shoulder. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether the claimant's permanent disability is partial or total. Harmon v. Harmon, 249 M 387, 816 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 698 (1991).

Failure to Prove Thoracic Outlet Syndrome Causally Related to Injury: The Supreme Court declined to substitute its judgment for the Workers' Compensation Court's judgment after finding substantial credible evidence to support the conclusion that claimant did not prove that his thoracic outlet syndrome was causally related to his prior industrial accident. McIntyre v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 249 M 63, 813 P2d 451, 48 St. Rep. 579 (1991).

Marijuana Farm Indication That Claimant's Injury Not Permanent: The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's finding that based on the claimant's conviction for operating a large and sophisticated marijuana growing operation, there was ample evidence to conclude that the claimant's injury was not of a permanent nature. Baldwin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 373, 791 P2d 49, 47 St. Rep. 810 (1990).

Worker's Condition as Far Restored as Permanent Character of Injury Permits: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to justify changing the claimant's benefits to those due under permanent partial disability. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Temporary Total Benefits Discontinued Upon Maximum Healing: Under the statutory scheme in place in 1983 when claimant was injured, temporary total disability did not exist past the time of maximum healing, as determined by the deposition of claimant's physician. Kimes v. Pac. Employees Ins. Co., 233 M 175, 759 P2d 986, 45 St. Rep. 1402 (1988), followed in Laber v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, 247 M 172, 805 P2d 1375, 48 St. Rep. 150 (1991).

Use of Sick Leave Benefits in Determining Wages — Public Corporation Employees Only: Claimant who sustained an industrial injury while employed by a private nursing home corporation contended the Workers' Compensation Court erred in excluding the value of sick leave and other fringe benefits in calculating her wage rate under the former definition of "wages" (deleted by 1987 amendment). The Supreme Court held that sick leave benefits were included in determining wages only when the claimant was an employee of a public corporation. Phelps v. Hillhaven Corp., 231 M 245, 752 P2d 737, 45 St. Rep. 582 (1988).

Incurable Anaphylactic Condition as Permanent Total Disability: An incurable anaphylactic condition that precluded claimant from returning to any job where she could not control her environment was properly designated a permanent total disability. Daniels v. EBI/Orion Group, 230 M 407, 750 P2d 455, 45 St. Rep. 310 (1988).

Inability to Return to Work, Not Inability to Perform Other Jobs, as Criteria in Award of Temporary Total Benefits: The trial court concluded that claimant must demonstrate an inability to "perform other jobs" before being awarded temporary total benefits. It was error to require claimant to show a total loss of earning capacity, as opposed to loss of wages, in order to receive temporary total benefits. Linton v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 122, 749 P2d 55, 45 St. Rep. 68 (1988).

Wages Not to Include Employer Contributions to Benefit Funds: The Supreme Court adopted the rationale of Morrison-Knudsen Constr. Co. v. Director, Office of Workers' Comp. Programs, 461 US 624, 76 L Ed 2d 194, 103 S Ct 2045 (1983), and West Winds, Inc. v. M.V. Resolute, 720 F2d 1097 (9th Cir. 1983), in holding that wages under the Workers' Compensation Act do not include employer contributions to funds that provide health or life insurance, retirement, training, vacation, pension, or disability payments. Linton v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 122, 749 P2d 55, 45 St. Rep. 68 (1988), followed in Phelps v. Hillhaven Corp., 231 M 245, 752 P2d 737, 45 St. Rep. 582 (1988).

Treating Physician's Opinion Based on Incomplete Knowledge — Evidentiary Weight: Because the treating physician normally has more contact with and greater knowledge of an injured worker, the treating physician should generally be in the best position to give an informed opinion. However, when an initial conclusion was based on incomplete knowledge, it was error for the court to ignore the physician's subsequent acknowledgment of medical probability and rely on his initial conclusion. Snyder v. San Francisco Feed & Grain, 230 M 16, 748 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 2216 (1987), followed in White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Employability Precluding Permanent Total Disability Rating: Where a claimant did not show by a preponderance of the evidence a complete inability to perform the jobs that constituted his normal labor market due to his work-related injury, permanent total disability benefits were properly denied. Sterns v. Dudley, 228 M 45, 741 P2d 407, 44 St. Rep. 1329 (1987), followed in Jaenish v. EBI/Orion Group, 248 M 383, 812 P2d 1241, 48 St. Rep. 474 (1991).

Denial of Temporary Total Disability Benefits During Retraining — Maximum Healing — No Total Loss of Wages: Where a claimant had reached maximum healing and testimony indicated he had a normal labor market even absent retraining, the Workers' Compensation Court properly found that claimant's injury did not result in a total loss of wages and that he was therefore not eligible for temporary total disability benefits during retraining. (This case was based on the definition of "temporary total disability" prior to a 1985 amendment allowing such benefits during periods of retraining.) Homme v. Rauenhorst Corp., 227 M 495, 740 P2d 1110, 44 St. Rep. 1262 (1987), followed in Hofferber v. Plago Min., Inc., 257 M 91, 848 P2d 468, 50 St. Rep. 171 (1993).

Temporary Total Disability — Maximum Healing: There is substantial evidence that claimant had not reached maximum healing and therefore is entitled to temporary total benefits. Cuellar v. Royal Ins. Co., 226 M 428, 736 P2d 130, 44 St. Rep. 778 (1987).

Exclusion of Periods of Forced Idleness From Calculation of Benefits: The Supreme Court reversed an award of survivorship benefits that was based on calculations including periods of forced idleness that resulted from equipment failures, finding that to include such periods unfairly penalized decedent. Sandahl v. James A. Slack, Inc., 225 M 208, 732 P2d 831, 44 St. Rep. 174 (1987).

Early Retirement as Voluntary: Claimant seeking additional benefits argued that his retirement was not voluntary because the employer offered the plan to its employees rather than the plan being inspired by the claimant himself and that because the employer encouraged early retirement, subtle pressure was exerted. The Workers' Compensation Court denied benefits because claimant could have continued working, was adequately performing his duties, and was under no threat of being fired. The Supreme Court affirmed that retirement was voluntary and uncoerced, noting that retirement was offered to all employees with no special focus on claimant and that claimant had received $12,180 as consideration for his early retirement. Gierke v. Billings Gazette, 224 M 446, 730 P2d 1143, 43 St. Rep. 2322 (1986).

"Preponderance of Medical Evidence" Test Not Met: Claimant who sought additional permanent total or, alternatively, permanent partial benefits did not meet the statutory "preponderance of medical evidence" test when he failed to report any pain to his supervisor from the date of injury to the date of retirement, when testimony of an orthopedic surgeon and an osteopath indicated claimant could do just about any kind of work, and when claimant pointed out in his own testimony that he intended to continue working and that his injury was not greatly disabling. Gierke v. Billings Gazette, 224 M 446, 730 P2d 1143, 43 St. Rep. 2322 (1986), followed in Garcia v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 253 M 196, 832 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 440 (1992).

"Metzger" Test and Statutory Requirements Met: Claimant's lifetime work history and medical evidence, plus his conclusive establishment of an inability to perform jobs in his normal labor market, led to the conclusion that claimant met the test outlined in Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984), and the requirements of this section for permanent total disability. Brewington v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 222 M 505, 723 P2d 938, 43 St. Rep. 1458 (1986), followed in Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Future Earning Capacity as Based on Estimated Payroll: Claimants established a partnership to buy and sell used furniture and purchased workers' compensation insurance through Rockwood

Company (Rockwood). On their fourth day of business, both claimants were injured. Rockwood accepted liability and set the rates for temporary total disability benefits on the basis of annual wages of $12,000 per claimant, but claimants requested that the Workers' Compensation Court increase their benefits. Due to the brevity of employment, no evidence of actual earnings was available. The only documentary evidence presented was the business' application for insurance, which indicated the expectation of a total annual payroll of $30,000. The court increased the benefits based on the estimated annual income for each claimant of $15,000, or half the expected payroll shown on the application. In affirming the award, the Supreme Court concluded that, in the absence of better evidence, the Workers' Compensation Court arrived at a fair estimate of claimants' future earning capacity based on the estimated business payroll divided by the actual number of employees. (Term "wages" now defined in 39-71-123. See sec. 4, Ch. 464, L. 1987.) Wilkerson v. Rockwood Co., 221 M 250, 718 P2d 338, 43 St. Rep. 787 (1986).

Rancher's Temporary Total Disability — Based on Wages, Not Income: Appellant, Harmon, was injured while employed by his father as a ranch hand. He concurrently operated his own farm. The State Compensation Insurance Fund determined Harmon's temporary total disability rate based only on his salary as a ranch hand. Harmon maintained that earnings from his separate but identical self-employment on his own farm should have been combined with his earnings as a ranch hand to properly determine his disability rate. The Workers' Compensation Court found that Harmon failed to prove that he had additional wages beyond his monthly salary as a ranch hand which could be aggregated to increase his rate. Essentially, Harmon suggested on appeal that the gross income from his farm should be treated as wages; however, the Supreme Court found that under 39-71-116, the term "wages" is predicated on an employment relationship which generates income from employer to employee. (Term "wages" now defined in 39-71-123. See sec. 4, Ch. 464, L. 1987.) The record was clear that no such relationship existed in Harmon's position as a self-employed farmer. As stated in Gee v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 197 M 335, 642 P2d 1070 (1982), in providing compensation for a temporary total disability, the Legislature chose to restrict the compensation to that based on loss of wages rather than loss of earnings. Although Harmon clearly suffered a loss of earnings on his farm from his disability, this loss of earnings was held to be noncompensable for purposes of his temporary total disability. Harmon v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 220 M 445, 716 P2d 605, 43 St. Rep. 514 (1986).

Permanent Total Disability — Based on Actual Employment, Not Earning Capability: Claimant LaVe contended that the lower court erred in basing her permanent total disability benefits on her usual hours of employment rather than on her earning capability. At the time of injury, she was working 10 hours a week, but she asserted that since she had intended to get a job working 40 hours a week, her benefits should be based on her capability to work 40 hours a week. Notwithstanding the fact that 39-71-116 mentions earning capability in the definition of permanent total disability, under 39-71-702 benefits for such a disability are "66 $\frac{2}{3}$% of the wages received at the time of the injury". Section 39-71-116 defines wages as "the average gross earnings received by the employee at the time of the injury for the usual hours of employment in a week". (Term "wages" now defined in 39-71-123. See sec. 4, Ch. 464, L. 1987.) Therefore, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's computation of benefits based on 10 hours a week actual employment rather than on an earning capability based on 40 hours a week. LaVe v. School District, 220 M 52, 713 P2d 546, 43 St. Rep. 165 (1986).

Benefits Based on Forty Hours a Week Despite Intermittent Nature of Roofing Job: Claimant worked in a roofing business typified by 40-hour workweeks unless interrupted by inclement weather. The Workers' Compensation Court, in awarding temporary total disability benefits, found that claimant was hired on a full-time basis and that claimant's usual hours of employment were 40 hours a week. Defendants contended on appeal that the court should use an averaging formula to establish claimant's base workweek. The court rejected the contention and appellants' citation to the definition of "wages" in 39-71-116(20) and the provisions of 39-71-701 as authority, finding that the Workers' Compensation Court decision was based on substantial evidence. Denend v. Bradford Roofing & Insulation, 218 M 505, 710 P2d 61, 42 St. Rep. 1778 (1985).

Permanent Total Disability — Nonmedical Components — Burden of Proof: Claimant injured her back in a fall from a ladder. The Workers' Compensation Court found that she had a 15% whole person impairment and that she was permanently totally disabled, until vocationally retrained, based on her medical condition and the presence of nonmedical elements of disability such as her lack of specialized training and limited work experience. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that there was substantial evidence to support the decision, particularly in light of the court's referral of the claimant for vocational rehabilitation. Once a claimant presents evidence showing there is no reasonable prospect of employment, the burden of proof shifts to the employer to show that suitable work is available. The employer failed to carry this burden when it did not introduce any evidence to establish that suitable work was available. Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985), followed in Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502, 48 St. Rep. 306 (1991), and in Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 257 M 335, 849 P2d 1021, 50 St. Rep. 296 (1993). See also Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

"Usual Hours of Employment" — Overtime — Ambiguity Construed in Favor of Worker: The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in determining that claimant's consistent and regular overtime hours should be included in the calculation of disability benefits. The reference to "overtime" in the statute is ambiguous because it does not indicate whether overtime earnings are not to be considered, overtime hours are not to be considered if regularly worked, or both. The Workers' Compensation Court is under a duty to construe the act liberally and to resolve any ambiguity in favor of the injured worker. Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985).

Average Gross Earnings: Claimant's average gross earnings under this section's definition of "wages" (Term "wages" now defined in 39-71-123. See sec. 4, Ch. 464, L. 1987.) are the amount he was earning at the time of his injury in October 1981, not the amount he was earning from a different employer at the time of an earlier injury in January 1981, even though he had not worked between January and October and the October employment was temporary. Where he was receiving compensation benefits as a result of the injury in January 1981, he was not entitled to include the amount of those benefits in the computation of his average gross earnings for the purpose of determining benefits due him for the second injury. Putnam v. Castle Mtn. Corp., 216 M 306, 702 P2d 333, 42 St. Rep. 833 (1985).

Permanent Partial Disability — Pain to Be Considered in Determining Disability — Standard of Review: The claimant injured his back on the job in 1980 and for the next 3 years underwent a series of unsuccessful operations designed to relieve the pain. On appeal, claimant argued that the District Court had failed to take proper account of his disabling pain in its determination of permanent partial rather than permanent total disability. The Supreme Court held that pain is "another factor" to be considered in determining disability and that the Supreme Court's function on review is to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court. The Supreme Court found there was substantial evidence on the record to support a finding of partial disability. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984).

Temporary Total Disability — "As Far Restored": The Supreme Court affirmed the holding of the Workers' Compensation Court that claimant had reached the medically stable condition necessary for a finding of either total or partial permanent disability. Claimant initially petitioned the court for a finding of permanent total disability, and only after the trial court's determination that he was partially rather than totally disabled did claimant seek to characterize his condition as temporary. The Supreme Court held that the phrase "as far restored" in the definition of temporary total disability does not translate into a requirement that claimant be "completely healed"; otherwise, the transition would be from temporary total disability to full recovery, making the provisions for permanent disability mere irrelevancies. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984), followed in Kramer v. EBI Co., Am. Asphalt, Inc., 265 M 525, 878 P2d 266, 51 St. Rep. 634 (1994).

Permanent Total Disability — Reasonable Prospect of Employment — Burden of Proof — "Odd Lot" Employee: The claimant injured his back on the job in 1980 and for the next 3 years underwent a series of unsuccessful operations designed to relieve the pain. Although claimant's therapist testified that claimant was able to engage in activities in his normal job market, he applied for only one job in the 4 years between injury and trial. Burden of proof shifts from claimant to employer to show suitable work is available once claimant has affirmatively shown that he cannot return to a job in his normal labor market. The Supreme Court held that claimant's own uncertainty, coupled with minimal job search, was insufficient to support a claim of no reasonable prospect of employment and that Workers' Compensation Court was correct in concluding claimant failed to meet his burden of proof and was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits. Claimant did not fall into the "odd lot" employee rule that would shift the burden of proof to the employer to show that some kind of suitable work is regularly and continuously available to the claimant. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984), cited in Gierke v. Billings Gazette, 224 M 446, 730 P2d 1143, 43 St. Rep. 2322 (1986), and followed in Laber v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, 247 M 172, 805 P2d 1375, 48 St. Rep. 150 (1991), Smith-Carter v. AMOCO Oil Co., 248 M 505, 813 P2d 405, 48 St. Rep. 532 (1991), Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994), Kramer v. EBI Co., Am. Asphalt, Inc., 265 M 525, 878 P2d 266, 51 St. Rep. 634 (1994), Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), and Best v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 276 M 302, 916 P2d 108, 53 St. Rep. 405 (1996).

Test for Compensation for Permanent Partial Disability — Factors Other Than Earning Capacity Impairment: Factors other than earning capacity impairment are relevant only if the court is unable to determine independently the claimant's income earning ability impairment. Since the primary purpose of workers' compensation is to compensate a worker for reduced earning capabilities resulting from an industrial accident, the award should be based on that percentage reduction and not on the worker's percentage of physical impairment. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 211 M 345, 684 P2d 1114, 41 St. Rep. 1403 (1984).

Permanent Total Disability — Medical Evidence of Symptoms — Claimant's Testimony of Disabling Pain: Medical evidence of objective symptoms, together with the testimony of claimant translating those symptoms into pain that physically impaired his ability to move his shoulder, was found by the Supreme Court to support adequately an order of the Workers' Compensation Court granting permanent total disability payments to claimant. McCormack v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 210 M 156, 682 P2d 1357, 41 St. Rep. 979 (1984).

Refusal to Submit to Low-Risk Surgery With High Probability of Success — Effect on Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court found that claimant was permanently totally disabled despite the fact that claimant refused low-risk surgery with a 92% chance of restoring working ability. The claimant had a manic-depressive disorder that distorted his powers of perception, comprehension, and judgment and constricted his mind with the possibility of failure, reinjury, and pain. His mental disorder prevented him from evaluating rationally the benefits of the proposed surgery. From this perspective, the claimant's refusal to submit to knee surgery was not unreasonable. In so holding, the Supreme Court overruled Dosen v. E. Butte Copper Min. Co., 78 M 579, 254 P 880 (1927). Small v. Transp. Ins. Co., 209 M 387, 681 P2d 1081, 41 St. Rep. 776 (1984).

When Temporary Total Disability Ends and Permanent Partial Disability Begins:

A worker is temporarily totally disabled until such time as the worker is as far restored as the permanent character of his injuries will permit. When the claimant has reached this stage in his healing process, temporary total disability ceases and partial disability begins. In making this determination, the compensation court should not rely exclusively on medical opinion of restoration when other credible evidence clearly demonstrates the healing process is not yet complete. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 208 M 470, 679 P2d 1188, 41 St. Rep. 472 (1984).

"Temporary total disability" ceases when the worker's physical condition is restored to the point of maximum potential recovery; and at that point "permanent partial disability" begins if there is permanent partial impairment. The Worker's Compensation Court erred in allowing payments at the temporary disability compensation rate to a person whose physical healing was complete and for whom only subjective improvement was possible. Anderson v. Home Indem. Co., 178 M 290, 583 P2d 440, 35 St. Rep. 1332 (1978).

Temporary Total Disability Awarded During Period of Medical Testing: Where the Workers' Compensation Court ordered the claimant to undergo spinal nerve tests on the strength of medical testimony that the tests were needed in order to restore the claimant to his best physical condition, the court did not err in awarding the claimant temporary total disability payments during the period of testing. While he undergoes treatment, the claimant will of necessity experience a total loss of wages. Therefore the requirements of the statutory definition of "total temporary disability" were met and the award was proper. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Impediment to All Jobs in Which Claimant Has Experience as Permanent Total Disability: The Supreme Court affirmed the holding of the Workers' Compensation Court that claimant was permanently and totally disabled when the medical evidence indicated that due to claimant's condition of phlebitis she could not engage in any occupation that would require standing or sitting for any length of time and her only work experience had been as a janitress/bartender, a sales clerk, and a motel clerk. Wise v. Perkins, 202 M 157, 656 P2d 816, 40 St. Rep. 1 (1983).

Inability to Resume Former Employment Alone Not Constituting Permanent Total Disability: The plaintiff, a boilermaker, was injured at his place of work and after losing several jobs because of pain resulting from that injury, several physicians recommended that he seek less strenuous work in order to relieve the pain. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in holding that the plaintiff was permanently and totally disabled because, consistent with his doctors' advice, he could not return to his former occupation as a boilermaker. In order for him to be considered permanently and totally disabled, the court must have found that the plaintiff had no reasonable prospect of finding regular employment of any kind in the normal labor market. The court failed to make such a finding. Keene v. Anaconda Co., 201 M 102, 652 P2d 216, 39 St. Rep. 1982 (1982).

Permanent Total Disability — Medical Evidence — Prospects of Reentering Job Market: The claimant was injured while employed as an auto mechanic. In order to qualify for permanent total disability, medical evidence and evidence of the claimant's particular employment status must show that the claimant has no reasonable prospect of reentering the normal labor market. Because medical testimony indicated that claimant could reenter the labor market in a sedentary job and because the claimant was also qualified to teach vocational skills, the claimant did not qualify for permanent total disability. Bundtrock v. Duff Chevrolet, 199 M 128, 647 P2d 856, 39 St. Rep. 1211 (1982).

Temporary Total Disability — Further Medical Treatment: The claimant was injured while employed as an auto mechanic. Because medical testimony established that further treatment would allow the claimant to return to the normal labor market in a sedentary capacity and because the claimant was qualified for some types of sedentary work, a finding of temporary total disability was upheld. Bundtrock v. Duff Chevrolet, 199 M 128, 647 P2d 856, 39 St. Rep. 1211 (1982).

Computation of Award Based on Concurrent Employment: Earnings from concurrent employments may be combined in computing workers' compensation award if the employments are sufficiently similar so that a disabling injury at one employment would necessarily disable the employee in respect to the other employment. However, where appellant had terminated the concurrent employment prior to his injury and was merely receiving a 2-month continuation of salary because of length of service in the concurrent employment, such earnings from that former employment should not be included in computing temporary total disability award. Gee v. St. Compensation Ins. Fund, 197 M 335, 642 P2d 1070, 39 St. Rep. 597 (1982), followed in Milender v. Carpenter, 230 M 1, 748 P2d 932, 44 St. Rep. 2204 (1987).

Workers' Compensation Lump-Sum Advance — Guardian Ad Litem Appointments: A mother received a lump-sum workers' compensation advance payment. Her minor child had a separate, legally cognizable interest in present and future benefits, which might be prejudiced by any lump-sum payment to the mother; therefore, the Workers' Compensation Court should have either appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the child or made a finding stating why appointment was not necessary, and it was error to fail to do so. However, reversal was not required as there was a mutual benefit to mother and child in the payment of the benefits and the method of lump-sum advance repayment presented a very limited chance of financial loss to the child. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Standard of Review: In cases involving application of a well-defined statutory term to a given set of facts, the issue for the reviewing court is whether the lower court's application is legally correct. The reviewing court is not required to affirm simply because the lower court's application is not unreasonable. Therefore, in reviewing the Workers' Compensation Court's application of the definition of "temporary total disability" to its own findings of fact, the reviewing court determined whether the application was legally correct. Anderson v. Home Indem. Co., 178 M 290, 583 P2d 440, 35 St. Rep. 1332 (1978).

Denial of Substantial Rights Not Found: Holding of Workers' Compensation Court refusing to extend temporary total disability was upheld. Substantial rights were not denied. McAlear v. McKee, 171 M 462, 558 P2d 1134 (1976).

"Any Employer": The use of the word "insurer" in this Workers' Compensation Act should be construed as referring to insurers "under any plan", which includes employers who are their own insurers under plan No. 1. McMillen v. Arthur G. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975).

Right of Husband to Compensation:

The right of a husband to compensation on the ground that he was incapable of supporting himself is a question of fact, and where his wife was injured and died while engaged in employment covered by the Workers' Compensation Act, and where the husband worked steadily during the period in question losing only an occasional week, the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court and Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) that he was not incapable of supporting himself at that time and therefore not entitled to compensation. Kyyny v. Sherman & Reed, 111 M 593, 113 P2d 337 (1941).

A surviving husband incapable of supporting himself, and living with or legally entitled to be supported by the deceased wife at the time of the injury sustained by the latter in an employment covered by the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Worker's Compensation Act) and from which injury she died, is a beneficiary under the provisions of the Act. Kearney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 90 M 228, 1 P2d 69 (1931), distinguished in Kyyny v. Sherman & Reed, 111 M 593, 113 P2d 337 (1941).

Plant of the Employer:

Injury sustained by foreman of company which was employed by railroad to operate certain of railroad's coal docks, in stepping through hole in floor of pumphouse owned by railroad but controlled by company under its contract, was result of a cause "directly connected with his regular employment", within meaning of this section, so as to preclude foreman from recovering from railroad after acceptance of benefits from company under the Workers' Compensation Act. Recovery for injuries against a third party tortfeasor in addition to receiving compensation is permitted if cause of injury has no "direct connection with the regular employment". Sullivan v. N. Pac. Ry., 24 F. Supp. 822 (D.C. Minn. 1938), affirmed in Sullivan v. N. Pac. Ry., 104 F2d 517 (8th Cir. 1939).

Where a railroad company delivered empty cars and transported loaded ones over a spur track constructed to a point near a coal mine, and the portion of the track where the coal company placed loaded cars was indispensable to the conduct of its business, and one of the latter company's employees was injured while attempting to set a defective brake on a loaded car which he was moving while in the course of his employment, the injury occurred at the "plant" of his employer, entitling him to compensation. Black v. N. Pac. Ry., 66 M 538, 214 P 82 (1923).

Casual Employment:

Where a dentist also operated for gain a large apartment house, in the construction of an addition to which plaintiff employee was injured, the former's contention, in an action for damages, that the latter's employment was "casual", was without merit, since a person may be engaged in more than one business, trade, or profession. The building of the addition to the apartment house having been in furtherance of defendant's apartment house business, the plaintiff's employment was in the usual course of that business. Nelson v. Stukey, 89 M 277, 300 P 287, 78 ALR 483 (1931).

A truck driver's truck became mired in a mudhole from which, without help, he was unable to extricate it. He so informed the employer by phone, who advised him to procure help. The person procured to assist him was injured in an attempt to extricate the truck. Under the circumstances the helper was employed to work for the truck driver's employer in the course of the latter's business. The fact that the helper's employment was but temporary or casual was of no importance, and the injury sustained by the helper was compensable under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). Indus. Accident Bd. v. Brown Bros. Lumber Co., 88 M 375, 292 P 902 (1930).

Defendant company's business was that of generating and disposing of electric power. A watchman at its plant employed a miner to dig a well to secure water for use at the watchman's dwelling house and miner was killed while doing so. The company had elected not to come under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). The employment of decedent by the watchman was not in the usual course of business of the company but was casual in its nature. Miller v. Granite County Power Co., 66 M 368, 213 P 604 (1923), distinguished in Nelson v. Stukey, 89 M 277, 300 P 287 (1931).

Legally Entitled to Support: Under this section, compensation for injury to the husband may be awarded to a wife or widow only if at the time of the injury she was legally entitled to his support, i.e., if at that time she could have compelled him under the laws of the state to support her. Goodwin v. Elm Orlu Min. Co., 83 M 152, 269 P 403 (1928).

Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 813 inserted (1)(c) relating to organizations that place community service participants; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: Inserted (2) including group that is allowed to operate as self-insurer.

1985 Statement of Intent: Chapter 480, L. 1985, which enacted subsection (2) of this section and subsection (2) of 39-71-2103, included the following statement of intent: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it requires the adoption of rules by the workers' compensation division of the department of labor and industry.

The legislature intends that the division adopt only those rules required by section 4 of this bill [an uncodified extension of existing rulemaking authority].

The rules adopted by the division to implement section 4 should require the submission of information regarding the following:

(1) the requirements for formation and certification of an association, corporation, or organization of employers to operate as a group self-insured employer, including provisions for the addition of new members and the withdrawal of existing members;

(2) requirements for proof of solvency of the group self-insurer and to maintain security to insure payment of obligations under the act;

(3) requirements for an indemnity agreement and power of attorney between the individual employers within the group, including the requirement that all members of the group remain jointly and severally liable;

(4) requirements for and confirmation of excess liability insurance;

(5) requirements for management of the association and annual reports to the division;

(6) requirements for auditing the group self-insurer to determine that it is meeting its obligations under the Workers' Compensation Act;

(7) provisions for the termination of group self-insurance by the group on request and for termination by the division upon determination that the group no longer meets the requirements for certification as self-insured and for determining responsibility for pending claims.

The legislature intends that all group self-insured employers must comply with the provisions of the act and rules enacted thereunder. In developing rules, the legislature intends that employees of the group self-insurer have as much assurance as reasonably possible of the benefits to which they are entitled under the act."

Case Notes

Transfer of Company Operation: Where milling company transferred its trucking facilities to a different location where they were operated on a break-even basis under supervision of assistant to the president of the company in order to avoid inclusion of truck drivers in union bargaining unit with rest of its employees, truck driver's employment had not been transferred so as to entitle him to bring common-law negligence action against the trucking operation as a separate employer since control remained in the company which supervised activities of its presidential assistant. State ex rel. Ferguson v. District Court, 164 M 84, 519 P2d 151 (1974).

Joint Ventures: Individual members of joint venture are "employers" within meaning of act and as such are immune from tort actions for death of employees of joint venture. Hamman v. U.S., 267 F. Supp. 420 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Water Commissioner Employee of District Court Judge: When a District Court Judge appoints a Water Commissioner under Title 85, ch. 5, the District Court Judge, rather than the water users, is considered the employer for the purpose of payment of workers' compensation. 40 A.G. Op. 56 (1984).

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 238 inserted (7)(c) establishing the rate for elected workers' compensation coverage for self-employed volunteer firefighters. Amendment effective April 13, 2001.

Chapter 465 in (1)(h) near middle of second sentence after "workers' compensation coverage for" substituted "recipients of financial assistance, as defined in 53-4-201, or for participants in the food stamp program, as defined in 53-2-902" for "participants in the FAIM project" and in third sentence after "entity's" substituted "public assistance" for "FAIM" and after "participant's training" substituted "while receiving financial assistance or while participating in the food stamp program" for "in the FAIM project"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 45, Ch. 465, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to payments made after January 1, 2001, for mental health services provided to children with serious emotional disturbances for whom mental health services are not provided by any other public mental health services program and whose family income is at or below 150% of the federal poverty level."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 124 substituted (1)(h) regarding placement of a person pursuant to the FAIM project for former text that read: "a person placed at the employer's worksite as a participant in a public assistance program authorized by Title 53, chapter 4, parts 6 and 7, for workers' compensation purposes only. A person placed at an employer's worksite under Title 53, chapter 4, parts 6 and 7, may not be considered an independent contractor under 39-71-120. An employer may be reimbursed for the premium cost as provided in 53-4-603"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 124, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to individuals participating in the FAIM project on and after July 1, 1999."

1997 Amendments: Chapter 172 in (5)(a), in three places after "partnership", inserted reference to limited liability partnership; in (8), near middle of first sentence after "limited liability company", inserted "limited liability partnership"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 500 in (1)(c), near middle after "as defined in this chapter, and", inserted exception clause; inserted (9) concerning student who is paid wages by educational institution or business partner; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 515 inserted (1)(h) relating to a person placed at an employer's worksite under a welfare program under Title 53, chapter 4, parts 6 and 7, providing that the person is not an independent contractor, and allowing the employer to be reimbursed for the premium cost; inserted (2)(d) relating to a licensed foster parent providing care without wage compensation to fewer than seven children in the person's residence; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Transition: Section 10, Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided: "Any surplus funds remaining in the underinsured employers' fund on [the effective date of this section] must be deposited in the uninsured employers' fund provided in 39-71-502 [now repealed]." Section 12(2), Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided that sec. 10 was effective on passage and approval. Approved March 28, 1997.

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 500, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 500, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] [39-71-116 and 39-71-118] is effective July 1, 1997, and applies to injuries occurring on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Saving Clause: Section 4, Ch. 515, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 131 inserted (4)(b) defining volunteer hours; inserted (7)(b) relating to formula for computing employer's payroll report for volunteer firefighters; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 308 deleted former (1)(d) that read: "(d) students enrolled and in attendance in programs of vocational-technical education at designated vocational-technical centers"; and adjusted subsection references. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 344 in (8), at beginning, inserted exception clause. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 424 in former (1)(d) substituted "vocational-technical program within a unit of the university system" for "vocational-technical centers"; inserted (1)(g) concerning enrolled member of a volunteer fire department or person who provides ambulance services; inserted (2)(c) concerning a volunteer and defining the term; inserted (3) authorizing coverage of a volunteer; adjusted internal references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 13, 1995. The compiler has not codified the amendment in (1)(d) by Ch. 424 because the amendment was in the nature of a name change and this subsection was deleted by Ch. 308.

Chapter 516 in (1)(a), in second sentence after "corporations", inserted "except those officers identified in 39-71-401(2)" and in fourth sentence substituted "employment" for "service"; in (5)(a), after "sole", substituted "proprietor" for "proprietorship" and inserted references to limited liability companies and their members; in (5)(b), after "proprietor", inserted references to members; inserted (6) relating to a quasi-public corporation, private corporation, or manager-managed limited liability company electing to include as an employee an officer or manager exempted under 39-71-401(2); in (8) inserted reference to limited liability company; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 344, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 3] [39-8-201] authorizes the department of labor and industry to adopt rules regarding professional employer organization and group licensing. It is intended that the department develop rules similar to those adopted by other states that regulate professional employer licensing organizations and groups and develop rules to provide for the reciprocal licensing provisions provided for in [this act] [Title 39, ch. 8]."

Severability: Section 21, Ch. 344, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 25, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 154 inserted (2) clarifying that a person injured while participating in a recreational activity or while performing voluntary service at a recreational facility is not entitled to workers' compensation; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 279 substituted reference to aircrew for reference to airman.

Chapter 458 in (1), (6), and (7), after "employee", deleted "workman"; inserted (7)(c) to include nonresident construction workers; inserted (7)(d) to include certain nonresident employees whose employer elects coverage with an insurer that allows certain elections; inserted (8) allowing an insurer to require coverage for certain nonresident employees who do not meet the statutory requirements as a condition of approving the election; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1993.

Chapter 471 inserted (1)(g) relating to prison inmates; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 561 in (1), (6), and (7), after "employee", deleted "workman"; at beginning of (1)(b) deleted "a recipient of general relief who is performing work for a county of this state under the provisions of 53-3-303 through 53-3-305 and"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Saving Clause: Section 5, Ch. 458, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 129 inserted (2) defining volunteer firefighter; in (3)(b) changed subsection reference; and inserted (4) allowing inclusion of volunteer firefighter as employee for workers' compensation coverage and excluding disability benefit coverage.

Chapter 323 inserted (5) regarding employment of a worker whose services are furnished by an entity other than a temporary service contractor; and inserted (6) defining employee, workman, or worker. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 813 inserted (1)(f) relating to persons who perform community service; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: In (2)(b), at end of first sentence, inserted "and stating the level of compensation coverage desired by electing the amount of wages to be reported, subject to the limitations in subsection (2)(d)"; inserted (2)(c) requiring change in elected wages to be in writing and effective at start of next quarter following notification; in (2)(d) inserted first sentence requiring weekly benefits to be based on amount of elected wages, subject to minimum and maximum limitations of this subsection and near middle of second sentence substituted "the electing employer may elect not less than" for "the insurance carrier shall assume a salary or wage of such electing employee to be not less than"; and made minor changes in form and phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 370 in (1)(d) substituted "state superintendent of public instruction" for "state board of public education". Chapter 370 made this change to clarify that the State Superintendent gave approval under the former law. Chapter 658 transferred governance of the vocational-technical centers (now colleges of technology) to the Board of Regents, so the Ch. 370 amendment has not been codified.

Chapter 464 in (1)(a) deleted subsection reference to 39-71-116.

Chapter 658 in (1)(d), after "education", deleted "approved by the state board of public education" and before "vocational-technical" deleted "postsecondary".

1985 Amendments: Chapter 336 inserted (1)(e) including airmen and volunteers under 67-2-105.

Chapter 670 in (1)(b) substituted "53-3-303" for "53-3-302".

1981 Amendment: Substituted "not less than $900 a month and not more than 1 ½ times the average weekly wage as defined in this chapter" for "$900 per month" in (2).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Recreational Activity Exclusion — Not Applicable to Ski Instructor During Warmup Run — Traditional Course and Scope Analysis: A ski instructor who was injured on a warmup run prior to teaching a lesson was performing a prescribed duty of employment. The recreational activity exclusion was not applicable, and the injury occurred during the course and scope of employment, making the injury a compensable industrial accident. Connery v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 280 M 115, 929 P2d 222, 53 St. Rep. 1324 (1996).

Immunity of Covered Employee for Work-Related Injury to Coemployee Regardless of Employer's Election Not to Cover Injured Coemployee: Malek was a compensated director and president of the corporation that employed Hankins. Hankins unintentionally injured Malek in the course of employment. Hankins was covered by the corporation's workers' compensation insurance, but an election was made by the corporation not to cover Malek. In a subsequent negligence action, Hankins was granted summary judgment based on the principle of exclusivity. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment because the Workers' Compensation Act provides immunity to a covered employee for work-related injuries to a coemployee regardless of the employer's election not to cover the injured coemployee under workers' compensation. Malek v. Hankins, 275 M 97, 911 P2d 1127, 53 St. Rep. 55 (1996). See also Kelly v. Mile Hi Single Ply, Inc., 890 P2d 1161 (Colo. 1995).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Wages Distinguishable From Income From Profits: Since his accident, claimant had not drawn a salary from or performed the physical activities of the plumbing business, which he had insured under this section. State Fund discontinued his benefits on the grounds that because his business remained profitable and even increased its income since his accident, claimant had not suffered a total loss of wages. The Supreme Court held that although the concepts of wages and income from profits are used interchangeably, the terms are not synonymous. Following its decision in Chatfield v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 516, 374 P2d 226 (1962), the court noted that the ability to acquire income is not equivalent to the ability to work. The point ". . . is not that the individual is able, through alternative business arrangements, to make a profit from their business, but that they can no longer perform the activities which State Fund insured". The increase in business and profit was not attributable to claimant's capacity as a plumber but rather to the efforts of his family, who performed the work necessary to enhance the business's success and the resulting profits; therefore, claimant did suffer a total loss of wages from the job for which he was insured and was entitled to a continuation of benefits. Tehle v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 25, 835 P2d 1, 49 St. Rep. 608 (1992).

Worker Injured Going to Job on Drilling Rig Within Scope of Employment — Transportation as Reasonable Belief of Employment: An oil driller contacted claimant and arranged transportation to the rig, with work to begin upon arrival. Claimant was injured on the way to the job and filed for benefits. The Supreme Court ruled that claimant had a reasonable belief as to employment and since the single purpose of his trip was to go to the site of employment in a transportation mode furnished by the employer, coverage was appropriate. Lassabe v. Simmons Drilling, Inc., 228 M 94, 743 P2d 568, 44 St. Rep. 1369 (1987), distinguished in Roberts v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 273 M 266, 903 P2d 782, 52 St. Rep. 967 (1995).

Furnishing Valuable Equipment as Suggestive of Employment Relationship: The fact that an employer furnished valuable equipment necessary to perform employment obligations and enjoyed the right to fire if proper equipment maintenance was not performed satisfied the test of direct employment status despite a contract provision designating the employment as being within independent contractor status. Schrock v. Evans Transfer & Storage, 225 M 348, 732 P2d 848, 44 St. Rep. 292 (1987).

Unqualified Driver Not Contractual Employee: An agency agreement between Evans Transfer and Storage (Evans) and North American Van Lines (North American) authorized Evans to provide qualified drivers and necessary additional helpers and obligated North American to maintain workers' compensation coverage for those helpers. Evans hired Schrock as a driver and went to great lengths to obscure the fact from North American since Schrock's employment application to North American as a driver was rejected. It was not error to conclude that Schrock was not a contractual employee of North American. The fact that drivers help load and unload shipments did not turn Schrock into a helper for workers' compensation coverage purposes. Schrock v. Evans Transfer & Storage, 225 M 348, 732 P2d 848, 44 St. Rep. 292 (1987).

"Control Test" Not Met — Independent Contractor Status Affirmed: A telephone repairman who was told that there might be a limited amount of periodic work with no representation of the actual amount of work available, who was paid on a piece-rate basis while free to accept or reject any repair work offered, and who was free to perform repairs at a location away from the business and to use his own tools and method of repair without being required to be at the business during any specific hours did not meet the "control test" set out in Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., infra, and was therefore an independent contractor. Foster v. Comm'r of Labor & Indus., 225 M 246, 731 P2d 1313, 44 St. Rep. 207 (1987).

Factors to Be Considered — Control Test: In Montana the "control test", under which the right to control details of the individual's work is decisive, may be used to determine whether employee status exists and also to determine who the employer is. The four factors to be considered under the "control test" are: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control; (2) method of payment; (3) furnishing of equipment; and (4) right to fire. Employment status can be established on the strength of any one of the factors. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Fiancee's Expectancy — Gratuitous Employment Precluded: Cain had a contract with the Billings Gazette to deliver papers to outlying areas. He met claimant, and she moved in with him. They later became engaged. Cain furnished claimant with room, board, and the use of an automobile. Claimant began delivering papers for Cain without compensation although he normally paid others $30 a day for the same work. Claimant was injured in an auto accident while delivering papers. Claimant was awarded workers' compensation. Both Cain and the Gazette challenged the finding that claimant was Cain's employee and asserted that even if she was, she fell within the exemption from coverage of 39-71-401(2)(f). The Supreme Court found that though there was no express agreement for compensation, claimant worked virtually full-time for Cain. She expected to marry Cain and that her participation in the business would provide for her future security. The court found sufficient evidence in the record to establish a contract for hire. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Test for Independent Contractor When No Written Contract: When there is no written contract between the parties, the court will look to the facts alone to determine whether the employer has the right to control the work of the person whose status is in question. Sharp v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298, 35 St. Rep. 1430 (1978), followed in Morris v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 245 M 153, 799 P2d 1063, 47 St. Rep. 1942 (1990).

Gratuitous Services: Where claimant's deceased, who was the friend of a bulk oil plant operator and was making deliveries for him at a compensation of 1 per gallon delivered during the latter's absence on active duty in the army reserve, was severely burned while loading a gasoline truck from which injury he subsequently died, his services were not gratuitous and there was evidence to sustain a finding that decedent was defendant's employee within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Act. Kimball v. Cont. Oil Co., 170 M 86, 550 P2d 912 (1976).

Employer Control Through Supervisor: Where ultimate control of all details of work performed by plaintiff was in Yellowstone Pine, and plaintiff was supervised by another employee of same company, control over plaintiff was in Yellowstone Pine and therefore plaintiff was employee of Yellowstone Pine, receiving benefits from workers' compensation, and could not pursue common-law action against his employer. State ex rel. Ferguson v. District Court, 164 M 84, 519 P2d 151 (1974).

Airport Employee: Plaintiff under a contract of employment with the city-county airport was not an "actual" employee of the State of Montana under the accepted definitions. Kelleher v. St., 160 M 365, 503 P2d 29 (1972).

Oral Employment Contract: A tileworker in Utah, contacted on the telephone and offered a job on a project in Montana by an authorized agent of subcontractor having contract for the tile flooring in the project, was an employee of the subcontractor at the time that he met his death in a one-car accident on a highway in Montana while driving to the site of his proposed employment, as he was to receive monetary compensation for the time spent traveling to the job. Guarascio v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 497, 374 P2d 84 (1962).

Lumberman — Not an Employee: A lumberman who contracted with lumber company to cut, log, and mill certain timber was not an employee of the lumber company. Kimball v. Indus. Accident Bd., 138 M 445, 357 P2d 688 (1960).

Independent Contractor:

In an action to recover an assessment made on compensation paid to truck drivers whom employer claimed were the employees of an independent contractor, it was proper to give an instruction that the Board was not a party to the contract with the independent contractor and was not bound to recognize the contracting parties but could assert its rights against "party employing the laborer". Jeffries Coal Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 131 M 511, 312 P2d 128 (1957).

An "independent contractor", excluded from the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) by this section, is one employed to perform work on condition that he is free from the control of the employer as respects the manner in which the details are to be executed. Nelson v. Stukey, 89 M 277, 300 P 287, 78 ALR 483 (1931).

Accidents Occurring Outside of State: Employees who are resident citizens of the state, employed and paid in Montana through the only office of their employer, a Montana corporation, are entitled to the benefits of the workers' compensation laws of Montana although they were injured in another state. State ex rel. Morgan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 272, 300 P2d 954 (1956). (Dissenting opinion, 130 M 272, 300 P2d 954 (1956).)

Not Municipal Employee: Plaintiff, who was employed by contractor employed by city and who had entered into no contract of hire with city and was not on city's payroll, was not an employee of the city within the meaning of this section. Sullivan v. Butte, 117 M 215, 157 P2d 479 (1945).

Minors — Capacity to Contract and Lawfulness of Employment Immaterial: This section, defining the term "employee" to include minors unlawfully employed, dispenses with the necessity of a valid contract of employment, making wholly immaterial the age or competency of the minor and the capacity of the minor to contract, as well as the lawfulness of the employment, rendering employers insured under the act immunity from common-law or statutory suits for damages, even where injury or death results under employment in violation of 41-2-101 (now repealed), the child labor law. Tarrant v. Helena Building & Realty Co., 116 M 319, 156 P2d 168 (1944).

Termination of Employment: Plaintiff having predicated his cause of action upon the relation of master and servant, his contention that his detention in the mine after 8 hours had expired constituted false imprisonment as well as a violation of the 8-hour law thus terminating his employment, is without merit since his employment could not be terminated in any such manner. Wirta v. N. Butte Min. Co., 64 M 279, 210 P 332, 30 ALR 964 (1922).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (1)(a), at end, inserted "that is established by objective medical findings"; in (5)(a), in two places, substituted "condition" for "harm"; inserted (5)(b) defining primary cause; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: Substituted section (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former section that read: ""Injury" or "injured" means:

(1) a tangible happening of a traumatic nature from an unexpected cause or unusual strain resulting in either external or internal physical harm and such physical condition as a result therefrom and excluding disease not traceable to injury, except as provided in subsection (2) of this section;

(2) cardiovascular or pulmonary or respiratory diseases contracted by a paid firefighter employed by a municipality, village, or fire district as a regular member of a lawfully established fire department, which diseases are caused by overexertion in times of stress or danger in the course of his employment by proximate exposure or by cumulative exposure over a period of 4 years or more to heat, smoke, chemical fumes, or other toxic gases. Nothing herein shall be construed to exclude any other working person who suffers a cardiovascular, pulmonary, or respiratory disease while in the course and scope of his employment.

(3) death resulting from injury."

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Whether Tort Claim Barred by Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Provisions — Posttraumatic Stress Disorder Not Compensable: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. Onstad did not file a workers' compensation claim; nevertheless, Payless contended that the claim was precluded by the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act and that the Workers' Compensation Court, rather than the District Court, should have made the initial determination whether Onstad's injuries were covered by workers' compensation. The Supreme Court noted that in accord with prior case law, the District Court did have jurisdiction to determine whether Onstad's tort claim was barred by the exclusivity provision, then went on to hold that Onstad's injury was not compensable under the Workers' Compensation Act because it was primarily a posttraumatic mental injury related to Onstad's stress of contending with the attack. Thus, Payless's exclusivity defense failed as a matter of law. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000). See also Yarborough v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 282 M 475, 938 P2d 679 (1997).

Spoliation of Evidence Claim Not Barred by Exclusivity of Workers' Compensation Act: As part of an industrial accident case, Olivers requested that equipment involved in the accident remain intact so that it could be examined by an expert. The equipment was subsequently altered, and Olivers brought an action for negligent and intentional spoliation of evidence. The District Court determined that the exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act barred Olivers from bringing a claim for spoliation of evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that by definition, injuries that trigger an exclusive remedy under the Act are internal or external harm to a worker's body, but the loss or impairment of a person's ability to bring an action against a third party for spoliation of evidence is not an injury covered by the Act. Thus, Olivers' claim was not barred by the Act's exclusivity provisions. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999).

Necessity for Objective Medical Findings to Prove Compensable Injury: For injuries occurring after the 1995 amendments to 39-71-407 and the decision in Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar., 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996), the claimant must show through objective medical findings that an injury occurred. Matthews v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 225, 296 M 76, 985 P2d 741, 56 St. Rep. 888 (1999).

Finding of Malingering Affirmed Notwithstanding Expert Testimony: Blythe was accidentally stuck with an AIDS-contaminated needle while working in 1989. Evidence was uncontroverted that if Blythe had been infected with the virus, he would have tested positive within 3 to 6 months after the needle stick. However, Blythe has consistently tested negative. Nevertheless, Blythe contended that he suffered anxiety attacks and depression, that his educational efforts were adversely affected, and that his mental condition had deteriorated. Despite conflicting expert testimony as to the extent of Blythe's injuries, sufficient findings existed to affirm the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that Blythe was malingering, that he was not disabled, and that he was not entitled to compensation or benefits for the accident. EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 1998 MT 90, 288 M 356, 957 P2d 1134, 55 St. Rep. 359 (1998).

Posttraumatic Stress Disorder Not Compensable Injury: Yarborough was injured while employed as a firefighter. Following the accident, he was diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD), and he sought compensation. The Workers' Compensation Court properly found no evidence that the PTSD was caused by physical injuries received in the accident, which were healed within several weeks of the accident, but rather that the PTSD was a mental condition arising from emotional or mental stress of the accident combined with preexisting psychological distress and thus was excluded from the definition of injury and was noncompensable. Yarborough v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 282 M 475, 938 P2d 679, 54 St. Rep. 438 (1997), following Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175 (1996), and Kleinhesselink v. Chevron, U.S.A., 277 M 158, 920 P2d 108 (1996).

Constitutionality of Workers' Compensation Provision Disallowing Coverage for Mental Stress Injury: After holding that Stratemeyer did not qualify for workers' compensation coverage under this section because his injury was mental stress-related rather than having a physical component, the Workers' Compensation Court went on to declare the portion of the statute precluding stress-related coverage to be a violation of the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. However, the court did not first presume the statute to be constitutional and did not look to any possible legitimate purpose for the law, which is the proper analysis under an equal protection challenge. Applying the rational basis test, the Supreme Court found that the exclusion of mental claims was rationally related to the possible goal of reducing costs and providing a viable program for the state, employers, and employees in the workers' compensation field, which is a legitimate government objective warranting various classifications of work-related injuries and not an equal protection violation. The order of the lower court was reversed. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506, 50 St. Rep. 731 (1993).

Workers' Compensation Not Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Harassment on the Job: Sexual harassment on the job is an intentional act not arising from an accident, and the Workers' Compensation Act is not an exclusive remedy for a claim for damages for emotional pain and suffering. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Aggravation of Preexisting Condition Included in Definition of Injury: The insurer argued that the term "physical harm" in the statute refers to the claimant's cumulative present condition. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that it would be impossible for a claimant to prove that his cumulative health condition was caused primarily by his exposure at work. The court went on to state that a claimant had only to show that the primary cause of the aggravation of a preexisting condition was exposure or injury in the workplace. Gaumer v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 243 M 414, 795 P2d 77, 47 St. Rep. 1202 (1990).

GENERAL

Automatic Acceptance of Claim — Error to Deny Benefits With No Finding of Maximum Healing or Intervening Event: Chaney claimed that he was injured in 1983 when he slipped and fell at his employing sawmill, which was then insured by USF&G. Chaney also consulted several physicians between 1989 and 1992 concerning numbness in his hands. In 1992, Chaney had surgery to correct carpal tunnel syndrome. State Fund paid benefits while reserving its rights against Chaney and USF&G, but the Workers' Compensation Court held that Chaney was not entitled to benefits. The Supreme Court held that USF&G automatically accepted the claim when it failed to deny it and that by accepting the claim in this fashion, Chaney had satisfied his initial burden to prove that he sustained a compensable injury and that there was a causal connection between his injury and his current condition. Citing Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113 (1993), and Haag v. Mont. School Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693 (1995), the Supreme Court held that without any proof of maximum healing or an intervening event, it was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to deny benefits. Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996).

Lack of Compensable Injury Precludes Exclusivity of Workers' Compensation Remedy — Definition of Injury — Tort Action Allowed: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Citing case law from other states and the public policy expressed by the Legislature, the Supreme Court held that the refusal of the Legislature to provide coverage under the workers' compensation laws precluded the applicability of the exclusive remedy theory upon which those laws are based. The Supreme Court also held that because the definition of injury contained in 39-71-411 must be construed consistently with the definition of injury in this section, an injury excluded by the definition in this section must also be excluded from the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411. Because Stratemeyer did not suffer an injury covered by the exclusive remedy provision of the workers' compensation laws, he was free to bring a separate tort action against the county. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep 245 (1996), followed in Kleinhesselink v. Chevron, U.S.A., 277 M 158, 920 P2d 108, 53 St. Rep. 668 (1996), and Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999). Stratemeyer and Kleinhesselink were distinguished in Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Constitutionality of Workers' Compensation Provision Disallowing Coverage for Mental Stress Injury: After holding that Stratemeyer did not qualify for workers' compensation coverage under this section because his injury was mental stress-related rather than having a physical component, the Workers' Compensation Court went on to declare the portion of the statute precluding stress-related coverage to be a violation of the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. However, the court did not first presume the statute to be constitutional and did not look to any possible legitimate purpose for the law, which is the proper analysis under an equal protection challenge. Applying the rational basis test, the Supreme Court found that the exclusion of mental claims was rationally related to the possible goal of reducing costs and providing a viable program for the state, employers, and employees in the workers' compensation field, which is a legitimate government objective warranting various classifications of work-related injuries and not an equal protection violation. The order of the lower court was reversed. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506, 50 St. Rep. 731 (1993).

Spondylolysis Untraceable to Injury Noncompensable: Claimant's spondylolysis, a congenital back condition, was not traceable to any injury and was therefore not compensable despite claimant's contention that the back problems were a preexisting condition exacerbated by her employment. Hash v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 248 M 155, 810 P2d 1174, 48 St. Rep. 364 (1991), distinguishing Shepard v. Midland Foods, Inc., 205 M 146, 666 P2d 758 (1983), and Hoehne v. Granite Lumber Co., 189 M 221, 615 P2d 863 (1980).

Lower Court's Finding That Claimant Suffered Injury Only to His Knee Affirmed: After reviewing the overall record, the Supreme Court concluded that the lower court's findings were not in stark contrast to the evidence presented at trial and that the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in refusing to hold that the claimant had injured his back as well as his knee. Sciuchetti v. Hurt Constr., 238 M 170, 777 P2d 308, 46 St. Rep. 1177 (1989).

Claimant Suffering Occupational Disease: Claimant, who has a history of asthma, was exposed to an unusually large and concentrated dose of fumes while working as a welder. He was hospitalized briefly, and, following treatment, his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. Claimant is not entitled to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act for the injury he suffered when he inhaled the fumes because his health was returned to its preexacerbation state. However, he is entitled to compensation under the Occupational Disease Act. Eastman v. Atl. Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989), distinguished in Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999).

Pain From Work Activities — Compensable Injury: Following the amputation of his lower leg, claimant returned to work but was unable to perform his job because of pain and discomfort caused by his work-related activities. He consequently was discharged by his employer. The evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the claimant suffered a compensable injury following his return to work after surgery. Varela v. Petroleum Cas. Co., 237 M 300, 773 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 819 (1989).

Evidence of Exposure to Chemical Sufficient to Prove Cardiovascular Disease: The medical evidence in the case was submitted entirely through depositions, enabling the Supreme Court to review the evidence and reach its own conclusions without relying on the lower court's findings. Upon review, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's ruling that sufficient evidence existed to find that the claimant's heart disease was a result of his exposure to the chemical toluene. Roadarmel v. Royal Ins. Co., 237 M 163, 772 P2d 1259, 46 St. Rep. 705 (1989).

Insubstantial Evidence to Support Claim: Claimant who failed to prove by a preponderance of the probative credible medical evidence that his work-related injury was the cause of his present condition was properly denied medical benefits. Martin v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 229 M 529, 747 P2d 1363, 44 St. Rep. 2193 (1987).

Failure to Establish Thoracic Outlet Syndrome as Injury: Claimant failed to prove that a work-related incident was a contributing cause of his thoracic outlet syndrome when he failed to report to his employer or physicians any injury and when three physicians who treated him all testified that the syndrome was a gradually developing problem that could not have been caused by a single traumatic incident, but rather existed for a considerable period prior to the alleged accident. Nelson v. Asarco, Inc., 227 M 272, 739 P2d 943, 44 St. Rep. 1074 (1987).

Depression Caused by Termination of Employment — Not Work-Related Physical Harm: When an employee appeared to be happy in her job but suffered depression and related problems 9 days after being terminated from employment, she did not prove a physical harm stemming from an incident at the workplace absent proof that the job aggravated the depression. Gulbraa v. Alco Energy Prod., 225 M 220, 731 P2d 1302, 44 St. Rep. 185 (1987).

Suicide — Compensable When Traceable to Work-Connected Injury: Suicide is compensable under the Workers' Compensation Act if a work-connected injury produces mental derangement and the mental derangement causes suicide. Campbell v. Federated Mut. Ins., 211 M 68, 684 P2d 1101, 41 St. Rep. 1218 (1984).

Long-Term Exposure to Fumes — No Injury: During McMahon's employment at the Anaconda Company's refinery in Great Falls, he was continuously exposed to moderate levels of sulphuric acid, organic arsenic, zinc, lead, copper, tellurium, asbestos, silver, dust, and other compounds. McMahon's ailments result from smoking cigarettes and exposure to fumes at his work. The court held that the claimant's impairment caused by exposure to a hostile environment for a period of years is a "disease" and not a compensable injury. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 208 M 482, 678 P2d 661, 41 St. Rep. 480 (1984), followed in Wear v. Buttrey Foods Inc., 234 M 477, 764 P2d 139, 45 St. Rep. 2063 (1988).

Evidence of Lack of Injury: An employee had severe back pain at work and went home at the end of his shift. He later called his supervisor and stated he had hurt his back and was going to see a doctor and would not be at work for his next shift. Evidence that he failed to notify his employer at that time that he had been injured in an accident on the job was evidence that employee may not have believed he had suffered an on-the-job injury but was not evidence that employee did not suffer an on-the-job injury. Employee had 60 days to give employer notice of an on-the-job injury; that requirement was met by employee's written notice less than 3 weeks after the alleged injury, and there was no requirement that he notify employer of an accident or injury within hours or days of its occurrence. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981).

Scope and Course of Employment: The District Court properly rejected defendant's contention that claimant failed to establish an injury incurred in the scope and course of employment because she was unable to relate the unusual strain to a tangible happening of a traumatic nature related to any particular task or function she was required to perform and could not relate the strain to any particular time period within the working day. Hutchison v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 178 M 81, 582 P2d 1203, 35 St. Rep. 1126 (1978).

Inability to Work Without Pain: The evidence was sufficient to support a determination that claimant was totally and permanently disabled when, as a result of two injuries, claimant could not work without pain and could not endure the pain to work. Robins v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 175 M 514, 575 P2d 67 (1978), followed in Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), and Killoy v. Reliance Nat'l Indem., 278 M 88, 923 P2d 531, 53 St. Rep. 838 (1996).

Relationship Between Accident and Disability: Claimant's disability resulting from arteriosclerosis obliterans was the result of a disease not traceable to injury, and was not a compensable injury within the meaning of this section. McAndrews v. Schwartz, 164 M 402, 523 P2d 1379 (1974).

Burden of Proof:

Claimant who injured hand and received compensation for such injury was properly denied compensation for alleged "disabling cardiac damage" and "cardiac neurosis" since claimant could produce no substantial evidence to support such claim. Verdi v. Am. Smelting & Ref. Co., 154 M 208, 461 P2d 845 (1969).

Burden is on claimant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that worker died as the result of an accidental injury, but it was not incumbent upon widow to have an autopsy performed to establish the cause of death. Birdwell v. Three Forks Portland Cement Co., 98 M 483, 40 P2d 43 (1935).

Assault by Coemployee: Injury to an employee, resulting from assault by coemployee against whom employee used vulgar language, was the result of an industrial accident. McGrew v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 141 M 324, 377 P2d 350 (1963).

Heart Failure — Industrial Accident: An employee who died of coronary heart disease did not suffer an industrial accident. Bergan v. Gallatin Valley Milling Co., 138 M 27, 353 P2d 320 (1960).

Neurosis Compensable: A disabling neurosis which had been caused by an accidental injury is compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). O'Neil v. Indus. Accident Bd., 107 M 176, 81 P2d 688 (1938); Best v. London Guar. & Accident Co., 100 M 332, 47 P2d 656 (1935); Sykes v. Republic Coal Co., 94 M 239, 22 P2d 157 (1933).

Heat Stroke Constitutes Accidental Injury: Death of state highway employee caused by heat prostration while working on oil-surfaced highway on mid-July afternoon was compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), and fact he lived 11 days after injury did not affect widow's right to recover compensation. Ryan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 100 M 143, 45 P2d 775 (1935).

Heat Prostration — Death Compensable Although Heart Disease Also Present: Death of worker caused by extreme heat from cement kilns which he was attending prior to his collapse was compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), and fact that decedent was suffering from heart disease previous to and on the day of his death did not prevent recovery by his widow. Birdwell v. Three Forks Portland Cement Co., 98 M 483, 40 P2d 43 (1935), distinguished in Woin v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 99 M 163, 43 P2d 663 (1935), and Ryan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 100 M 143, 45 P2d 775 (1935).

TANGIBLE HAPPENING OF A TRAUMATIC NATURE

Uncontested Facts Proving Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant had not suffered a work-related injury to his wrist. The Supreme Court ruled that the decision was not supported by substantial evidence. Uncontested facts presented by the claimant showed that the injury was work-induced. The court reversed the decision and remanded the case for a determination of the amount to be paid to the claimant. Kraft v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 243 M 363, 792 P2d 1094, 47 St. Rep. 1057 (1990).

Inhalation of Welding Fumes and Smoke Not Injury: The fact that claimant had chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, smoked, and breathed fumes and smoke during a 28-year career as a welder did not mean he suffered an injury that would qualify him for workers' compensation benefits since he failed to identify an unexpected tangible happening that occurred on a specific date. Claimant's malady was properly compensated as an occupational disease rather than an injury. Whittington v. Ramsey Constr. & Fabrication, 229 M 115, 744 P2d 1251, 44 St. Rep. 1823 (1987).

Respiratory Disease — Coverage Excluded: Although 39-71-119(1) excludes diseases not traceable to injury, 39-71-119(2) does not automatically exclude respiratory diseases contracted during employment. However, where sufficient medical evidence showed that the incident alleged to be a tangible happening of a traumatic nature lacked medical significance, the claimant did not establish that he had suffered an industrial injury that would entitle him to workers' compensation benefits. Phillips v. Spectrum Enterprises, 224 M 407, 730 P2d 1131, 43 St. Rep. 2288 (1986).

Allergic Contact Dermatitis as Injury and Disease — Claimant's Election of Remedy: Claimant developed allergic contact dermatitis unexpectedly after a single exposure to chemicals that triggered an immunological response creating antibodies that were his allergy, even though he had been exposed to the chemicals for many years without any response. This reaction met the tests of this section, constituting the allergy as an injury within the meaning of the Workers' Compensation Act, as well as an occupational disease within the meaning of the Occupational Disease Act. Claimant could elect his remedy between the Acts. Bremer v. Buerkle, 223 M 495, 727 P2d 529, 43 St. Rep. 1942 (1986).

Heart Attack — May Be Compensable: In certain cases heart attacks are compensable injuries under the Montana Workers' Compensation Act. Davis v. Jones, 216 M 300, 701 P2d 351, 42 St. Rep. 840 (1985).

Tangible Happening With No Physical Harm: The trial court concluded that an incident was a tangible happening of a traumatic nature from an unexpected cause and thus satisfied the first element of the definition of injury. Any injury related to the "tangible happening" in this case was found to produce no harm because no time was lost from work, no medical expenses were incurred, and no disability or impairment of any kind was found causally related to the industrial accident. Morley v. The Anaconda Co., 212 M 184, 686 P2d 917, 41 St. Rep. 1679 (1984).

Phlebitis Caused by Excessive Work Schedule Considered "Injury", Not Occupational Disease: Medical evidence indicated that claimant's phlebitis was caused by her excessive work schedule during 1 week of her employment as janitress/bartender and developed during that period, rather than over 4 months as her employer asserted. Therefore, since the phlebitis was caused at a definite time and was unexpected, the Workers' Compensation Court was correct in its decision that claimant suffered an "injury" within the meaning of this section. Wise v. Perkins, 202 M 157, 656 P2d 816, 40 St. Rep. 1 (1983).

Perceptible "Snap" in Back While Lifting Patient: Where there is evidence in the record that claimant, a nurse, "felt a snap" while lifting a patient weighing approximately 50 pounds, is a tangible, perceptible happening. A "tangible happening of a traumatic nature", within the meaning of this section, is some action or incident that is a perceptible happening, which may be perceived as a contributing cause of the resulting injury. Harmon v. Deaconess Hosp., 191 M 285, 623 P2d 1372, 38 St. Rep. 65 (1981).

Chain of Actions or Incidents as Compensable Injury: Claimant's job consisted of removing 2-by 4-inch studs from a conveyor system and stacking them in a pile. He developed bilateral carpal tunnel syndrome, which required surgery as a result of the continued strain involved in lifting and stacking lumber. The Supreme Court held that a condition that arises and gradually becomes worse over a period of time and was attributable to a chain of actions or incidents is a "tangible happening of a traumatic nature from an unexpected cause or unusual strain" and is therefore a compensable injury within the meaning of this section. Hoehne v. Granite Lumber Co., 189 M 221, 615 P2d 863, 37 St. Rep. 1307 (1980).

Heart Attack Symptoms Insufficient: Although medical records and testimony showed that decedent first felt the symptoms of a heart attack while at work and then continued to work, there was nothing in the record to indicate that it was suffered as a result of a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Under Ness v. Diamond Asphalt Co., 143 M 560, 393 P2d 43 (1964), a heart attack occurring at work but not as a result of work is not an injury under the statute. Therefore, there was no compensable injury. Moen v. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 185 M 79, 604 P2d 765, 36 St. Rep. 2220 (1979).

Nonstrenuous Activity: In order to recover death benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act, the claimant must show an injury as defined by the Act and that such injury was causally related to the decedent's death. A claimant must show that a tangible happening of a traumatic nature was the cause of decedent's death. Here, there was no tangible happening of a traumatic nature. The Workers' Compensation Court found that claimant had been engaged in activity of a nonstrenuous nature (cleaning light fixtures) prior to his demise. There is no evidence in the record of any real, perceptible, or identifiable incident, action, or happening of a traumatic nature within the definition of injury, under the Workers' Compensation Act. Stamatis v. Bechtel Power Corp., 184 M 64, 601 P2d 403, 36 St. Rep. 1866 (1979).

Pulmonary Fibrosis as Product of Injury: Pulmonary fibrosis is a disease, progressive in nature, and is not "traceable to injury" within the requirement of this section. Miller v. Billings, 171 M 91, 555 P2d 747 (1976).

Traumatic Cause of Injury: There are two elements in this section which must be met: (1) there must be a tangible happening of a traumatic nature, and (2) this must be shown to be the cause of physical harm. Hurlbut v. Vollstedt Kerr Co. & Indus. Indem. Co., 167 M 303, 538 P2d 344 (1975), followed in Ferdinand v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 221 M 436, 719 P2d 775, 43 St. Rep. 955 (1986).

Heart Attack — No Tangible Happening: Widow of mailer was not entitled to workers' compensation for his death from heart attack on July 29, 1961, while engaged in his usual activities as there was no tangible happening involving trauma from an unexpected cause. Lupien v. Mont. Record Publishing Co., 143 M 415, 390 P2d 455 (1964).

UNUSUAL STRAIN

Aneurysm:

Employee suffered a ruptured congenital brain aneurysm while performing his work duties at the family-owned business during a period of unusually stressful working conditions. Medical and other evidence supported the conclusion that his death was the result of a compensable injury. Winchell v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 299, 766 P2d 1313, 46 St. Rep. 1 (1989).

Worker who suffered aneurysm when right middle cerebral artery ruptured did not suffer compensable injury as defined in statute in light of evidence that at time of injury he was engaged in performing ordinary activities of employment which would not cause aneurysm. Miller v. Sundance Recreation, Inc., 151 M 223, 441 P2d 194 (1968).

Compensable Injury Arising From Stress:

Employee argued that the kind of stress he worked under was a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. He cited instances of having to please lodge members and their wives, of being under fire for not paying certain bills when funds were unavailable, of being castigated by a lodge officer for failure to pay lodge bills at a time when that officer's IOUs were in the till unpaid, of not having enough help at the bar at times, and of the fear of being terminated. The Supreme Court held, however, that this kind of stress did not constitute a tangible, real happening related to employment which caused his heart attack. Ferdinand v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 221 M 436, 719 P2d 775, 43 St. Rep. 955 (1986).

In order to prove a compensable injury arising from job-related stress, claimant must show an unusual strain resulting from a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099, 36 St. Rep. 1471 (1979), followed in Hall v. Cigna Ins. Co., 248 M 484, 812 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 522 (1991).

Heart Attack — Work Related: There was insufficient medical testimony to support a Workers' Compensation Court denial of a claim based on claimant's allegation that his heart attack resulted from work-related stress or strain. Leary v. The Anaconda Co., 175 M 451, 574 P2d 1008 (1978).

Nervous Breakdown: Where employee, who performed unpopular work for his employer and was subject to taunts and threats from coworkers, suffered a nervous breakdown and resulting schizophrenia, there was no compensable injury under this section since examining physician could not say for certain whether the employee's job created an "unusual strain" leading to the breakdown, and the record as a whole did not indicate that he was entitled to compensation. Erhart v. Great W. Sugar Co., 169 M 375, 546 P2d 1055 (1976).

Showing Required: Where employee seeks compensation for an injury resulting from an "unusual strain", he must show (1) a strain which was unusual either in cause or effect, and (2) that the strain resulted from a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Erhart v. Great W. Sugar Co., 169 M 375, 546 P2d 1055 (1976), followed in Ferdinand v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 221 M 436, 719 P2d 775, 43 St. Rep. 955 (1986).

Sufficient Evidence: Claimant's testimony supporting two specific injuries, the first of which occurred while trying to lift a part of a meat grinder from a low sink and the second of which occurred 1 ½ months later while attempting to lift a 50-pound casing on a meat saw, coupled with evidence of a herniated disc which required surgery, constituted sufficient evidence of an unusual strain caused by a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Love v. Ralph's Food Store, Inc., 163 M 234, 516 P2d 598 (1973).

Lifting as Unusual Strain:

Back injury consisting of a herniated disc, sustained when employee lifted mop pail full of water, resulted from a compensable "unusual strain" within meaning of this section. Robins v. Ogle, 157 M 328, 485 P2d 692 (1971).

Evidence that claimant, while in course and scope of employment, picked up heavy tray of dirty dishes from floor and suffered back strain and testimony of doctor that subsequent back condition resulted from unusual strain was sufficient to support claim of accidental injury within meaning of phrase "unusual strain" as used in statute. Jones v. Bair's Cafes, 152 M 13, 445 P2d 923 (1968), explained in Robins v. Ogle, 157 M 328, 485 P2d 692 (1971).

Pulmonary Embolism — Death Compensable Although No Unusual Strain Beyond the Mere Employment Itself: Where death resulted from a pulmonary embolism which occurred while the employee was engaged in his usual employment, it was compensable, even though there was no unusual strain or exertion involved. Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958).

Heart Failure as an Industrial Accident: Heart failure brought about by unusual stress and strain in employment amounts to an industrial accident for which an award of compensation should be made. Rathbun v. Taber Tank Lines, Inc., 129 M 121, 283 P2d 966 (1955), explained in Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958).

PREEXISTING CONDITION

Prior Overuse Syndrome Not Considered Disability Due to Industrial Injury: Gerlach performed repetitive upper body movements in his lumber mill job. By 1984, he was experiencing physical problems involving his neck and back and sought chiropractic treatment. In 1986, his employer modified its operation to increase production, requiring Gerlach to increase his repetitive actions, and he shortly reached a point at which his right arm was in constant pain, whereupon he filed for compensation. His current claim was properly denied based on the fact that his overuse syndrome existed as early as 1984 and was not caused by and did not result from the increased work activity in 1986. Gerlach v. Champion Int'l, 254 M 137, 836 P2d 35, 49 St. Rep. 670 (1992).

Physical Results of Trauma Over Long Time Manifested in Short Time — Time Definiteness Requirement Met: In deciding that claimant suffered a compensable injury that aggravated a preexisting condition, the time definiteness requirement articulated in McMahon v. Anaconda Co., 208 M 482, 678 P2d 661 (1984), was satisfied by the fact that the physical results of the traumas that claimant experienced over a protracted period of time manifested themselves over a relatively short period of time. The requirement may be satisfied by applying it to either the time period over which the physical condition is caused or the time period over which the disability results. Bodily v. John Jump Trucking, Inc., 250 M 274, 819 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 929 (1991).

Degenerative Knee Aggravated by Injury: Claimant had a degenerative knee prior to injury. The Workers' Compensation Court properly compensated claimant because the condition was aggravated by the injury and because the injury and subsequent surgery were significant factors in the degenerative condition. Weigand v. Anderson-Meyer Drilling Co., 232 M 390, 758 P2d 260, 45 St. Rep. 1138 (1988).

Work Injury Not Contributory to Disability — Preexisting Osteoarthritis: Medical evidence was conflicting as to whether a work-related injury caused or contributed to claimant's disability; however, the lower court properly found that a preexisting osteoarthritis condition, rather than a series of work-related microtraumas, was the cause of claimant's disability. Snyder v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 198, 757 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 542 (1988).

Aggravated Aneurysm as Compensable Injury: Rupture of a preexisting aneurysm, aggravated by stressful working conditions, was found compensable. This section does not require that an injury arise from a specific instance of physical impact. (Decision based on law prior to 1987 amendment that excluded stress as a cause of injury.) Snyder v. San Francisco Feed & Grain, 230 M 16, 748 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 2216 (1987).

Claimant's Bid to Submit New Evidence: The Workers' Compensation Court did not abuse its discretion in denying claimant's motion for a rehearing to submit additional medical evidence of claimant's condition. The court determined that the evidence presented at hearing was insufficient to prove claimant's claim, and that decision will not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. Currey v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 226 M 445, 736 P2d 113, 44 St. Rep. 790 (1987).

Evidence Taken as Whole: The claimant was not entitled to temporary total benefits because the evidence did not establish that his industrial accident either caused or aggravated his preexisting condition. The medical possibility that an industrial accident or injury aggravated a preexisting condition may, together with other evidence, establish a compensable injury, although it did not in this case. Currey v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 226 M 445, 736 P2d 113, 44 St. Rep. 790 (1987), followed in Ballard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 447, 767 P2d 1327, 46 St. Rep. 128 (1989), Eastman v. Transport Ins. Co., 255 M 262, 843 P2d 300, 49 St. Rep. 936 (1992), Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994), and Kramer v. EBI Co., Am. Asphalt, Inc., 265 M 525, 878 P2d 266, 51 St. Rep. 634 (1994).

Decedent's Blood Pressure and Arteriosclerosis Aggravated by Stress: Decedent, a refuse hauler, had a temporary job helping the "lead man". On March 7, he was told he was to be his route's lead man on March 9. On March 9, he was under emotional stress as he wished to do well and perhaps receive a permanent position. He worked especially hard and was ahead of schedule when he died of heart failure while lifting a heavy object. The helper usually did most of the lifting. Decedent had the most difficult and confusing route in the city of Great Falls. He had high blood pressure and narrowing of the arteries at the time he was hired by the city. One doctor testified that his physical and emotional stress may have played a very direct role in his sudden death by aggravating his preexisting conditions, and the other two testifying doctors stated this was at least medically possible. The Workers' Compensation Court properly found this to have occurred and properly found a compensable injury. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Medically Possible Aggravation of Preexisting Condition Sufficient to Grant Compensation: Proof that it is medically possible that an industrial accident or injury aggravated a preexisting condition may, together with other evidence, establish a compensable disability. Bykonen v. Mont. Power Co., 217 M 169, 703 P2d 856, 42 St. Rep. 1112 (1985), following Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981), clarified, in that medical possibility evidence in and of itself does not necessarily extinguish claimant's burden to prove the case by a preponderance of the evidence, in Laber v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, 247 M 172, 805 P2d 1375, 48 St. Rep. 150 (1991), and followed in Houts v. Kare-Mor, Inc., 257 M 65, 847 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 158 (1993).

Minor Traumas Aggravating Preexisting Arthritis in Knees: Plaintiff had degenerative arthritis in his knees prior to beginning work for defendant in 1973. Plaintiff's job involved very heavy lifting, which can speed up the degenerative process. Plaintiff fell at work in 1980, dislocating his left knee. When he returned to work, he wore a knee brace and limped. Plaintiff contended he then had to put more weight on his right knee, which hastened its deterioration. Plaintiff was forced to retire 6 weeks after returning to work after his accident. There was a marked increase in bone deformity in both knees between 1972 and 1980. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the Workers' Compensation Court's conclusions that plaintiff's knees had deteriorated for other than work-related reasons and that plaintiff had completely recovered from his accident at the time he returned to work. The court found that plaintiff's preexisting condition was aggravated by a series of minor traumas (heavy lifting) which were work-related. The 1980 accident was also an aggravation. This was sufficient to be a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Shepard v. Midland Foods, Inc., 205 M 146, 666 P2d 758, 40 St. Rep. 1177 (1983).

Grain Dust Inhalation — Obstructive Pulmonary Disease Aggravated: Substantial evidence existed to support the District Court's finding that claimant suffered an injury within the meaning of 39-71-119 since medical evidence indicated that he had a preexisting condition, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, that was made worse by his inhalation of air containing a high concentration of grain dust. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Preexisting Condition — Irrelevant Whether Caused by Injury or Disease: For the purposes of determining whether a preexisting condition was so aggravated or accelerated by a particular employment that the employee is eligible for workers' compensation benefits, there is no distinction between a preexisting condition caused by an injury and one caused by disease. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Finding of Aggravation of Preexisting Disease Sustained: Where the Workers' Compensation Court finding that preexisting spinal disease was aggravated or accelerated by the accident was based on conflicting evidence, the Supreme Court's function on review was confined to determining whether there was substantial evidence on the whole record supporting the finding. The finding was supported and was upheld where the evidence consisted of claimant's testimony that he received a back injury and production of shirt showing holes where tines of a front-end loader pinned him between the loader and the steering wheel of tractor he was operating, nurse's notes and charts indicating claimant had complained about his back following the accident, and the depositions of the attending physician and another physician stating they found no aggravation by the accident of the preexisting spinal disease. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Acceptable Proof: Proof that it was medically possible for an industrial accident to aggravate a preexisting condition is acceptable proof of disability. Strandberg v. Reber Co., 179 M 173, 587 P2d 18, 35 St. Rep. 1742 (1978).

Aggravation of Preexisting Condition in Other Part of Body: A person injured in an industrial accident is entitled to compensation when an injury to one part of his body results in the aggravation of a preexisting condition in another part of the body. Strandberg v. Reber Co., 179 M 173, 587 P2d 18, 35 St. Rep. 1742 (1978), distinguished in Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985).

New Injury Required: A four-year-old back injury aggravated by lifting a heavy piece of material on the job was not an injury within the purview of this statute since claimant must establish that the injury for which he seeks to recover is a new injury resulting from an unexpected cause. Phelan v. Vogel, 148 M 422, 422 P2d 80 (1966).

Leg Injury Aggravating Arthritis: Employee who injured leg while loading freight car was entitled to workers' compensation where disability was due to accident which aggravated and accelerated arthritic condition. Birnie v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 134 M 39, 328 P2d 133 (1958).

Employer Takes Employee as He Finds Him: The rule that the employer takes the employee as he finds him is well established. The fact that an employee was suffering from a preexisting disease or disability does not preclude compensation if the disease or disability was aggravated or accelerated by an industrial injury which arose out of and in the course of the employment. Gaffney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 129 M 394, 287 P2d 256 (1955).

Disease Aggravated or Accelerated: Death of a coal miner, who was predisposed to heart disease, from shock while coming from work in the mine in which the temperature was very high and passing through an air course into which ice-cold air was being forced by means of a fan, rendering the temperature therein very low, was due to an "industrial" accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Nicholson v. Roundup Coal Min. Co., 79 M 358, 257 P 270 (1927).

Existence of Disease — Compensation Not Precluded: Though death or injury resulting from disease and not proximately caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of an employment is not compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the fact that the employee at the time was suffering from disease does not preclude compensation if the disease was aggravated or accelerated by the accidental injury. Nicholson v. Roundup Coal Min. Co., 79 M 358, 257 P 270 (1927).

CAUSE OF INJURY

Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Claim Barred by Exclusive Remedy Provision of Workers' Compensation — Burden Not Met for Separate Cause of Action for Intentional or Malicious Act: Maney's son, who worked for Cheff clearing timber on property belonging to the Louisiana Pacific Corporation, was killed when a tree fell on him. Maney brought an action against Cheff and the Louisiana Pacific Corporation for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress after seeing her son die in the hospital as a result of the accident. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in dismissing Maney's claim. Citing the comprehensive language in the applicable Montana statutes and cases from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that the intent of the Montana Legislature in providing the exclusive remedy of workers' compensation was to preclude any employer liability whatever for compensation as a result of or concerning an employee's injury or death. The Supreme Court also held that Maney had not met her burden under 39-71-413 because she had alleged no facts demonstrating an intentional or malicious infliction of emotional distress. The court also held that the District Court had correctly dismissed the Louisiana Pacific Corporation's cross-claim against Cheff for indemnity and contribution because those claims were also barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411. Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Cardiovascular Death Unrelated to Specific Event on Single Day Not Considered Compensable Injury Absent Nexus Between Work-Related Activity and Cardiovascular Event: King was a long-haul trucker for TTC Illinois, Inc. (TCC), a company insured under the Workers' Compensation Act. King stopped at a plant in Maryland to pick up heating units for TCC and, after helping move some tarps and laying out straps, went to lie down in the truck cab, where he died. A medical examiner stated that King died of chronic severe atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease that had been present for some time and that was preceded by sudden arrhythmia, which could have occurred spontaneously or have been triggered by King's physical activities. The King family's claim for workers' compensation benefits was denied because the Workers' Compensation Court was unpersuaded that King's work activities triggered either the heart arrhythmia or King's death. The family appealed, asserting that because King died on the job and because, by definition, death is considered an injury, they were entitled to benefits because they proved that King's work-related activity resulted in an unusual strain or effect. The Supreme Court noted that for an injury to be compensable, all the definitional elements of an accident must be proved, including a showing that the accident was caused by a specific event on a single day or during a single work shift. In order for a cardiovascular accident to be compensable, there must be a clear relationship between work-related activity and the cardiovascular event. Here, the claim was properly denied because it was not established that King's death was caused by a specific event on a single day or during a single work shift. King v. TTC Ill., Inc., 2000 MT 260, 301 M 527, 11 P3d 1199, 57 St. Rep. 1089 (2000). See also Stamatis v. Bechtel Power Corp., 184 M 64, 601 P2d 403 (1979), and Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160 (1986).

Compensable Back Injury Related to Leg Injury: Weaver injured her leg while working at a grocery store checkout and, about 3 years later, discovered that she also had a damaged disc in her lower spine, which the Workers' Compensation Court found was caused by the accident or by the change in her gait due to her leg pain. Evidence did not establish what caused the back injury, but whether it was caused by or merely aggravated by the accident, it was held to be a compensable injury. Weaver v. Buttery Food & Drug, 255 M 90, 841 P2d 476, 49 St. Rep. 897 (1992).

Evidence That Injury Not Proximately Caused by Industrial Accident: Following the injury of her back in her initial industrial accident, claimant returned to work and soon began performing preinjury duties. After leaving employment, she entered college where she played varsity basketball, worked part-time, and carried a full credit load of classes. However, she never reported back problems during the required basketball physical. Following college, she played soccer and ran. She eventually applied for a lifting job but stated on the employment application that she did not have a physical disability that would restrict her ability to perform the job. She was injured on the lifting job and received temporary total benefits. She then took a job with a geotechnical service company that required her to hike hilly terrain, dig holes for survey monuments, and carry a 25- to 30-pound pack frame. In light of her activities and medical testimony that she had achieved maximum healing in the months after her initial injury, it was not error for the Workers' Compensation Court to conclude that her ongoing back problems were not proximately caused by the initial accident. Smith v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 254 M 71, 835 P2d 717, 49 St. Rep. 629 (1992).

Deep Foot Infection Caused by Work Boots as Compensable Injury: Welch requested and was provided a new pair of boots for his mine work. The first day he wore them, their snug fit caused sores on two toes, which developed into deep infection, necessitating hospitalization and the eventual amputation of a toe. Welch's insurer contended that the requirements for determining a compensable injury were not met because the infection took 19 days to develop, was not unexpected, and was the end result of a number of factors, including Welch's diabetes. However, the incident that ultimately caused the infection occurred during an identifiable time at an identifiable place, was a specific event during a single work shift, and constituted an identifiable occurrence of physical harm caused by the traumatic stimulus of ill-fitting boots. The definitional requirements of this section having been met, the injury was properly held to be compensable. Welch v. Am. Mine Serv., Inc., 253 M 76, 831 P2d 580, 49 St. Rep. 378 (1992).

Failure to Prove Causal Connection Between Injury and Inability to Work — Relief From Liability for Total Disability: Claimant failed to show that a 1987 injury caused the condition that resulted in his total loss of wages. Because the findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court were supported by substantial credible evidence and because that court's decisions regarding claimant's injuries were specific and consistent, the order denying temporary total benefits was affirmed and the city that employed claimant was relieved of liability for claimant's total disability. Norman v. Whitefish, 248 M 490, 812 P2d 1259, 48 St. Rep. 525 (1991).

Failure to Establish Industrial Injury: Claimant suffered a cervical injury in 1984, for which he was compensated. He suffered an elbow injury in 1987, and although he failed to mention any cervical problems when examined by physicians in 1987, 2 ½ years later he claimed the elbow injury had aggravated his previous cervical injury. Based on the depositions of five physicians and the medical reports of seven other physicians showing that the cervical problems were a natural progression of degeneration resulting from the 1984 injury and an overlapping of symptomatology between the 1984 and 1987 injuries, the Workers' Compensation Court correctly determined that claimant failed to establish that he had suffered an industrial injury to his neck or cervical spine in 1987. Richardson v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 248 M 41, 808 P2d 500, 48 St. Rep. 313 (1991).

Carbon Monoxide Inhalation Precipitating Heart Attack — Compensable Injury: Testimony of a physician, corroborated by the wife, comprised evidence sufficient to support the decision that husband's inhalation of carbon monoxide fumes while working as a car mechanic aggravated his coronary artery disease and precipitated development of a myocardial infarction. Although the disease developed over time, the fact that the event that deprived his heart of enough oxygen to continue pumping probably occurred on his last day of work met the test of time definiteness. Wood v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 353, 769 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 419 (1989).

Break in Chain of Causation — Degree of Misconduct Required: Insurer contended that claimant failed to follow his medical treatment and that this conduct prolonged the period of his disability. The Supreme Court held that the degree of claimant's misconduct required to break the chain of causation must be intentional conduct that is clearly unreasonable. Although evidence on the degree of claimant's cooperation was conflicting, the Workers' Compensation Court reasonably assumed claimant did not intentionally endure 2 years of pain, embarrassment, and multiple surgeries. His actions did not rise to the level of intentional misconduct or break the causal connection to his original injury. Giacoletto v. Indus. Indem. Co., 231 M 191, 751 P2d 1059, 45 St. Rep. 536 (1988).

Anaphylactic Condition as Injury: Claimant's development of an anaphylactic condition triggered by a reaction to talc powder on surgical gloves was a condition marked by a time definite and was unexpected, thus qualifying as an injury. Daniels v. EBI/Orion Group, 230 M 407, 750 P2d 455, 45 St. Rep. 310 (1988).

Greater Weight Given to Testimony of Attending Physician Than to Expert in Determining Cause of Injury: It was proper for the Workers' Compensation Court to give greater weight to the testimony of claimant's treating physician, who had treated claimant on numerous occasions and concluded that claimant's headaches were caused by a work-related accident, rather than to testimony of a neurologist who had examined claimant only once for 30 minutes, based his opinion on limited information, and came to a conclusion that was less than unequivocal. Lauderdale v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 188, 745 P2d 690, 44 St. Rep. 1883 (1987).

Compensable Subsequent Injury — Benefits Receivable: When medical testimony showed a causal connection between an original injury and surgery performed 3 years later due to a subsequent injury, claimant was entitled to receive benefits payable because of medical treatment necessitated by the original injury, including any medical benefits reserved. Rightnour v. Kare-Mor, Inc., 225 M 187, 732 P2d 829, 44 St. Rep. 141 (1987), order and judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court after final settlement was reopened affirmed in Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989), and followed in Guild v. Rockwood Ins. Co., 229 M 466, 747 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 2139 (1987).

Idiopathic Fall Theory Not Applicable to Auto Accident: Claimant urged the court to consider his accident a "type of idiopathic fall", compensable under workers' compensation law. However, the theory does not apply because claimant was not injured in any type of fall; he was injured in an automobile accident. Further, claimant was not in a travel status at the time and was not in the course of employment, thus his injury, idiopathic or otherwise, was not compensable. Correa v. Rexroat Tile, 217 M 126, 703 P2d 160, 42 St. Rep. 1075 (1985).

Substantial Evidence That Industrial Accident Caused Seizures: The Supreme Court upheld the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that claimant's epileptic seizures stemmed from an industrial accident which also resulted in a brain concussion. The Supreme Court reviewed critical medical testimony entered through depositions and found substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's findings of fact. The Supreme Court declined appellant's directive to accord greater weight to one witness as the most qualified expert witness. Where findings are based on conflicting evidence, the Supreme Court's function on review is confined to determining whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings and not to determining whether there is sufficient evidence to support contrary findings. Lamb v. Universal Ins. Co., 211 M 360, 684 P2d 498, 41 St. Rep. 1414 (1984), followed in Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Firefighting Not Cause of Heart Disease: The Supreme Court held that substantial credible evidence supported the judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court denying claimant benefits under this section. Claimant sought full benefits for coronary heart disease allegedly developed or aggravated by his work as a firefighter. Expert medical testimony established that the probable causes of the condition were claimant's personal risk factors such as heavy smoking, high blood pressure, and a strong family history of heart disease. Schieno v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 210 M 457, 683 P2d 953, 41 St. Rep. 1157 (1984).

Lack of Medical Evidence on Cause of Disability — Burden of Proof in Light of Purposes of Act — Standard of Appellate Review: Where the claimant and insurer presented medical evidence as to the uncertainty of the cause of the claimant's multiple sclerosis (MS) but it was shown that the onset of claimant's MS coincided with a job-related injury, the Supreme Court held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court that the claimant's MS was caused by that injury. Under the rationale of Moffett v. Bozeman Canning Co., 95 M 347, 26 P2d 973 (1933), the Workers' Compensation Court properly considered the timing of the claimant's traumatic injury and the purposes of the Workers' Compensation Act along with the evidence of a lack of medical certainty as to the cause of the claimant's disease. Given all these factors and the standard of appellate review of decisions of the Workers' Compensation Court established in McGee v. Bechtel Corp., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156 (1979), the Supreme Court could not conclude that the Workers' Compensation Court was clearly erroneous. Conway v. Missoula Serv. Co., 205 M 459, 669 P2d 225, 40 St. Rep. 1427 (1983), followed in Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Causal Relationship — Degree of Proof Required: In workers' compensation cases, medical proof of causation of injury must be greater than a mere showing that causation was "possible". The court distinguished Close v. St. Regis Paper Co., 175 M 158, 573 P2d 163 (1977), and Gaffney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 129 M 394, 287 P2d 256 (1955), stating that what is medically possible is more reliable in proving aggravation of an injury or disease than in proving cause and effect. Viets v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 178 M 337, 583 P2d 1070, 35 St. Rep. 1364 (1978), followed in Hash v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 248 M 155, 810 P2d 1174, 48 St. Rep. 364 (1991). See also Lakey v. Kerrian's, 228 M 139, 741 P2d 416, 44 St. Rep. 1405 (1987), and Eastman v. Transport Ins. Co., 255 M 262, 843 P2d 300, 49 St. Rep. 936 (1992).

Heart Attack:

Where claimant, supervisor of mill, opened mill on unusually cold day and suffered myocardial infarction while performing his usual duties, there was no proof that myocardial infarction had any causal connection to claimant's employment, and workers' compensation was denied. Hurlbut v. Vollstedt Kerr Co. & Indus. Indem. Co., 167 M 303, 538 P2d 344 (1975).

Where employee suffered fatal myocardial infarction at work but expert cardiologist testified that the attack was not a result of his employment, recovery was denied even though absolute proof was not possible. Ness v. Diamond Asphalt Co., 143 M 560, 393 P2d 43 (1964).

Relationship Between Accident and Disability:

Evidence of claimant's mental problems existing prior to accident and doctor's testimony that it was speculation that claimant's failure to return to work was caused by accident was sufficient to sustain judgment denying recovery under statute for claimant's failure to establish direct relationship between industrial accident and physical condition after such accident. Schwartzkopf v. Indus. Accident Bd., 149 M 488, 428 P2d 468 (1967). See also Brown v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 231 M 158, 752 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 508 (1988), Ballard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 447, 767 P2d 1327, 46 St. Rep. 128 (1989), and White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Where claimant was being treated for bursitis prior to time she lifted box which allegedly caused injury to her shoulder, and surgeon who had operated on shoulder admitted only to the "possibility" of a supraspinatus tendon tear, there was insufficient evidence upon which either the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) or District Court could base award. La Forest v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 147 M 431, 414 P2d 200 (1966).

Spinal Cancer: Workers' compensation was properly denied where claimant's decedent's death resulted from a spinal cancer that was neither caused by nor contributed to by accident in which decedent fractured his dorsal spine, there being no causal connection between the fracture and the cancerous tumor of the spine which caused death. Stordahl v. Rush Implement Co., 148 M 13, 417 P2d 95 (1966). (Dissenting opinion, 148 M 13, 417 P2d 95 (1966).)

Unexpected Cause: Claimant, whose routine job was lifting 15-pound blocks, was not entitled to compensation for back injury since strain from lifting blocks was not an injury resulting from an "unexpected cause". James v. V.K.V. Lumber Co., 145 M 466, 401 P2d 282 (1965), distinguished in Jones v. Bair's Cafes, 152 M 13, 445 P2d 923 (1968).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Disputable Presumption Created of Employee Status — List of Presumptions Held Not Exclusive: Berg was sued by the State Fund in a civil action for the recovery of workers' compensation premium payments. Earlier, at the time of an audit, Berg was asked by a State Fund auditor to submit evidence that 23 persons working for him were independent contractors as Berg claimed and was told that if he did not submit any evidence, the State Fund would presume that the 23 people were employees and that premiums must be paid for those people. Berg submitted no evidence. The Supreme Court contrasted the language of 26-1-601 with the language of 26-1-602 regarding the exclusive or nonexclusive nature of the lists of presumptions in those sections and, citing Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625 (1996), stated that the language of this section should be interpreted in its usual and ordinary meaning. The Supreme Court held that this section creates a disputable presumption that a person is an employee and held that the fact that the presumption created by this section is not contained in the list of disputable presumptions in 26-1-602 is not controlling. The Supreme Court noted that the compiler's comment to Title 26, ch. 1, part 6, makes clear that the listing of disputable presumptions is not intended to be exclusive. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Logging Consultant With No Third-Party Customers — No Independently Established Business: Jerrold Lundberg established Lundberg Logging as a small logging consulting company. The business had a checking account, owned some heavy equipment, paid dues to the Montana Logging Association, and maintained insurance. Lundberg was hired by Pyramid Mountain Lumber Company to work on logging projects. He was provided living quarters but provided his own materials and transportation and was reimbursed mileage. He established his own schedule and did not have to request days off. When Lundberg was injured in an automobile accident while performing work for Pyramid, Pyramid's insurer denied Lundberg's claim. Citing St. John's Lutheran Church v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 252 M 516, 830 P2d 1271 (1992), the Supreme Court held that because Lundberg did not engage in the business of buying lumber for third parties, he should not be considered an independent contractor for the purposes of coverage by Pyramid's workers' compensation insurer. Lundberg v. Liberty NW. Ins. Co., Inc., 268 M 499, 887 P2d 156, 51 St. Rep. 1254 (1994).

Operator of Bar — Employee Not Sole Proprietor: Loos was killed during the robbery of a bar that he was operating. The insurer argued that Loos was the owner of the bar and because he was a sole proprietor and not an employee, his widow was not entitled to workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that although Loos ran the bar, a sale of the bar had never been completed and that because the liquor license was still in Waldo's name, that constituted sufficient control by Waldo over Loos to make Loos an employee and not a sole proprietor. Loos v. Waldo, 257 M 266, 849 P2d 166, 50 St. Rep. 262 (1993).

Use of Independent Contractor Test to Determine Status as Employee or Sole Proprietor: The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not erred in relying exclusively on the independent contractor test to determine the status of the claimant as an employee or sole proprietor because the workers' compensation statutes contain no definition of sole proprietor. Loos v. Waldo, 257 M 266, 849 P2d 166, 50 St. Rep. 262 (1993).

Classification of Church Pastor as Employee Rather Than as Independent Contractor for Workers' Compensation Purposes: A church provided its pastor with the vast majority of the tools of his trade, including an office, place of worship, hymnals, and various items necessary for the pastor to perform his services, and with a support staff consisting of a full-time secretary, part-time bookkeeper, custodian, and groundskeeper. The furnishing of equipment was considered strong evidence of control and a lack of independence sufficient to establish the pastor's status as an employee rather than as an independent contractor. St. John's Lutheran Church v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 252 M 516, 830 P2d 1271, 49 St. Rep. 119 (1992).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Evidence of General Contractor's Control to Be Established Under Contract and in Fact: A subcontractor was injured on the job and claimed workers' compensation benefits as an employee of the general contractor. The claimant argued that the lower court erred in looking only at the "four corners of the contract" to determine the question of the extent of control exercised by the general contractor. The Supreme Court held that control must be established by looking at both the contract and the actual working relationship between the parties. In this case, the lower court had based its findings on evidence of control under the contract and in fact. Walling v. Cigna Ins. Co., 247 M 441, 807 P2d 1335, 48 St. Rep. 250 (1991).

General Contractor's Control Over Subcontractor Insufficient to Create Employee Status: A subcontractor was injured on the job and claimed workers' compensation benefits as an employee of the general contractor. The Supreme Court held that to determine employee status, a four-part test had to be applied to determine whether the general contractor had sufficient right of control to render the subcontractor an employee. In applying the test of evidence of the exercise of control, method of payment, furnishing of equipment, and right to fire, the court found that the subcontractor was not an employee. Walling v. Cigna Ins. Co., 247 M 441, 807 P2d 1335, 48 St. Rep. 250 (1991).

Furnishing Valuable Equipment as Suggestive of Employment Relationship: The fact that an employer furnished valuable equipment necessary to perform employment obligations and enjoyed the right to fire if proper equipment maintenance was not performed satisfied the test of direct employment status despite a contract provision designating the employment as being within independent contractor status. Schrock v. Evans Transfer & Storage, 225 M 348, 732 P2d 848, 44 St. Rep. 292 (1987).

"Control Test" Not Met — Independent Contractor Status Affirmed: A telephone repairman who was told that there might be a limited amount of periodic work with no representation of the actual amount of work available, who was paid on a piece-rate basis while free to accept or reject any repair work offered, and who was free to perform repairs at a location away from the business and to use his own tools and method of repair without being required to be at the business during any specific hours did not meet the "control test" set out in Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., infra, and was therefore an independent contractor. Foster v. Comm'r of Labor & Indus., 225 M 246, 731 P2d 1313, 44 St. Rep. 207 (1987).

Trucker's Status as Independent Contractor Affirmed — Ability to Terminate Contract: The plaintiff owner of a semitrailer truck who contracted with the defendant to haul the defendant's hay to another ranch was injured while unloading the hay. The plaintiff appealed the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court that he was an independent contractor and not entitled to workers' compensation. The Supreme Court applied the four-part test used in Sharp v. Hoerner Waldorf Corp., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298 (1978), to determine the issue of control over the plaintiff's trucking business and held, inter alia, that inasmuch as the plaintiff's employment could not be terminated in the middle of hauling a load of hay, the employer did not have complete control over the employee and the plaintiff's relationship with the defendant was that of an independent contractor. Solheim v. Tom Davis Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034, 41 St. Rep. 326 (1984), overruled on other grounds in Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Test for Independent Contractor or Employee:

In Montana the "control test", under which the right to control details of the individual's work is decisive, may be used to determine whether employee status exists and also to determine who the employer is. The four factors to be considered under the "control test" are: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control; (2) method of payment; (3) furnishing of equipment; and (4) right to fire. Employment status can be established on the strength of any one of the factors. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

This section provides a two-part test, both parts of which must be met before a person can be found to be an independent contractor. The section also reiterates the basic test in Montana, namely the right of control over the person doing the work involved. The court will consider four factors when attempting to determine the issue of right of control. Those factors are: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control, (2) method of payment, (3) furnishing of equipment, and (4) right to fire. Independent contractorship is established usually only by a convincing accumulation of these and other tests, while employment can be proved on the strength of one of the four factors. Sharp v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298, 35 St. Rep. 1430 (1978), followed in Morris v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 245 M 153, 799 P2d 1063, 47 St. Rep. 1942 (1990), and in Doig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 248 M 59, 809 P2d 12, 48 St. Rep. 323 (1991).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court: A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court has declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. State ex rel. St. Uninsured Employers' Fund v. Hunt, 191 M 514, 625 P2d 539, 38 St. Rep. 421 (1981).

Independent Contractor Status Supported by Substantial Evidence: The trial court's finding that a general contractor did not lose his independent contractor status when the defendants began making direct payments to the contractor's employees and subcontractors in order to keep them from walking off the job was supported by substantial evidence. Kosmerl v. Barbour, 180 M 208, 589 P2d 1017, 36 St. Rep. 210 (1979).

Injured Worker — Third-Party Action: The Supreme Court vacated a lower court grant of summary judgment to a third-party defendant who was joined in an action for personal injuries sustained by an employee whose immediate employer elected to be covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n, 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978), overruling Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Employability Precluding Permanent Total Disability Rating: Where a claimant did not show by a preponderance of the evidence a complete inability to perform the jobs that constituted his normal labor market due to his work-related injury, permanent total disability benefits were properly denied. Sterns v. Dudley, 228 M 45, 741 P2d 407, 44 St. Rep. 1329 (1987).

Permanent Total Disability — Nonmedical Components — Burden of Proof: Claimant injured her back in a fall from a ladder. The Workers' Compensation Court found that she had a 15% whole person impairment and that she was permanently totally disabled, until vocationally retrained, based on her medical condition and the presence of nonmedical elements of disability such as her lack of specialized training and limited work experience. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that there was substantial evidence to support the decision, particularly in light of the court's referral of the claimant for vocational rehabilitation. Once a claimant presents evidence showing there is no reasonable prospect of employment, the burden of proof shifts to the employer to show that suitable work is available. The employer failed to carry this burden when it did not introduce any evidence to establish that suitable work was available. Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985), followed in Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502, 48 St. Rep. 306 (1991), and in Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 257 M 335, 849 P2d 1021, 50 St. Rep. 296 (1993). See also Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Permanent Total Disability — Reasonable Prospect of Employment — Burden of Proof — "Odd Lot" Employee: The claimant injured his back on the job in 1980 and for the next 3 years underwent a series of unsuccessful operations designed to relieve the pain. Although claimant's therapist testified that claimant was able to engage in activities in his normal job market, he applied for only one job in the 4 years between injury and trial. Burden of proof shifts from claimant to employer to show suitable work is available once claimant has affirmatively shown that he cannot return to a job in his normal labor market. The Supreme Court held that claimant's own uncertainty, coupled with minimal job search, was insufficient to support a claim of no reasonable prospect of employment and that Workers' Compensation Court was correct in concluding claimant failed to meet his burden of proof and was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits. Claimant did not fall into the "odd lot" employee rule that would shift the burden of proof to the employer to show that some kind of suitable work is regularly and continuously available to the claimant. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984), cited in Gierke v. Billings Gazette, 224 M 446, 730 P2d 1143, 43 St. Rep. 2322 (1986), and followed in Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Permanent Partial Disability — Pain to Be Considered in Determining Disability — Standard of Review: The claimant injured his back on the job in 1980 and for the next 3 years underwent a series of unsuccessful operations designed to relieve the pain. On appeal, claimant argued that the District Court had failed to take proper account of his disabling pain in its determination of permanent partial rather than permanent total disability. The Supreme Court held that pain is "another factor" to be considered in determining disability and that the Supreme Court's function on review is to determine whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court. The Supreme Court found there was substantial evidence on the record to support a finding of partial disability. Metzger v. Chemetron Corp., 212 M 351, 687 P2d 1033, 41 St. Rep. 1788 (1984).

Refusal to Submit to Low-Risk Surgery With High Probability of Success — Effect on Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court found that claimant was permanently totally disabled despite the fact that claimant refused low-risk surgery with a 92% chance of restoring working ability. The claimant had a manic-depressive disorder that distorted his powers of perception, comprehension, and judgment and constricted his mind with the possibility of failure, reinjury, and pain. His mental disorder prevented him from evaluating rationally the benefits of the proposed surgery. From this perspective, the claimant's refusal to submit to knee surgery was not unreasonable. In so holding, the Supreme Court overruled Dosen v. E. Butte Copper Min. Co., 78 M 579, 254 P 880 (1927). Small v. Transp. Ins. Co., 209 M 387, 681 P2d 1081, 41 St. Rep. 776 (1984).

39-71-123. Wages defined.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 238 at beginning of (4)(b) inserted exception clause; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 13, 2001.

Chapter 465 in (2)(e) at end after "public assistance" substituted "as defined in 53-4-201" for "provided through the FAIM project, as defined in 53-4-702"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 45, Ch. 465, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to payments made after January 1, 2001, for mental health services provided to children with serious emotional disturbances for whom mental health services are not provided by any other public mental health services program and whose family income is at or below 150% of the federal poverty level."

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 124 inserted (2)(e) regarding benefits paid to a person through the FAIM project; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Chapter 377 in (4)(c) substituted "except for the wages earned by individuals while engaged in the employments outlined in 39-71-401(3)(a)" for "except self-employment as a sole proprietor or partner". Amendment effective April 20, 1999.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 124, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to individuals participating in the FAIM project on and after July 1, 1999."

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 377, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 491 in (1), in first sentence near beginning, substituted "all remuneration" for "the gross remuneration" and after "remuneration paid" deleted "in money, or in a substitute for money" and in second sentence inserted "the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash. The term includes"; in (1)(b) substituted current text concerning backpay for "board, lodging, rent, or housing if it constitutes a part of the employee's remuneration and is based on its actual value"; in (1)(c) substituted "tips or other gratuities received by the employee, to the extent that tips or gratuities are documented by the employee to the employer for tax purposes" for "payments made to an employee on any basis other than time worked, including but not limited to piecework, an incentive plan, or profitsharing arrangement"; inserted (1)(e) and (1)(f) concerning board, lodging, rent, or housing and payments made on basis other than time worked; inserted (2)(b) concerning payments made for retirement or pension, sickness or accident disability, medical or hospitalization expenses, and death; deleted former (2)(c) and (2)(d) that read: "(c) tips and other gratuities received by the employee in excess of those documented to the employer for tax purposes;

(d) contributions made by the employer to a group insurance or pension plan"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

WHEREAS, ARM 24.11.831 narrowed the scope of the federal definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, an original purpose of this House Bill No. 561 was to codify the narrower definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, this House Bill No. 561 is the appropriate place to repeal Rule 24.11.831, Administrative Rules of Montana."

Severability: Section 36, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 37, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 131 deleted (5) that read: "(5) The compensation benefits and the payroll, for premium purposes, for a volunteer firefighter covered pursuant to 39-71-118 must be based upon a wage of not less than $900 a month and not more than 1 ½ times the average weekly wage as defined in this chapter." Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 243 in (3)(a), at beginning, inserted exception clause; in (3)(b), after "good cause shown", substituted current language concerning calculation of wage using additional period up to 1 year for "by the claimant, the use of the four pay periods does not accurately reflect the claimant's employment history with the employer, in which case the insurer may use additional pay periods"; in (4)(a) inserted second sentence defining concurrent employment; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 154 in (5) substituted "39-71-118" for "39-71-118(4)"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 619 in (1), after "employee", inserted "or income provided for in subsection (1)(d)"; inserted (1)(d) relating to wages, including income or payment in draw, wage, net profit, or money substitute received or taken by sole proprietor or partner; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 129 inserted (5) establishing compensation benefits and payroll for premium purposes for volunteer firefighter.

Chapter 261 in (2)(a), before "expense reimbursements", deleted "travel" and after "subsistence" inserted reference to other expenses and Department rules; and made minor change in style.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (4) requiring that for purpose of calculating compensation benefits for employee working concurrent employments, average actual earnings must be calculated as provided in subsection (3) and stating methods for calculating benefits for covered volunteer and employee working two or more concurrent employments. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Administrative Rules

ARM 24.29.720 Payments that are not wages — employee expenses.

Case Notes

Seasonal Employment — Wages Not to Be Aggregated: A worker who was injured during the off-season was not entitled to have summer job and winter job wages aggregated for the calculation of disability benefits. Under the statutory language of "actually employed", a claimant is concurrently employed if when the claimant is injured at one job, the claimant has a second job, which, in fact, exists at that time. The court distinguished prior cases that were decided before the Legislature enacted the statutory definition of concurrent employment. Dunnington v. State Comp. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 349, 303 M 252, 15 P3d 475, 57 St. Rep. 1488 (2000).

Injury on First Day of Work — Remand Based on Improper Calculation of Number of Hours Claimant Hired to Work: The claimant was hurt the first day on the job. In determining benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court's findings were inconsistent regarding the number of hours that the claimant would have worked had employment continued. The court found that the claimant's wage was properly calculated using a 40-hour workweek, applying Robertson v. Aero Power-Vac, Inc., 272 M 85, 899 P2d 1078 (1995), but also found that if the claimant had continued working, employment would have included overtime. However, Robertson does not stand for the proposition that overtime hours cannot be included in the hours a week for which an employee was hired to work, unless those hours were guaranteed or scheduled, nor did the speculative nature of the number of overtime hours in the present case preclude the consideration of overtime in calculating the claimant's wage. The case was remanded for a redetermination of hours that the claimant would have worked and to address attorney fees and penalties. Flink v. Am. Alternative Ins. Co., 2000 MT 224, 301 M 223, 7 P3d 416, 57 St. Rep. 925 (2000).

Use of Fewer Than Four Preinjury Pay Periods in Calculating Rate Prohibited: Neither this section nor case law authorizes the use of fewer than four preinjury pay periods in calculating an employee's permanent partial disability benefit rate when the employee has worked for four or more pay periods. King v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 282 M 335, 938 P2d 607, 54 St. Rep. 373 (1997).

Court Correct in Determining Number of Hours in Claimant's Workweek: Robertson was hired to work 12-hour shifts and was told that the job might last 5 to 6 days. After being injured on the job, he filed a claim and alleged that his benefits should have been awarded by the Workers' Compensation Court based on a 72-hour workweek. The Supreme Court held that the 5 to 6 days were the outside estimate for the duration of the job and that the lower court had not erred in calculating the benefits based on a 47-hour workweek. Robertson v. Aero Power-Vac, Inc., 272 M 85, 899 P2d 1078, 52 St. Rep. 673 (1995). See also Flink v. Am. Alternative Ins. Co., 2000 MT 224, 301 M 223, 7 P3d 416, 57 St. Rep. 925 (2000).

Wage Supplement Claim — Use of Pay Period Average for Calculating Preinjury Wages: A wage supplement claim, like any other workers' compensation claim, is a claim for a type of compensation benefits. Therefore, this section mandates the use of the four-pay period average for calculating preinjury wages unless one of the enumerated exceptions is met. Multiplying a worker's hourly rate by the number of scheduled working hours is permitted only when a worker has been employed at a job for less than four pay periods. Also, additional pay periods may be used if the four-pay period method does not accurately reflect the claimant's employment history. Further, under 39-71-703, the wages that a worker is qualified to earn, not what are actually earned, are used in calculating wage supplement benefits. In the case at hand, the Workers' Compensation Court found that because Perryman was capable of earning as much if not more than he was earning at the time of injury, he was not entitled to wage supplement benefits under 39-71-703. Perryman v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 269 M 140, 887 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 1523 (1994).

Income Earned by Sole Proprietor Properly Excluded From Benefit Calculations: Claimant argued that this section required that claimant's income from a massage business be included when calculating benefits for an injury that claimant received while working a single day as an employee on a ranch. However, interpreting the section as a whole, the massage business income was properly excluded from the calculations under subsection (4)(c) because claimant was a sole proprietor who elected not to be covered. David v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 435, 884 P2d 778, 51 St. Rep. 1105 (1994), distinguishing Lovell v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95 (1993). Lovell was distinguished in Dunnington v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 349, 303 M 252, 15 P3d 475, 57 St. Rep. 1488 (2000).

Higher Hourly Wage at Time of Injury Overrides Wage Earned in Four Previous Pay Periods: Although the claimant was earning $7.25 an hour at the time of injury, the Workers' Compensation Court awarded an amount of total temporary disability compensation based on the $6-an-hour salary that the claimant had earned in the four pay periods preceding the injury. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that because subsection (3)(b) of this section (1991) allowed use of additional pay periods if a claimant can show good cause why use of the four pay periods does not accurately reflect the claimant's employment history, the Workers' Compensation Court should have used the $7.25-an-hour pay period because it bore a more reasonable relationship to actual wages lost due to injury than did the $6-an-hour rate. (See 1995 amendment.) Deshner v. Town & Country Foods, Inc., 266 M 352, 880 P2d 1300, 51 St. Rep. 787 (1994).

Aggregation of Wages for Determination of Benefits — No Legislative Intent to Change Preexisting Law: Lovell, who was a painter, roofer, and lawn mower, stopped by the Oak Room Bar for a drink after work and was asked by the owner to help unload a truck. In the process, Lovell injured his knee and was found by the State Fund to be temporarily totally disabled. The State Fund paid disability benefits of $8.26 per week based upon the bar owners's testimony that he intended to pay Lovell $4.75 per hour for a 2-hour job. The Workers' Compensation Court refused to consider earnings from Lovell's other jobs in determining his weekly wage for temporary total disability benefits. Citing Cattyson v. Falls Mobile Home Center, 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341 (1979), and other cases, the Supreme Court found that it was the well-established practice under the law prior to 1987 to aggregate wages from concurrent employments for the purposes of determining disability benefits. The Supreme Court found nothing in the language of this section, especially the phrase "same employer", that created a material change in the definition of "wages" that could be construed as a legislative intent to change that prior practice. The Workers' Compensation Court erred as a matter of law when it held that subsection (3) of this section prevents aggregation of wages. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993), distinguished in Dunnington v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 349, 303 M 252, 15 P3d 475, 57 St. Rep. 1488 (2000).

Benefit Calculation — Sporadic, Seasonal Job: Claimant worked at a seasonal, sporadic job during 31 of a total of 59 weeks, for a total of 967 hours. It was proper under the provisions of subsection (3)(b) of this section for the Workers' Compensation Court to consider additional pay periods and to exclude 18 weeks of idleness forced by weather, then divide the total number of actual hours by the actual number of weeks worked to arrive at a fair approximation of claimant's average weekly salary rather than to strictly consider only the four pay periods immediately preceding the injury, which would have provided an average monthly amount higher than the total amount earned in any of the 4 preceding months except 1. It was not error for the court to take into account the seasonal nature of the employment by including time off in its calculations. Gregory v. Michael Bailey & Sons Logging, 255 M 190, 841 P2d 525, 49 St. Rep. 966 (1992).

Wages Distinguishable From Income From Profits: Since his accident, claimant had not drawn a salary from or performed the physical activities of the plumbing business, which he had insured under 39-71-118. State Fund discontinued his benefits on the grounds that because his business remained profitable and even increased its income since his accident, claimant had not suffered a total loss of wages. The Supreme Court held that although the concepts of wages and income from profits are used interchangeably, the terms are not synonymous. Following its decision in Chatfield v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 516, 374 P2d 226 (1962), the court noted that the ability to acquire income is not equivalent to the ability to work. The point ". . . is not that the individual is able, through alternative business arrangements, to make a profit from their business, but that they can no longer perform the activities which State Fund insured". The increase in business and profit was not attributable to claimant's capacity as a plumber but rather to the efforts of his family, who performed the work necessary to enhance the business's success and the resulting profits; therefore, claimant did suffer a total loss of wages from the job for which he was insured and was entitled to a continuation of benefits. Tehle v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 25, 835 P2d 1, 49 St. Rep. 608 (1992).

Truck Driver's Three Cents a Mile Per Diem as Wages: A long haul truck driver was paid 14 cents a mile plus 3 cents a mile per diem. How the parties treated the per diem for tax purposes was not determinative as to whether the per diem was wages. The per diem was wages because it was a thing of value received as consideration for the driver's work and constituted real economic gain to him. It was not actual reimbursement for his out-of-pocket expenses for board and meals. He slept in the sleeper compartment of his truck, and while he ate meals on the road, that expense was not tied exclusively to his job, as one always has to eat. His employer did not require him to keep track of his expenses, and he could spend the per diem on anything he wished. Scyphers v. H&H Lumber, 237 M 424, 774 P2d 393, 46 St. Rep. 919 (1989). See also Anderson v. Hammer, 252 M 73, 826 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 165 (1992).

Wages Determined by Four Preceding Pay Periods — Injury Prior to 1987 Amendment: The Supreme Court used subsection (3) of this section as guidance for a definition of fair and reasonable compensation even though it was enacted after the injury occurred. Stuber v. John Deere Ins. Co., 236 M 189, 769 P2d 1205, 46 St. Rep. 287 (1989).

Attorney General's Opinions

Supplementation of Workers' Compensation Benefits With Annual Leave Not Allowed: Section 39-71-701 provides that a worker is eligible for temporary total disability benefits after suffering a total loss of wages. The term "wages" is defined in this section to include remuneration at the regular hourly rate for vacations and sickness periods. If annual leave benefits are paid, then the employee is not suffering a total loss of wages and is not eligible for workers' compensation benefits. Therefore, a state agency may not supplement workers' compensation wage loss benefits with annual leave upon the request of an employee. 44 A.G. Op. 33 (1992).

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 7 in (1) near end substituted "workers' compensation administration fund" for "workers' compensation administrative fund". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 214 at end of (1)(b) substituted "of 3% of paid losses, plus administrative fines and interest provided by this section" for "on each plan No. 1 employer, plan No. 2 insurer, and plan No. 3, the state fund. The assessments must be 3% of the following"; at beginning of (2) inserted "For the purposes of this section, paid losses include the following"; substituted language in (4) through (9) regarding assessments and premium surcharge for former (3) through (5) that read: "(3) An assessment of the plan No. 1 employer or plan No. 2 insurer may not be less than $500. If at any time during the fiscal year a plan No. 1 employer is granted permission to self-insure or a plan No. 2 insurer is authorized to insure employers under this chapter, that plan No. 1 employer or plan No. 2 insurer is subject to an initial assessment equal to the minimum assessment against plan No. 1 employers and plan No. 2 insurers.

(4) Payment of the assessment required by this section must be submitted by the employer or insurer under plan No. 1, plan No. 2, or plan No. 3 in:

(a) one installment made on or before July 1; or

(b) two equal installments made on or before July 1 and December 31 of each year. If an employer or insurer fails to pay the assessment required under this section, the department may impose a fine of $100 plus interest on the delinquent amount at the annual interest rate of 12%.

(5) (a) Beginning July 1, 2000, each plan No. 2 insurer providing workers' compensation insurance and plan No. 3, the state fund, shall collect from the insurer's policyholders an amount equal to the insurer's assessment through a surcharge based on premium. When collected, assessments may not constitute an element of loss for the purpose of establishing rates for workers' compensation insurance but, for the purpose of collection, must be treated as separate costs imposed upon insured employers.

(b) The total of this assessment must be stated as a separate cost on an insured employer's policy or on a separate document submitted to the insured employer and must be identified as "workers' compensation regulatory assessment surcharge". Each assessment surcharge must be shown as a percentage of the total workers' compensation policyholder premium.

(c) The portion of the plan No. 2 assessment identified as a premium surcharge for an individual plan No. 2 insured employer must be calculated as a percentage to be applied to premium. The percentage applied must be determined by the amount of the plan No. 2 assessment, as determined in subsection (1)(b), divided by the total net premium as calculated under 33-2-705 paid by all plan No. 2 insured employers during the preceding calendar year.

(d) The portion of the plan No. 3 assessment identified as a premium surcharge for an individual plan No. 3 insured employer must be calculated as a percentage to be applied to premium. The percentage applied must be determined by the amount of the plan No. 3 assessment, as determined in subsection (1)(b), divided by the total net premium as calculated under 33-2-705 paid by all plan No. 3 insured employers during the preceding fiscal year.

(e) On or before March 31, 2000, and each March 31 thereafter, the department, in consultation with the advisory organization designated pursuant to 33-16-1023, shall notify plan No. 2 insurers and plan No. 3, the state fund, of the insurer assessment identified as the premium surcharge percentage to be effective for policies written or renewed annually on and after July 1 of that year.

(f) The assessment provided for in subsection (1)(b), which will be identified as a premium surcharge, must be collected at the same time and in the same manner that the premium for the coverage is collected. This premium surcharge must be excluded from the definition of premiums for all purposes, including computation of insurance producers' commissions or premium taxes, except that an insurer may cancel a workers' compensation policy for nonpayment of the premium surcharge. Cancellation must be in accordance with the procedures applicable to the nonpayment of premium"; inserted (10) requiring deposit of funds in state treasury; inserted (13) authorizing department to assess and collect assessment surcharge from uninsured employers for deposit in the workers' compensation administration fund; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Severability: Section 25, Ch. 214, L. 2001, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Retroactive Applicability: Section 26, Ch. 214, L. 2001, provided: "(1) [This act] is effective July 1, 2001.

(2) [Sections 5(7)(c) and (8) and 13(3)][39-71-201(7)(c) and (8) and 39-71-915(3)] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to assessments and assessment premium surcharges calculated by the department of labor and industry before March 30, 2001."

1999 Amendment: Section 4, Ch. 377, in (1)(b) substituted "3%" for "2.6%"; in (2) substituted "March 1" for "March 31"; in (4) after "employer" inserted "or insurer"; inserted (5) requiring plan No. 2 insurers and state fund to collect premium surcharge; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

1999 Amendments Not Codified: Because of the temporary nature of the changes made by sec. 3, Ch. 377, L. 1999, the code commissioner has not codified the following amendments: (Temporary version terminating June 30, 1999) Section 3, Ch. 377, in (1)(b) in fifth sentence substituted "fund the costs of the department's administration of the Workers' Compensation and Occupational Disease Acts and the statutory occupational safety acts administered by the department" for "direct costs identified to the three plans and an equitable portion of the indirect costs based on the ratio of the preceding fiscal year's indirect costs distributed to the plans, using proper accounting and cost allocation procedures. Plan No. 3 must be assessed an amount sufficient to fund the direct costs and an equitable portion of the indirect costs of regulating plan No. 3" and inserted sixth sentence requiring assessment to be equitably apportioned between three plans; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 20, 1999, and terminates June 30, 1999.

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 377, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 26, Ch. 377, L. 1999, provided: "[Section 3] [39-71-201] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to occurrences after June 30, 1991."

1997 Amendment: (Temporary version) Chapter 385 in (1), in first sentence of introductory clause before "occupational", substituted "statutory" for "various" and after "department" deleted "and the boiler inspections the department of commerce" and at end of second sentence deleted "and must be used for the administrative expenses of the department and for the administrative expenses of the department of commerce for the purposes of 50-74-101"; in (1)(a), after "39-71-205", inserted "39-71-223" and after "39-71-304" inserted "39-71-307, 39-71-308, 39-71-315, 39-71-316, 39-71-401(6), 39-71-2204, 39-71-2205, and 39-71-2337"; deleted former (1)(b) that read: "all fees paid for inspection of boilers as required by law"; in (1)(b), at end of third sentence, increased minimum assessment from $200 to $500; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 24, 1997, and terminates June 30, 1999.

(Version effective July 1, 1999) In (1), in first sentence of introductory clause before "occupational", substituted "statutory" for "various" and after "department" deleted "and the boiler inspections the department of commerce" and at end of second sentence deleted "and must be used for the administrative expenses of the department and for the administrative expenses of the department of commerce for the purposes of 50-74-101"; in (1)(a), after "39-71-205", inserted "39-71-223" and after "39-71-304" inserted "39-71-307, 39-71-308, 39-71-315, 39-71-316, 39-71-401(6), 39-71-2204, 39-71-2205, and 39-71-2337"; deleted former (1)(b) that read: "(b) all fees paid for inspection of boilers as required by law"; in (1)(b), near beginning of second sentence after "assessments", substituted "must be 2.6% of the following benefits paid during the preceding calendar year for injuries covered by the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act without regard to the application of any deductible whether the employer or the insurer pays the losses:

(i) total compensation benefits paid; and

(ii) except for medical benefits in excess of $200,000 per occurrence that are exempt from assessment, total medical benefits paid for medical treatment rendered to an injured worker, including hospital treatment and prescription drugs" for "must be levied against the preceding calendar year's gross annual payroll of the plan No. 1 employers and the gross annual direct premiums collected in Montana on the policies of the plan No. 2 insurers, insuring employers covered under the chapter, during the preceding calendar year"; inserted (2) requiring filing of annual reports of paid losses; in (3), at end of first sentence, substituted "$500" for "$200" and in second sentence, after "subject to", inserted "an initial" and after "assessment" inserted "equal to the minimum assessment against plan No. 1 employers and plan No. 2 insurers"; substituted (4) regarding payment of assessments for former language that read: "The assessments must be sufficient to fund the direct costs identified to the three plans and an equitable portion of the indirect costs based on the ratio of the preceding fiscal year's indirect costs distributed to the plans, using proper accounting and cost allocation procedures. Plan No. 3 must be assessed an amount sufficient to fund the direct costs and an equitable portion of the indirect costs of regulating plan No. 3. Other sources of revenue, including unexpended funds from the preceding fiscal year, must be used to reduce the costs before levying the assessments"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Transfer and Credit of Excess Subsequent Injury Funds: Section 6, Ch. 284, L. 1997, provided: "On or before September 1, 1997, the department of labor and industry shall transfer $3.5 million of the funds retained in the fund to the fund in 39-71-201 and credit the amount to offset the insurer's assessment for the administration fund as follows:

(1) plan No. 1, $490,000;

(2) plan No. 2, $612,500; and

(3) plan No. 3, $2,397,500."

Required Report: Section 5, Ch. 385, L. 1997, provided: "For purposes of fees assessed on or after July 1, 1999, each plan No. 1 employer, plan No. 2 insurer, and plan No. 3, the state fund, shall file on March 31, 1999, in the form and containing the information required by the department of labor and industry a report of paid losses." (Terminates June 30, 1999—sec. 8, Ch. 385, L. 1997.)

Applicability: Section 7(2), Ch. 385, L. 1997, provided: "[Section 1] [amending temporary version of 39-71-201] applies to fees assessed on insurers on or before June 30, 1999."

Section 7(3), Ch. 385, L. 1997, provided: "[Section 2] [amending effective July 1, 1999, version of 39-71-201] is effective July 1, 1999, and applies to fees assessed on insurers on or after July 1, 1999."

Termination: Section 8, Ch. 385, L. 1997, provided that the temporary version of this section terminates June 30, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 514 in (1), in first sentence after "department", inserted "and the boiler inspections the department of commerce" and in second sentence, at end, inserted "and for the administrative expenses of the department of commerce for the purposes of 50-74-101"; and in (1)(b), after "boilers", deleted "and issuance of licenses to operating engineers". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 near middle of (1), after "administer", inserted "with the exception of the subsequent injury fund, as provided for in 39-71-907, and the uninsured employers' fund"; inserted fourth sentence of (1)(c) that read: "If at any time during the fiscal year a plan No. 1 employer is granted permission to self-insure or a plan No. 2 insurer is authorized to insure employers under this chapter, that plan No. 1 employer or plan No. 2 insurer is subject to assessment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1991 Amendment: In (1)(c), at end of second to last sentence after "costs", substituted "of regulating plan No. 3" for "as referred to above"; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: Throughout section changed "division" to "department"; in (1)(c) changed "state insurance fund" to "state fund"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

1987 Amendment: In (1)(a) substituted "penalties" for "fines".

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Conflict Between Workers' Compensation Statute and Administrative Rule — Fiscal Health Not Justification for Discrimination: Under 33-22-111, a workers' compensation claimant is entitled to freedom of choice in selecting a treating physician, but under ARM 24.29.1511, an injured worker cannot change physicians without the approval of the State Fund. The Workers' Compensation Court correctly found that pursuant to 33-1-102, the freedom of choice under 33-22-111 is not extended to workers' compensation cases. However, in reality, the exemption extends to cases involving coverage by the State Fund under Plan No. 1 or 3 but not to workers covered under Plan No. 2. The State Fund argued that the differentiation did not present an equal protection problem because the disparate treatment was rationally related to the legitimate governmental goal of controlling workers' compensation costs. The Supreme Court found that the policy of discriminating among injured workers based solely on which insurance plan supplied coverage was an equal protection violation because it was not rationally related to a legitimate government objective. Offering services to some while excluding others always results in lower costs, but cost control alone does not justify disparate treatment that violates an individual's right to equal protection of the law. Discrimination is not allowed merely for the sake of fiscal health. Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45, 54 St. Rep. 345 (1997), distinguishing Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506 (1993), and Chiropractors for Justice v. Alaska, 895 P2d 962 (Alaska 1995).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Deposing of Nonresident Claims Adjuster: A nonresident claims adjuster can be compelled by the Workers' Compensation Court to be deposed in Montana as a logical extension of an insurer's obligation to designate a resident adjuster under ARM 24.29.804. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Choice of Physician Proper Under Requirements of Administrative Rules: The defendant insurance company argued that the claimant had changed physicians without obtaining the permission of the insurer as required by an administrative rule. The Supreme Court held that the administrative rule allowed the claimant to select her initial physician but required the insurer's permission to subsequently change physicians. The Supreme Court stated that although the claimant saw several doctors before deciding on one to treat her, the initial treating physician was the physician who began a course of treatment rather than the first one to examine the claimant. Chapman v. Research Cottrell, 248 M 353, 811 P2d 1283, 48 St. Rep. 468, (1991).

Failure to Adopt Procedural Rules — Coverage Mandatory: Defendant established Bennett Well Service in 1975 and enrolled in the Workers' Compensation program, including an election to cover himself as a sole employer. In June 1979, his son began work for him. On June 26, the son fractured his leg. An injury report was filed July 2, 1979. On July 13, 1979, defendant elected coverage for his son and on July 31, 1979, the end of the quarter, sent in quarterly reports and premiums, including a premium for his son. This section gives the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) the authority to administer the Workers' Compensation Act. Section 39-71-2303 (renumbered 39-71-2336) orders the Division (now Department) to prescribe procedures by which employers may elect to be bound by compensation plan No. 3, including the effective time of the election. The Division (now Department) failed to adopt rules prescribing the proper procedure other than reporting and paying procedures, which defendant followed. Because it had not adopted rules governing the election procedure, the Division (now Department) could not deny coverage of plaintiff. Bennett v. Bennett, 196 M 22, 637 P2d 512, 38 St. Rep. 2091 (1981).

Rule Adopted: A rule adopted by the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry) under the authority of this section, requiring an injured worker to seek prior authorization to change physicians, was properly adopted. Garland v. The Anaconda Co., 177 M 240, 581 P2d 431 (1978).

Hearing Examiner Employed as Insurance Adjuster: The Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) was not prohibited from further consideration of a record taken at a hearing before a referee although such hearing examiner was not a regular employee of the Board (now Department) and was engaged in private enterprise as insurance adjuster whose principal business was the settlement and adjustment of workers' compensation claims. State ex rel. Fish v. Indus. Accident Bd., 139 M 246, 362 P2d 852 (1961).

Awarding Fees to Physician: This section does not give the Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) jurisdiction to consider or pass upon the petition of a physician for an award of fees for services rendered an injured worker where compensation had been paid in full and the insurer had paid to a hospital and another doctor who treated the claimant the full amount required. Liest v. USF&G Co., 100 M 152, 48 P2d 772 (1935).

Judicial Powers Excluded: While the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry), created as a purely administrative body, exercises many functions that are judicial in character, it is not vested with judicial power in the sense in which that expression is used in the constitution, wherein it means the power of a court to decide, pronounce a judgment, and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision. Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In (1), at beginning, deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The division or the workers' compensation judge shall not have power to rescind, alter, or amend any final settlement or award of compensation more than 4 years after the same has been approved by the division. Rescinding, altering, or amending a final settlement within the 4-year period shall be by agreement between the claimant and the insurer. If the claimant and the insurer cannot agree, the dispute shall be considered a dispute for which the workers' compensation judge has jurisdiction to make a determination. Except as provided in 39-71-2908, the division or the workers' compensation judge shall not have the power to rescind, alter, or amend any order approving a full and final compromise settlement of compensation"; inserted (3) allowing appeal of Division order to the Workers' Compensation Judge; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Mutual Mistake of Any Material Fact as Warranting Rescission of Workers' Compensation Settlement: South injured her back on the job and underwent surgery twice to correct the problems. She entered into a full and final compromise settlement agreement with her insurer. The agreement listed seven jobs that both parties felt were acceptable for South to do. One of the jobs was massage therapy. South began training as a massage therapist but began experiencing back pain again, forcing her to quit the training and to undergo back surgery a third time. South then petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court to rescind the settlement agreement on grounds of mutual mistake of fact. The court denied her petition, treating the current problem as a new and different injury. The Supreme Court clarified Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1 (1980), in holding that under fundamental contract principles for rescission, a mutual mistake regarding the nature or extent of a claimant's injury is not the only mutual mistake sufficient to set aside a final settlement agreement. Rather, if a party can show a mutual mistake of any material fact that impacts the contract to such an extent that the intended bargain of the parties is defeated, the contract may be rescinded. The operative question is whether a mutual mistake existed that justified rescission, without limitation to how or when the mistake was made. Even though the parties were not mistaken regarding the nature and extent of South's injury at the time that the contract was formed, both parties mistakenly believed that massage therapy was an appropriate job for South to pursue, and she relied on that fact to her detriment. It was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to fail to consider South's contention of mutual mistake regarding the propriety of the job approved for her to do; thus, she was entitled to rescission of the settlement agreement. South v. Transp. Ins. Co., 275 M 397, 913 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 196 (1996).

No Record or Evidence on Appeal of Failure Below to Set Aside Final Settlement: A petition to the Workers' Compensation Court requesting that a final settlement be set aside was decided by granting the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court had no record of facts and no evidence that would enable the Supreme Court to conclude whether the settlement should be set aside. The Supreme Court declined to set aside the settlement and to decide whether to grant claimant costs, attorney fees, and a statutory penalty. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Martin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 190, 911 P2d 848, 53 St. Rep. 128 (1996).

Workers' Compensation Court Jurisdiction of Petition to Set Aside Final Settlement: The Workers' Compensation Court had jurisdiction to consider a January 1995 petition to set aside a final settlement. That court decided that provisions in 39-71-2909 and this section, stating that the Workers' Compensation Court could not change a final settlement more than 4 years after the settlement, which provisions were deleted by 1987 amendments, were substantive rather than procedural in nature and acted as a statute of limitations, which could not be retroactively changed. The Supreme Court reversed the decision and barred the petition in this case. Martin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 275 M 190, 911 P2d 848, 53 St. Rep. 128 (1996).

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, under this section, authority to rescind awards extends only to the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry). The only reference to the court is in the context of limitations on its authority to review settlements or awards approved by the Department. This section serves a limited purpose and provides no authority for setting aside a judgment entered by the court. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

Authority of Workers' Compensation Court to Reopen Final Compromise Settlement Agreement Based on Mutual Mistake: Settlement agreements for workers' compensation benefits, like other agreements, are subject to the law of contracts. A Montana court that is not otherwise limited by statute, including the Workers' Compensation Court, has the authority to set those contracts aside based upon a mutual mistake regarding the nature and extent of a claimant's injuries even when express language in the settlement agreement purports to prohibit setting the agreement aside. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992), distinguishing Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64 (1985), and Bowen v. Anaconda Co., 220 M 185, 714 P2d 142 (1986).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Mutual Mistake in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Claimant sought to have his workers' compensation settlement reopened on grounds of mutual mistake. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the request after finding: (1) claimant was capable of understanding the terms of the settlement agreement; (2) although claimant may have experienced an increased level of pain, there was no evidence to indicate the parties were mutually mistaken about the condition of claimant's back at the time of settlement; (3) there was no evidence to link claimant's personality disorder to his back injury; and (4) the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. Whitcher v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 236 M 289, 769 P2d 1215, 46 St. Rep. 367 (1989).

Adequate Evidence of Impairment to Reopen Settlement Agreement: An impairment rating increase from 20% to 35%, together with lifting restrictions and testimony of a rehabilitation consultant, was sufficient evidence to enable the Workers' Compensation Court to reopen a settlement agreement within the 4-year time period authorized under a prior version of 39-71-2909. Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989).

Claims of Constructive Fraud — No Jurisdiction to Rescind Final Settlement: It was reversible error for the Workers' Compensation Court to rescind a final settlement more than 4 years after it was approved, despite claimant's assertion that the claims adjuster did not adequately inform him of the extent of his disability, a fact the Workers' Compensation Court considered fraudulent enough to prevent the entering of a valid final settlement agreement and running of the Statute of Limitations. Holcomb v. Low Temp Insulation, 224 M 425, 731 P2d 899, 43 St. Rep. 2302 (1986).

Full and Final Compromise Settlement — Effect of Annulment: Under 39-71-204 and 39-71-2909, the Workers' Compensation Court has no authority to rescind, alter, or amend a full and final settlement agreement except on a showing of fraud, mutual mistake of fact, or personal incapacity of claimant to make a binding contract. However, when the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry), in entering an order approving the compromise settlement as required by 39-71-741, perceived an inconsistency in the settlement agreement as originally drafted by the parties and in its approval order revised the agreement, the Division (now Department) exceeded its authority under 39-71-741 and such order became a nullity, even though subsequently approved by the Workers' Compensation Court. In this situation, the Workers' Compensation Court is not precluded from reconsidering the settlement agreement and approving it as originally drafted. Bowen v. The Anaconda Co., 220 M 185, 714 P2d 142, 43 St. Rep. 278 (1986).

Final Settlement — Rescission for Good Cause or Change in Disability: The claimant was injured in April 1981 and executed a final settlement in September 1981. In December 1982, he petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a rescission of the settlement agreement and reinstatement of benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court set aside the settlement on the basis of the doctrine of mutual mistake. The Supreme Court affirmed on different grounds, holding that a claimant has alternate theories available for rescission, i.e., for good cause under 39-71-204 and on the grounds that the disability has changed under 39-71-2909. The Supreme Court found that the findings of fact of the Workers' Compensation Court afforded a sufficient basis for rescission by the Workers' Compensation Judge under either theory. Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64, 42 St. Rep. 1810 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Settlement — Lack of Foresight of Future Symptoms Not Basis for Rescission: Claimant entered a final settlement agreement on September 8, 1981, and on December 27, 1982, petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for rescission of the agreement.

The District Court rescinded the agreement and awarded permanent total disability benefits on the ground of mistake. The Supreme Court reversed and stated that a mistake justifying rescission must be a mistake made in unconscious ignorance of a past or present fact and that because speculation as to later symptoms is a conscious ignorance of future fact, an error of foresight cannot justify a finding of rescission for mistake. The Supreme Court found claimant's reported symptoms were not credible evidence of past or present disability or a change in disability and distinguished Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), in which medical evidence became available later as to true extent of injury at time of settlement. Supreme Court also held that claimant did not suffer economic duress in freely accepting offer of settlement. Claimant must rely on statutory scheme of award modification despite fact that he entered into settlement only months before Supreme Court ruling making tender of value of an undisputed impairment rating mandatory. Claimant could not claim detrimental reliance on "good cause" clause in agreement when agreement was a standard form prepared by the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) and not the insurer. When there was no medical evidence in record that claimant's disability had changed, the Workers' Compensation Court was statutorily without power to reopen the settlement. Veterans' Administration (now Veterans Affairs) disability ratings are irrelevant under Montana workers' compensation laws. Hutchinson v. Pierce Packing Co., 41 St. Rep. 2298 (1984), opinion withdrawn and replaced by 219 M 18, 710 P2d 64, 42 St. Rep. 1810 (1985).

No Mutual Mistake of Fact — Insurance Compromise Settlement: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that claimant had testified that his back was in much the same condition in 1982 as it had been on the date of his insurance compromise settlement in 1979. Accordingly, the parties to the settlement were not laboring under a mutual mistake of fact as to the nature and extent of injuries when they entered into a full and final compromise. This case was distinguished from Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), in which it was held that the lack of knowledge that the industrial accident possibly aggravated preexisting cerebral palsy, leading to a worsening condition, was a mutual mistake of fact. The court reiterated in this instant case that 39-71-204 and 39-71-2908 (now repealed) preclude reopening of workers' compensation settlements. Sollie v. Travelers Indem. Co., 212 M 197, 686 P2d 920, 41 St. Rep. 1684 (1984).

Workers' Compensation — Disaffirmation of Settlement Agreement by Minor: A minor was injured while working and filed for workers' compensation benefits. He subsequently signed a settlement agreement after negotiating with a claims adjuster. The claimant's filing of a petition to reopen his claim resulted in a hearing and the conclusion that the case was closed. The claimant appealed, based on his minority status at the time of the settlement and his concomitant right to disaffirm contracts. The Supreme Court held that the close relationship and continuing awareness of the claimant's mother during the claims negotiations were of no avail to the defendants because only the minor claimant had signed the settlement. The defendant should have required the claimant's legal guardian to sign as well as the claimant. Accordingly, the final compromise settlement was set aside. Parrent v. Midway Toyota, 192 M 118, 626 P2d 848, 38 St. Rep. 559 (1981).

Finality of Workers' Compensation Decision — Grounds for Overturning: A full and final compromise settlement agreement between an injured worker and the Workers' Compensation State Fund was set aside because of mutual mistake of material fact by both parties. Kienas v. Peterson, 191 M 325, 624 P2d 1, 37 St. Rep. 1747 (1980), distinguished in Sollie v. Travelers Indem. Co., 212 M 197, 686 P2d 920, 41 St. Rep. 1684 (1984), and followed in Weldele v. Medley Dev., 227 M 257, 738 P2d 1281, 44 St. Rep. 1062 (1987). A petition for rehearing was filed. The Supreme Court reaffirmed the decision. The petitioner argued the Workers' Compensation Court had no power to alter or rescind the agreement 4 years after its execution. The Supreme Court pointed out that it, not the Workers' Compensation Court, set aside the agreement. It noted the scope of its appellate power and also the code provision on lack of consent through mutual mistake of material fact. The Supreme Court was not broadening the possibilities of reopening such settlements; it merely found that no contract existed initially. Kienas v. Peterson, 38 St. Rep. 320 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports or Pacific 2d Reporter), followed in Kimes v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 233 M 175, 759 P2d 986, 45 St. Rep. 1402 (1988).

Effect of Section: The effect of this section was noted in Flansburg v. Pack River Co., 172 M 163, 561 P2d 1329 (1977).

Final Order — Statute of Limitations: Where final award was made in industrial accident compensation case 14 years before claimant sought to reopen claim, 4-year Statute of Limitations barred reopening claim. Rassley v. Sec. Transport, 168 M 314, 542 P2d 1214 (1975).

Fraudulent Claim: Award of lump-sum settlement based on a petition forged by employer's claims manager did not determine injured employee's right to lump-sum settlement, and employee had no cause of action against the employer arising out of claims manager's subsequent forgery and conversion of the lump-sum check. Lewis v. The Anaconda Co., 160 M 478, 503 P2d 535 (1972).

Additional Evidence: Where a final decision to stop payments under workers' compensation had been made by the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry), testimony of claimant's personal physician as to his examination of her more than 6 years earlier was relevant and should have been reconsidered by the Board (now Department), "good cause" thus having been shown. Johnson v. Indus. Accident Bd., 157 M 221, 483 P2d 918 (1971).

Full and Final Compromise Settlements Grounds for Reopening: In the absence of a showing of fraud, a full and final compromise settlement of a workers' compensation claim cannot be reopened. State ex rel. Mont. Phosphate Prod. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 156 M 466, 481 P2d 684 (1971); Moffett v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 303, 301 P2d 340 (1956); Elich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 116 M 144, 154 P2d 793 (1944); Williams v. Indus. Accident Bd., 109 M 235, 97 P2d 1115 (1939).

Degree of Permanent Physical Impairment Unknown: Where the board found that a compensable impairment existed but the degree of permanent physical impairment was unknown, it was proper to award nominal disability indemnity under this section. Benoit v. Murphy Corp., 143 M 463, 391 P2d 350 (1964).

Findings on Remand: Where order of Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry), issued on December 26, 1956, stated explicitly that compensation was to be delayed until claimant made a showing of such loss to the Board (now Department), the Board (now Department) had power to make findings as to loss of earning ability when case was remanded by District Court on October 29, 1962, since no final disposition had taken place. Lind v. Lind, 142 M 211, 383 P2d 808 (1963).

Rights of Claimant Not Waived: A claimant does not surrender his right to seek modification under this section by merely signing a receipt containing language suggesting that the intention is to close the case, when there has been no discussion or hearing purporting to give the award any semblance of finality. Infelt v. Horen, 136 M 217, 346 P2d 556 (1959).

Position of Trust: The Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) occupies a position of trust in relation to injured workers and dependents and this trust extends to the general public. Such a relationship calls for a full and complete understanding of all the facts in any case and from such understanding of the facts and the applicable law the Division (now Department) is to exercise a very high degree of good faith, impartiality, and fairness in dealing with each application for settlement in such exercise of its sound discretion. Moffett v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 303, 301 P2d 340 (1956).

Unreasoned Allowance of Settlement: The Supreme Court declared that this case is a glaring example of unreasoned haste by the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) in granting a full and final compromise settlement of a worker's claim and there was a regrettable lack of diligence on the part of the Board (now Department) in protecting the interests of the claimant where it approved a compromise settlement approximately 9 months after claimant's injury in which he had been severely burned, and even though claimant needed further compensation, the law dictated that claimant's case could not be reopened. Moffett v. Indus. Accident Bd., 130 M 303, 301 P2d 340 (1956).

Additional Compensation for Continuing Disability: Where compensation had been awarded to an injured worker for temporary total and permanent partial disability for an amount less than the statutory maximum allowable, the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) had jurisdiction under this section to entertain a petition of claimant for additional compensation covering continuing disability. Paulich v. Republic Coal Co., 110 M 174, 102 P2d 4 (1940).

Continuing Jurisdiction — Final Settlement: Under this section an order of the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) made on application for additional compensation, allowing such compensation but declaring that it should be "in full and final settlement" was unauthorized and did not preclude the Board (now Department) on a later application for compensation from exercising its continuing jurisdiction. Meznarich v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 78, 53 P2d 82 (1935).

Final Settlement — When Claim Closed: A claim that is settled on a "final settlement" basis is closed after the period of time stated in this section, from the date the order is made, has expired. Meznarich v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 78, 53 P2d 82 (1935).

Denial of Claim — Failure to File Notice of Accident: Where the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) makes a final order, such as that because of the failure of the injured worker to file written notice of the accident resulting in his injury with his employer (insurer) as required by 39-71-603, his claim is denied, as distinguished from an order interlocutory in character over which it, under this section, has continuing jurisdiction, and the claimant fails to appeal therefrom, the matter becomes res judicata and may not thereafter be reopened. State ex rel. Roundup Coal Min. Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 94 M 386, 23 P2d 253 (1933).

Continuing Jurisdiction — Changed Condition of Injured Party: Under this section the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) has continuing jurisdiction over its orders and awards, and may amend and alter them to meet changed conditions of the injured party, even to the extent of entertaining a petition asking for a lump-sum settlement after decision by the District and Supreme Courts upholding the award of the Board. State ex rel. Mulholland v. District Court, 88 M 400, 293 P 291 (1930).

Case Notes

Premiums Payable on Reimbursements to Employees for Use of Personal Equipment on Job: Logging employer Rost found it less expensive to reimburse employees for using their own vehicles to travel to remote job sites and for furnishing their own chain saws than to supply transportation and equipment himself. The workers' compensation plan did not require an employer to report travel allowances made to reimburse employees for their expenses and required reporting of only 75% of the total remuneration for furnishing a chain saw. An audit revealed that Rost had insufficient documentation to justify vehicle rentals and that he had excluded excessive saw rental payments. Following conflicting decisions during the administrative process, the Workers' Compensation Court essentially affirmed the audit findings. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed on the issue of vehicle rentals, holding that the rental payments constituted a reasonable reimbursement for employment-related expenses, but affirmed on the issue of saw rentals because Rost had deducted amounts in excess of 25% from gross payroll for saw rentals. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Lee Rost Logging, 252 M 97, 827 P2d 5, 49 St. Rep. 102 (1992).

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Composite Section: This section was amended by Ch. 103 and Ch. 397, L. 1979, and a composite was prepared by the Code Commissioner, 1979. Chapter 397 was a Code Commissioner bill and was not intended to make substantive changes in the law. Consequently, a conflict of language between Ch. 103 and Ch. 641 has been resolved in favor of the language used in Ch. 103.

Case Notes

Adverse Stress Reaction and Occupational Disease Insufficient to Trigger Injury Preference: Lueck alleged that when a vacancy occurred in a position that he had previously held before leaving because of stress-related problems, the employer was required to extend the hiring preference to him under this section. However, Lueck's adverse stress reaction, which he characterized as an occupational disease, did not meet the statutory definition of injury; therefore, his preference claim failed. Lueck v. United Parcel Serv., 258 M 2, 851 P2d 1041, 50 St. Rep. 401 (1993).

Failure to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact Regarding Motive for Termination — Summary Judgment Proper: To prove retaliatory discharge under this section, an employee must show: (1) that the employee was discharged; and (2) that the employer's motive in discharging the employee was to retaliate for the employee having filed a claim under the Workers' Compensation Act. Mere assertions of a retaliatory motive are not enough; the employee must provide facts that support a reasonable inference that the motive was retaliation. Summary judgment is proper in the case of failure to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the motive for termination. Lueck v. United Parcel Serv., 258 M 2, 851 P2d 1041, 50 St. Rep. 401 (1993).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Part 4
Coverage, Liability, and Subrogation

Part Case Notes

Allocation of Settlement Funds Affirmed: Wildin was injured in a car accident during her employment, and her employer's insurer, CNA Insurance Company (CNA), paid over $35,000 to her in medical and disability benefits. Wildin then sued State Farm Fire and Casualty Company (State Farm), the insurer of the other driver, and contacted CNA to see if it would join the suit. No answer was received, so Wildin and State Farm proceeded to settle her suit for $15,000. CNA would not agree to the settlement. Wildin then filed a petition with the Department of Labor and Industry to have the settlement funds allocated. The examiner concluded that the Department had jurisdiction to allocate the funds and allocated one-third to CNA and two-thirds to Wildin, after deducting attorney fees. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Supreme Court affirmed. CNA argued that the Workers' Compensation Court ignored principles of equity and fairness in the disposition of the case. However, the Supreme Court cited Bay v. St., 212 M 258, 688 P2d 1 (1984), for the principle that it was its duty only to construe and apply the law as written and that there was no room for construction of the statutes when they are plain and unambiguous. Wildin v. CNA Insurance Co., 256 M 354, 846 P2d 1022, 50 St. Rep. 108 (1993).

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

Chapter 310 in (3)(b), in second sentence, provided for a $25 fee for an initial application and in third sentence, after "application", inserted "renewal"; in (3)(d), in first sentence, substituted "3 years" for "1 year" and in second sentence substituted "every 3 years" for "annually"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 386 in (2)(q)(iii), at end, inserted "either"; inserted (2)(q)(iii)(B) regarding an officer or manager who owns less than 20% of the number of shares that totals 20% or more of the total shares; in (2)(q)(iv), at end, substituted "meets the requirements of subsection (2)(q)(iii)(A) or (2)(q)(iii)(B)" for "owns 20% or more of the number of shares of stock in the corporation or who owns 20% or more of the limited liability company"; inserted (2)(r) regarding a ditch company officer or manager; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 491 in (2)(f) substituted "as a direct seller" for "of a direct seller"; in (2)(l) substituted "39-51-204(1)(e)" for 39-51-204(1)(l)"; inserted (2)(r) concerning service performed by minister of church; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Chapter 548 in (3)(b), in second sentence, substituted "There is a $25 fee" for "There is no fee" and in third sentence, after "subsequent application", inserted "renewal"; and in (3)(d), near beginning, increased length of exemption to 3 years from 1 year and in second sentence increased time period for independent contractor renewals to 3 years from annually. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Transition: Section 10, Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided: "Any surplus funds remaining in the underinsured employers' fund on [the effective date of this section] must be deposited in the uninsured employers' fund provided in 39-71-502 [now repealed]." Section 12(2), Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided that sec. 10 was effective on passage and approval. Approved March 28, 1997.

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 310, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Section 36, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Section 13, Ch. 548, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 491, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, House Bill No. 98 (Ch. 48, L. 1995), enacted by the 54th Legislature, excluded direct sellers from minimum wage, overtime, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation requirements; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature in House Bill No. 98 adopted the federal definition of direct seller to apply to relevant Montana statutes; and

WHEREAS, ARM 24.11.831 narrowed the scope of the federal definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, an original purpose of this House Bill No. 561 was to codify the narrower definition of direct seller; and

WHEREAS, this House Bill No. 561 is the appropriate place to repeal Rule 24.11.831, Administrative Rules of Montana."

The preamble attached to Ch. 548, L. 1997, is printed with the compiler's comments for 39-9-101.

Saving Clause: Section 37, Ch. 491, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 48 at end of (1)(f), after "direct seller", substituted "as defined in 26 U.S.C. 3508" for "engaged in the sale of consumer products, primarily in the customer's home"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective February 9, 1995.

Chapter 95 inserted (2)(p) concerning services performed by a petroleum land professional; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 9, 1995.

Chapter 112 inserted (2)(o) concerning employment of an employer's spouse; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 142 inserted (2)(n) exempting jockey licensed by Board of Horseracing from workers' compensation coverage; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 15, 1995.

Chapter 516 in (2)(d) inserted reference to working members of a member-managed limited liability company; in (2)(k), at beginning, substituted "employment of a" for "any"; in (2)(m) substituted "or an association, business, corporation, or other entity that is at least 51% owned by an enrolled tribal member or members, whose business is conducted" for "who operates"; inserted (2)(q) relating to an officer of a quasi-public or private corporation or a manager of a manager-managed limited liability company who qualifies under one or more provisions set forth in subsections (2)(q)(i) through (2)(q)(iv); in (3)(a), in first sentence, inserted reference to a working member of a member-managed limited liability company; in (3)(b) inserted second through fourth sentences requiring a $25 fee for a subsequent application, to be used to offset administrative costs of the program, and deleted former second sentence providing that the application may be denied only if the Department determines that the applicant is not an independent contractor; in (3)(d) substituted current provision that the election remains in effect for a year, but may be renewed every year for $25, for former provision that the election is in effect until the Department is notified by the independent contractor of a change in status; inserted (3)(e) providing a civil penalty of $1,000 for a false statement or misrepresentation as to exempt independent contractor status; in (4)(a) inserted two references to a manager-managed limited liability company, in first sentence, near beginning before "corporation", deleted "private", and in second sentence deleted provision for Department rules and approval as to an election, inserted reference to a quasi-public corporation, and substituted provision that the entity could elect coverage for otherwise exempt officers or managers for provision allowing an officer to elect not to be bound as an employee; in (4)(a)(i) and (4)(a)(ii) substituted "corporation or to the management organization of the manager-managed limited liability company" for reference to the employer and the Department; in (4)(b) substituted "employer's previous election" for "officer's previous election" and substituted "employer shall again serve notice to its insurer and to its board of directors or the management organization of the manager-managed limited liability company if the employer elects to be bound" for "as provided if the officer elects not to be bound"; in (5), near beginning, inserted reference to a partner in a partnership and a member in or manager of a limited liability company, substituted "exempting" for "excluding", after "does not entitle the officer" inserted "partner, member, or manager", substituted "to exemption from coverage" for "to elect not to be bound as an employee under this chapter", and deleted provision that the officer had to sign a notice of election and could be penalized for false swearing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Saving Clause: Section 25, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 inserted (2)(m) that read: "(m) a person who is employed by an enrolled tribal member who operates solely within the exterior boundaries of an Indian reservation"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 16 in (3)(a) removed brackets from the phrase "and who is not contracting" (rendered void by Ch. 573); and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 573 inserted (2)(l) providing that Workers' Compensation Act does not apply to cosmetologist's services and barber's services, as defined in 39-51-204(1)(l); and in (3)(a), after "contractor", deleted "[and who is not contracting] for cosmetologist's services or barber's services as defined in 39-51-204(1)(l)". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 573, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to all claims filed on or after [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1991]."

1989 Amendment: Chapter 33 in (2)(c) substituted "a dependent member of an employer's family for whom an exemption may be claimed by the employer under the federal Internal Revenue Code" for "members of an employer's family dwelling in the employer's household". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 33, L. 1989, provided: "WHEREAS, section 39-71-401(2)(a), MCA, excludes employment of members of an employer's family dwelling in the employer's household from application of the Workers' Compensation Act unless the employer elects coverage; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court determined in Cottrill v. State Compensation Insurance Fund, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987), that the Legislature failed to indicate a legitimate state interest or objective in excluding such employments from the Workers' Compensation Act and therefore voided the statutory family member exemption; and

WHEREAS, a person has both legal and moral duties to provide for the needs of members of his family who are dependent upon him for support; and

WHEREAS, the obligation of providing workers' compensation insurance for dependent family member employees in addition to other family support obligations creates an undue economic hardship on family employers and may discourage and inhibit such employment; and

WHEREAS, workers' compensation insurance may overlap coverage provided under other nonwork-related insurance that the family employer may wish to provide for dependent members of his family; and

WHEREAS, the distinction between performance of normal family responsibilities and "employment" for which workers' compensation coverage is required is in many instances difficult to determine within a family unit, and the uncertainty of what constitutes family employment may result in many employers being unintentionally uninsured, resulting in unknown liabilities for the state compensation insurance fund and the uninsured employer's fund.

THEREFORE, the Legislature of the State of Montana finds it is reasonable and necessary to exclude from the Workers' Compensation Act employment of dependent members of the employer's immediate family for whom an exemption may be claimed under the federal Internal Revenue Code."

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 148 inserted (2)(k) excluding employment of newspaper carrier and free-lance correspondent.

Chapter 290 divided former (3) into (3)(a) through (3)(c); and inserted (3)(d) providing that election approved by Division remains effective until the independent contractor notifies Division of a change in his status.

Chapter 314 inserted (3)(e) stating appeal procedure for denial of exemption.

Chapter 464 in (2)(b) deleted reference to subsection (3) of 39-71-116 and "except employment of a volunteer under 67-2-105"; in (2)(d) substituted "except as provided in subsection (3)" for "other than those who consider themselves or hold themselves out as independent contractors and who are not contracting for agricultural services to be performed on a farm or ranch, or for broker or salesman services performed under a license issued by the board of realty regulation, or for services as a direct seller engaged in the sale of consumer products to customers primarily in the home"; inserted (2)(e) and (2)(f) excluding employment of real estate broker and salesman and of a direct seller of consumer products; in (2)(h), at beginning, inserted "employment of"; in (3)(a), after "independent contractor", deleted "and who is not contracting for agricultural services to be performed on a farm or ranch, or for broker or salesman services performed under a license issued by the board of realty regulation, or for services as a direct seller engaged in the sale of consumer products to customers primarily in the home"; inserted (4) requiring a corporation to provide coverage for its officers and employees but allowing an officer to elect exemption; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 526 in (3)(a) inserted "[and who is not contracting] for cosmetologist's services or barber's services as defined in 39-51-204(1)(l)". In (3)(a) the Code Commissioner has reinserted the language "and who is not contracting" that was deleted by Ch. 464 in order to retain the meaning intended by the amendment in Ch. 526.

1985 Amendments: Chapter 94 at end of (2)(d) and in first sentence of (3), inserted "or for services as a direct seller engaged in the sale of consumer products to customers primarily in the home".

Chapter 100 inserted (2)(h) excluding employment of certain officials at school amateur athletic event.

Chapter 336 at end of (2)(b) and (2)(f) inserted "except employment of a volunteer under 67-2-105".

Applicability of School Athletic Official Exemption: Section 2, Ch. 100, L. 1985 (section 1 of which enacted this section's provision that this chapter does not apply to employment of school amateur athletic event officials not otherwise employed by a school district), provided: "This act applies to all claims arising from injuries sustained on or after October 1, 1985."

1983 Amendment: In (2)(d), inserted language following "partnership" providing exception for certain independent contractors; inserted (3) requiring coverage of employees of independent contractor who may seek exemption for himself upon application to and approval by Division; and inserted (4) requiring employer to post notice of provision of coverage and providing penalty for failure to post.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 277 (Ch. 470, L. 1983) provided: "Under the law in effect prior to the enactment of this act, independent contractors were exempt from coverage under the Workers' Compensation laws. Many times, the determination of whether a worker is an independent contractor is made after a worker, for whom no contributions have been made, is injured and files a claim. This act provides a method for a before-the-fact determination of the independent contractor status. The act is not intended to make independent contractors subject to the Workers' Compensation Act but requires that they apply for that status to be exempt.

This bill authorizes the Division of Workers' Compensation of the Department of Labor and Industry to adopt rules to implement this act. It is the intent of the Legislature that the Division will provide an application form and provide for a hearing if the applicant disagrees with the Division's initial determination. Any substantive rules adopted pursuant to this act must be consistent with the statutory definition of "independent contractor."

It is also the intent of the Legislature that the Division will provide employers with signs and determine an economical and convenient method of distribution and disposal of such signs through insurers when the employer is properly covered under one of the three compensation plans or when a policy is canceled in accordance with 39-71-2205, MCA, or through the Division directly when a policy is canceled in accordance with 39-71-2307 [renumbered 39-71-2339], MCA, when self-insurance status is revoked in accordance with 39-71-2105, MCA, when an employer is exempt from coverage under this chapter, or when an employer lacks coverage and has been ordered to cease operations in accordance with 39-71-507, MCA, and that the Division will maintain procedures to control the distribution and disposal of such signs to prevent their improper use and to accommodate the changing coverage employers may have from time to time."

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Issue of Department of Labor and Industry Jurisdiction Raised in Two Separate Hearings — Collateral Estoppel Applicable — Due Process Rights Not Implicated When Party Fails to Pursue Available Remedies: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Department of Labor and Industry should have allowed plaintiff to raise the argument that State Fund had improperly canceled plaintiff's policy for nonpayment of a premium as a defense to the claim by the Uninsured Employers' Fund for assessments and penalties. The court said that the issue was not barred by collateral estoppel because an order from a first hearing only determined whether the Department had subject matter jurisdiction over contract disputes between an insurance carrier and its policyholder (a determination that plaintiff did not appeal) and did not address the issue raised in a second hearing, which was whether the Department had jurisdiction to determine coverage in a proceeding seeking a penalty and indemnification. The court held that collateral estoppel did not apply because the issues in the two hearings were not identical. The court went on to hold that the Department did have jurisdiction, through its quasi-judicial power, to resolve the dispute regarding whether State Fund had rightfully canceled the policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. In the first case, a hearings officer determined that the Department did not have subject matter jurisdiction over the contractual dispute between plaintiff and State Fund, noting that proper adjudication would be in the District Court. The Department only has jurisdiction granted to it by statute, and the adjudication of insurance contracts does not fall within its jurisdiction. Plaintiff's failure to appeal the issue from the first hearing precluded it from arguing that the Department did have jurisdiction over the insurance contract dispute regarding a penalty and indemnification in the second hearing, so relitigation of the jurisdiction question in the second proceeding was barred by collateral estoppel. Further, it was error to give the Department jurisdiction to adjudicate the insurance contract dispute pursuant to its general quasi-judicial powers because an administrative agency may not assume jurisdiction without express delegation by the Legislature and there is no statutory delegation of authority to the Department to resolve contract disputes. Rather, regulation of insurance contracts is governed by the Insurance Commissioner and the relevant statutes relating to insurance disputes. The Department cannot and should not be adjudicating disputes between insurance companies and employers. The Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that plaintiff was denied due process when it was prevented from presenting evidence relating to the insurance contract between itself and State Fund was also erroneous. Plaintiff had the opportunity to appeal the initial Department order to the Workers' Compensation Court, but failed to do so. Plaintiff also had the opportunity to pursue its remedies against State Fund in District Court, but again failed to do so. There is no denial of due process when a party fails to pursue the remedies provided. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Uninsured Employers' Fund Not Required to Resolve Insurance Disputes — Burden of Proving That Employer Uninsured Properly Met: Plaintiff carried a workers' compensation policy with State Fund. Following nonpayment of a premium, State Fund canceled plaintiff's coverage effective February 1, 1996. Plaintiff issued a premium check, but did not mail it until after the cancellation date. State Fund received the check and cashed it, applying the amount to the unpaid portion of the policy. Plaintiff believed that because the check was cashed, coverage was continued. Two months later, one of plaintiff's employees was injured on the job and filed a claim with State Fund, which again informed plaintiff that coverage had been canceled and sent plaintiff an application to reenroll. Coverage became effective shortly thereafter. Upon a request for review, State Fund determined that it had complied with the contract terms and properly canceled the policy and refused to backdate the new policy. Because plaintiff was not covered under the original policy at the time of the accident, the claim was forwarded to the Employment Relations Division's Uninsured Employers' Fund (UEF). Following a determination that the employee was not covered at the time of the accident, UEF paid the employee's medical bills, assessed a penalty against plaintiff for the period of noncoverage, and presented plaintiff with a claim for indemnification for the medical bills. Plaintiff requested a contested case hearing before the Department of Labor and Industry, arguing that State Fund had improperly canceled the policy. The hearings officer dismissed the request on grounds that the Department lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the issue because plaintiff was seeking a remedy or the enforcement of a right founded in the insurance contract, thus giving the District Court jurisdiction. Plaintiff did not appeal the decision to the Workers' Compensation Court, but instead requested another contested case hearing with the Department to challenge UEF's determination that plaintiff was an uninsured employer and also contested the penalty and raised two other issues related to the propriety of State Fund's policy cancellation. The hearings officer again refused to consider plaintiff's contention that it was insured at the time of the injury, based on plaintiff's failure to appeal the prior jurisdictional decision. At the hearing, a UEF compliance specialist testified that national and state databases both showed that coverage had been canceled, and plaintiff did not present evidence of any other coverage, so the hearings officer concluded that UEF met its burden of proof that plaintiff was uninsured and held plaintiff liable for the penalty and medical benefits. On appeal, the Workers' Compensation Court reversed, holding that in order to meet its burden of proof, UEF needed to prove not only that the insurance was canceled but also that State Fund's cancellation of the policy was legally correct. The court found that the hearings officer had improperly shifted the burden of proof from UEF to plaintiff, resulting in a violation of plaintiff's due process rights to contest the allegation that it was uninsured. The Supreme Court reversed, agreeing instead with the hearings officer that UEF met its burden by establishing that plaintiff was not insured on the date of the injury. The responsibility of sorting through claims and defenses between an employer and its insurer does not fall on UEF, which is merely a safety net for injured workers of uninsured employers, but rather it is the responsibility of the employer to resolve disputes with the insurance carrier. To impose any more onerous requirement on UEF would frustrate the intent of UEF. Having confirmed that plaintiff was uninsured, UEF was statutorily required to pay the injured employee the same benefits that would have been received had plaintiff been insured and was not obligated to do more. Thus, the Workers' Compensation Court erred in holding that UEF failed to prove that plaintiff was an uninsured employer. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Entity Separate From Employer Precluded From Providing Workers' Compensation: Some of Dahl's employees were supplied by an employment service, which also agreed to provide workers' compensation insurance for the employees whom it supplied. Dahl argued that because the workers were temporary and because the employment service provided insurance, Dahl was not an uninsured employer. However, the clear and unambiguous language of this section requires an employer to elect to be bound by one of the three compensation plans, precluding a separate entity from providing workers' compensation insurance for an employer's employees. Thus, Dahl was required to provide the insurance in his own name. Dahl v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT

168, 295 M 173, 983 P2d 363, 56 St. Rep. 649 (1999). See also Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999).

Failure to Acknowledge Employee on Payroll — Employer Uninsured — Exclusive Remedy Unavailable: Defendant employer hired plaintiff employee Buerkley "under the table". Buerkley did not submit an employment application and was not required to comply with any existing hiring procedures; he did not use a time clock as did other employees; his paycheck was not drawn from the employer's payroll account, and no deductions were taken from his paycheck; he was not held out to others as an employee; and he was not reported as an employee on the payroll reports provided to the trust by which employees were provided coverage for work-related injuries. Buerkley was injured on the job, after which he submitted the proper application paperwork, backdated to a date prior to the injury; he began using the timeclock; and his paychecks began to reflect deductions for workers' compensation coverage. The trust adjusters found that Buerkley was entitled to compensation, but Buerkley rejected a settlement offer and sought damages in District Court, at which time the trust adjusters discovered the falsified employment records. Buerkley contended that an employer who has not properly complied with the requirements of this section is an uninsured employer pursuant to 39-71-501 and, therefore, subject to the civil remedies provided in 39-71-508 and 39-71-515. He also contended that the employer should not, as a matter of law and public policy, be allowed to rely on the exclusive remedy in 39-71-411. Defendant's argued, and the District Court agreed, that whether or not plaintiff's employment was reported to the trust by which they were self-insured, they elected coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act, and thus the Workers' Compensation Act was Buerkley's exclusive remedy. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act is to effectuate a compromise between industry and labor and cited 2A Larson, The Law of Workman's Compensation 65.40 (1998), for the premise that workers' compensation statutes are often described as a quid pro quo exchange of rights and remedies. However, the requisite quid pro quo is absent when an employer has deliberately avoided the cost of insuring an employee by failing to acknowledge the employee's existence in payroll records. In those cases, the employer should not be able to take refuge behind the exclusive remedy provision. Thus, for purposes of the remedies in Title 39, ch. 71, part 5, Buerkley's employer was uninsured at the time of the injury and the exclusive remedy provision did not apply. Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999), following Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506 (1993).

Immunity of Covered Employee for Work-Related Injury to Coemployee Regardless of Employer's Election Not to Cover Injured Coemployee: Malek was a compensated director and president of the corporation that employed Hankins. Hankins unintentionally injured Malek in the course of employment. Hankins was covered by the corporation's workers' compensation insurance, but an election was made by the corporation not to cover Malek. In a subsequent negligence action, Hankins was granted summary judgment based on the principle of exclusivity. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment because the Workers' Compensation Act provides immunity to a covered employee for work-related injuries to a coemployee regardless of the employer's election not to cover the injured coemployee under workers' compensation. Malek v. Hankins, 275 M 97, 911 P2d 1127, 53 St. Rep. 55 (1996). See also Kelly v. Mile Hi Single Ply, Inc., 890 P2d 1161 (Colo. 1995).

Operator of Bar — Employee Not Sole Proprietor: Loos was killed during the robbery of a bar that he was operating. The insurer argued that Loos was the owner of the bar and because he was a sole proprietor and not an employee, his widow was not entitled to workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that although Loos ran the bar, a sale of the bar had never been completed and that because the liquor license was still in Waldo's name, that constituted sufficient control by Waldo over Loos to make Loos an employee and not a sole proprietor. Loos v. Waldo, 257 M 266, 849 P2d 166, 50 St. Rep. 262 (1993).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Failure to Apply for Exemption — "Statutory Employee" Status Not Created: This section allows an independent contractor to elect to be bound by a compensation plan or to apply to the Division of Workers' Compensation for an exemption; however, nowhere in the statutes or Division rules is the exemption made mandatory in order for independent contractor status to exist. The fact that an independent contractor neither applies for nor receives an exemption does not imply independent contractor status or automatically create a "statutory employee" by operation of law. Doig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 248 M 59, 809 P2d 12, 48 St. Rep. 323 (1991).

Failure to Comply With Statute Not Negligence Per Se — Workers' Compensation Statutes as Social Insurance: Failure of an employer to carry insurance required by this section does not constitute negligence per se. To constitute negligence per se, a statutory violation must also be the proximate cause of the injuries sustained. Workers' compensation statutes were enacted as social insurance rather than to provide for damages in tort-connected liability cases. (Decision based on law prior to 1985 enactment of 39-71-515, which established prima facie liability of noninsured employers.) Hunnewell v. Syme, 229 M 525, 747 P2d 875, 44 St. Rep. 2189 (1987), citing Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977), and Mahlum v. Broeder, 147 M 386, 412 P2d 572 (1966.)

Self-Insured Employer Not Uninsured Employer Despite Subsequent Bankruptcy: Claimant suffered an industrial accident while working for a self-insured employer who accepted liability and paid temporary total benefits until going bankrupt, at which time benefits ceased. After benefits ceased, claimant petitioned for coverage from the uninsured employers' fund. Benefits were properly denied because at the time of injury and thereafter the employer was properly enrolled under plan No. 1 and paid benefits for approximately 2 years. Caldwell v. Great W. Sugar Co., 229 M 448, 746 P2d 627, 44 St. Rep. 2123 (1987).

Unconstitutionality of Workers' Compensation Exclusion of Coverage for Members of Employer's Family: Subsection (2)(c) of this section, excluding workers' compensation coverage of employment of members of an employer's family dwelling in the employer's household, is an unconstitutional statutory classification that violates the equal protection provisions of Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., by creating a distinction with no reasonable or readily identifiable state interest. Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987). (Decision based on law prior to 1989 amendment excluding coverage for a dependent family member for whom employer claims federal tax exemption.)

Fiancee's Expectancy — Gratuitous Employment Precluded: Cain had a contract with the Billings Gazette to deliver papers to outlying areas. He met claimant, and she moved in with him. They later became engaged. Cain furnished claimant with room, board, and the use of an automobile. Claimant began delivering papers for Cain without compensation although he normally paid others $30 a day for the same work. Claimant was injured in an auto accident while delivering papers. Claimant was awarded workers' compensation. Both Cain and the Gazette challenged the finding that claimant was Cain's employee and asserted that even if she was, she fell within the exemption from coverage of 39-71-401(2)(f). The Supreme Court found that though there was no express agreement for compensation, claimant worked virtually full-time for Cain. She expected to marry Cain and that her participation in the business would provide for her future security. The court found sufficient evidence in the record to establish a contract for hire. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Failure to Adopt Procedural Rules — Coverage Mandatory: Defendant established Bennett Well Service in 1975 and enrolled in the Workers' Compensation program, including an election to cover himself as a sole employer. In June 1979, his son began work for him. On June 26, the son fractured his leg. An injury report was filed July 2, 1979. On July 13, 1979, defendant elected coverage for his son and on July 31, 1979, the end of the quarter, sent in quarterly reports and premiums, including a premium for his son. Section 39-71-203 gives the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) the authority to administer the Workers' Compensation Act. Section 39-71-2303 (renumbered 39-71-2336) orders the Division (now Department) to prescribe procedures by which employers may elect to be bound by compensation plan No. 3, including the effective time of the election. The Division (now Department) failed to adopt rules prescribing the proper procedure other than reporting and paying procedures, which defendant followed. Because it had not adopted rules governing the election procedure, the Division (now Department) could not deny coverage of plaintiff. Bennett v. Bennett, 196 M 22, 637 P2d 512, 38 St. Rep. 2091 (1981).

Agricultural Employment: Custom combiner who hired out his services to farmers and harvested crops he did not raise or own was not engaged in agricultural employment and was not exempt from workers' compensation laws. State ex rel. Romero v. District Court, 162 M 358, 513 P2d 265 (1973).

Equal Protection: Exclusion of employers engaged in farming and stockraising from the requirements of this act by section 92-202, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), was a legitimate classification by the Legislature and not in conflict with the 14th amendment, United States Constitution. State ex rel. Hammond v. Hager, 160 M 391, 503 P2d 52 (1972), appeal dismissed 411 US 912, 36 L Ed 2d 303, 93 S Ct 1548 (1973).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Entity Separate From Employer Precluded From Providing Workers' Compensation: Some of Dahl's employees were supplied by an employment service, which also agreed to provide workers' compensation insurance for the employees whom it supplied. Dahl argued that because the workers were temporary and because the employment service provided insurance, Dahl was not an uninsured employer. However, the clear and unambiguous language of this section requires an employer to elect to be bound by one of the three compensation plans, precluding a separate entity from providing workers' compensation insurance for an employer's employees. Thus, Dahl was required to provide the insurance in his own name. Dahl v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 168, __M__, 983 P2d 363, 56 St. Rep. 649 (1999). See also Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999).

Failure to Acknowledge Employee on Payroll — Employer Uninsured — Exclusive Remedy Unavailable: Defendant employer hired plaintiff employee Buerkley "under the table". Buerkley did not submit an employment application and was not required to comply with any existing hiring procedures; he did not use a time clock as did other employees; his paycheck was not drawn from the employer's payroll account, and no deductions were taken from his paycheck; he was not held out to others as an employee; and he was not reported as an employee on the payroll reports provided to the trust by which employees were provided coverage for work-related injuries. Buerkley was injured on the job, after which he submitted the proper application paperwork, backdated to a date prior to the injury; he began using the timeclock; and his paychecks began to reflect deductions for workers' compensation coverage. The trust adjusters found that Buerkley was entitled to compensation, but Buerkley rejected a settlement offer and sought damages in District Court, at which time the trust adjusters discovered the falsified employment records. Buerkley contended that an employer who has not properly complied with the requirements of this section is an uninsured employer pursuant to 39-71-501 and, therefore, subject to the civil remedies provided in 39-71-508 and 39-71-515. He also contended that the employer should not, as a matter of law and public policy, be allowed to rely on the exclusive remedy in 39-71-411. Defendant's argued, and the District Court agreed, that whether or not plaintiff's employment was reported to the trust by which they were self-insured, they elected coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act, and thus the Workers' Compensation Act was Buerkley's exclusive remedy. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act is to effectuate a compromise between industry and labor and cited 2A Larson, The Law of Workman's Compensation 65.40 (1998), for the premise that workers' compensation statutes are often described as a quid pro quo exchange of rights and remedies. However, the requisite quid pro quo is absent when an employer has deliberately avoided the cost of insuring an employee by failing to acknowledge the employee's existence in payroll records. In those cases, the employer should not be able to take refuge behind the exclusive remedy provision. Thus, for purposes of the remedies in Title 39, ch. 71, part 5, Buerkley's employer was uninsured at the time of the injury and the exclusive remedy provision did not apply. Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999), following Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506 (1993).

Immunity of Covered Employee for Work-Related Injury to Coemployee Regardless of Employer's Election Not to Cover Injured Coemployee: Malek was a compensated director and president of the corporation that employed Hankins. Hankins unintentionally injured Malek in the course of employment. Hankins was covered by the corporation's workers' compensation insurance, but an election was made by the corporation not to cover Malek. In a subsequent negligence action, Hankins was granted summary judgment based on the principle of exclusivity. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment because the Workers' Compensation Act provides immunity to a covered employee for work-related injuries to a coemployee regardless of the employer's election not to cover the injured coemployee under workers' compensation. Malek v. Hankins, 275 M 97, 911 P2d 1127, 53 St. Rep. 55 (1996). See also Kelly v. Mile Hi Single Ply, Inc., 890 P2d 1161 (Colo. 1995).

Operator of Bar — Employee Not Sole Proprietor: Loos was killed during the robbery of a bar that he was operating. The insurer argued that Loos was the owner of the bar and because he was a sole proprietor and not an employee, his widow was not entitled to workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that although Loos ran the bar, a sale of the bar had never been completed and that because the liquor license was still in Waldo's name, that constituted sufficient control by Waldo over Loos to make Loos an employee and not a sole proprietor. Loos v. Waldo, 257 M 266, 849 P2d 166, 50 St. Rep. 262 (1993).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Failure to Apply for Exemption — "Statutory Employee" Status Not Created: This section allows an independent contractor to elect to be bound by a compensation plan or to apply to the Division of Workers' Compensation for an exemption; however, nowhere in the statutes or Division rules is the exemption made mandatory in order for independent contractor status to exist. The fact that an independent contractor neither applies for nor receives an exemption does not imply independent contractor status or automatically create a "statutory employee" by operation of law. Doig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 248 M 59, 809 P2d 12, 48 St. Rep. 323 (1991).

Failure to Comply With Statute Not Negligence Per Se — Workers' Compensation Statutes as Social Insurance: Failure of an employer to carry insurance required by this section does not constitute negligence per se. To constitute negligence per se, a statutory violation must also be the proximate cause of the injuries sustained. Workers' compensation statutes were enacted as social insurance rather than to provide for damages in tort-connected liability cases. (Decision based on law prior to 1985 enactment of 39-71-515, which established prima facie liability of noninsured employers.) Hunnewell v. Syme, 229 M 525, 747 P2d 875, 44 St. Rep. 2189 (1987), citing Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977), and Mahlum v. Broeder, 147 M 386, 412 P2d 572 (1966.)

Self-Insured Employer Not Uninsured Employer Despite Subsequent Bankruptcy: Claimant suffered an industrial accident while working for a self-insured employer who accepted liability and paid temporary total benefits until going bankrupt, at which time benefits ceased. After benefits ceased, claimant petitioned for coverage from the uninsured employers' fund. Benefits were properly denied because at the time of injury and thereafter the employer was properly enrolled under plan No. 1 and paid benefits for approximately 2 years. Caldwell v. Great W. Sugar Co., 229 M 448, 746 P2d 627, 44 St. Rep. 2123 (1987).

Unconstitutionality of Workers' Compensation Exclusion of Coverage for Members of Employer's Family: Subsection (2)(c) of this section, excluding workers' compensation coverage of employment of members of an employer's family dwelling in the employer's household, is an unconstitutional statutory classification that violates the equal protection provisions of Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., by creating a distinction with no reasonable or readily identifiable state interest. Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987). (Decision based on law prior to 1989 amendment excluding coverage for a dependent family member for whom employer claims federal tax exemption.)

Fiancee's Expectancy — Gratuitous Employment Precluded: Cain had a contract with the Billings Gazette to deliver papers to outlying areas. He met claimant, and she moved in with him. They later became engaged. Cain furnished claimant with room, board, and the use of an automobile. Claimant began delivering papers for Cain without compensation although he normally paid others $30 a day for the same work. Claimant was injured in an auto accident while delivering papers. Claimant was awarded workers' compensation. Both Cain and the Gazette challenged the finding that claimant was Cain's employee and asserted that even if she was, she fell within the exemption from coverage of 39-71-401(2)(f). The Supreme Court found that though there was no express agreement for compensation, claimant worked virtually full-time for Cain. She expected to marry Cain and that her participation in the business would provide for her future security. The court found sufficient evidence in the record to establish a contract for hire. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Failure to Adopt Procedural Rules — Coverage Mandatory: Defendant established Bennett Well Service in 1975 and enrolled in the Workers' Compensation program, including an election to cover himself as a sole employer. In June 1979, his son began work for him. On June 26, the son fractured his leg. An injury report was filed July 2, 1979. On July 13, 1979, defendant elected coverage for his son and on July 31, 1979, the end of the quarter, sent in quarterly reports and premiums, including a premium for his son. Section 39-71-203 gives the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) the authority to administer the Workers' Compensation Act. Section 39-71-2303 (renumbered 39-71-2336) orders the Division (now Department) to prescribe procedures by which employers may elect to be bound by compensation plan No. 3, including the effective time of the election. The Division (now Department) failed to adopt rules prescribing the proper procedure other than reporting and paying procedures, which defendant followed. Because it had not adopted rules governing the election procedure, the Division (now Department) could not deny coverage of plaintiff. Bennett v. Bennett, 196 M 22, 637 P2d 512, 38 St. Rep. 2091 (1981).

Agricultural Employment: Custom combiner who hired out his services to farmers and harvested crops he did not raise or own was not engaged in agricultural employment and was not exempt from workers' compensation laws. State ex rel. Romero v. District Court, 162 M 358, 513 P2d 265 (1973).

Equal Protection: Exclusion of employers engaged in farming and stockraising from the requirements of this act by section 92-202, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), was a legitimate classification by the Legislature and not in conflict with the 14th amendment, United States Constitution. State ex rel. Hammond v. Hager, 160 M 391, 503 P2d 52 (1972), appeal dismissed 411 US 912, 36 L Ed 2d 303, 93 S Ct 1548 (1973).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 458 at beginning of (2) inserted exception clause; substituted present (5) requiring construction industry employers that employ workers from another state to obtain coverage for former language that read: "The provisions of this section do not apply to the construction industry as defined in 39-71-116"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1993.

Saving Clause: Section 5, Ch. 458, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (5) excepting the construction industry from the provisions of this section. Amendment effective July 1, 1992.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Case Notes

Material Issue of Fact Concerning Exclusivity: Two workers injured in a Montana automobile accident while returning home from the job site in North Dakota sued their employer for damages caused by the negligence of their fellow employee who was driving the car. The employer paid workers' compensation assessments for the two workers in North Dakota but not in Montana, pursuant to a multistate agreement between Montana and North Dakota that coverage would be controlled by the site of the work. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the ground that the Montana workers' compensation fund provided the exclusive remedy. The appellate court held that summary judgment is precluded because there is a material issue of fact as to whether the fund provided the exclusive remedy. Webb v. Tom Brown, Inc., 807 F2d 783 (9th Cir. 1987).

Employee Temporarily Out of State: Claimant is eligible for benefits for an injury suffered in Idaho as an employee working temporarily out of the state. Montana has a sufficient interest in his case to justify application of this extraterritorial statute because claimant had been employed by the employer in this state for 4 years immediately before his injury, had established his residence in this state, and had only gone to work in Idaho after being "bumped" from his local position. When claimant previously had been "bumped" in similar fashion, he had worked outside the state only temporarily for a short period. At the time of his injury, he intended to return to this state as soon as he was able to regain his former position. McGaha v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 226 M 345, 735 P2d 521, 44 St. Rep. 708 (1987).

Reciprocity — Certificate of Coverage: The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court, based on a finding that a reciprocity agreement between states controlled the issues, was erroneous because no certificate was introduced to show that the Idaho Industrial Accident Board would exercise extraterritorial coverage while claimant was in Montana. Vigue v. Argonaut NW. Ins. Co., 175 M 425, 574 P2d 994 (1978).

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 29 in (3)(b)(i) in second sentence after "exceeding" substituted "0.18% of the total assessed value of taxable property, determined as provided in 15-8-111" for "3% of the taxable valuation"; in (3)(b)(iv) at beginning of second sentence after "Subject to the" substituted "total assessed value" for "3% of taxable valuation"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Chapter 574 in (3)(b)(i) in fourth sentence after "limitation" inserted "including 15-10-420". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Saving Clause: Section 33, Ch. 29, L. 2001, was a saving clause.

Applicability: Section 35, Ch. 29, L. 2001, provided: "(1) [This act] applies to the authorization and issuance of bonds occurring on or after July 1, 2001.

(2) Debt limits established under [this act] do not apply to bonds authorized before July 1, 2001, regardless of when the bonds are issued."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 560 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (5) exempting Montana university system from subsection (1); inserted (6) defining public corporation; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2000.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 560, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, throughout the 1990s, the Montana Legislature has directed the Montana University System to act more like a business; and

WHEREAS, during that time, the Legislature has continuously stressed the need to improve the quality of the University System; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has urged the University System to take all possible steps to control costs and to utilize savings to improve the system's quality for student customers and to guarantee access for qualified Montana students; and

WHEREAS, the Board of Regents has identified the injection of competition into the University System's workers' compensation coverage as a positive step in controlling costs and in continuing the Board of Regents' efforts to operate as a public business."

1989 Amendments: Chapter 613 in (1), in first sentence, inserted reference to "state fund" and in third sentence substituted "state fund" for "state compensation insurance fund"; in (2), in first sentence, substituted "state fund" for "state insurance fund"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

Chapter 665 in first sentence of (2), after "plan No. 1", deleted "employer", after "plan No. 2" deleted "insurer", and after "plan No. 3" deleted "state insurance fund"; at end of second sentence of (2) inserted "or issue bonds or notes pursuant to subsection (3)(b)"; at end of (3)(a) inserted "including debt service on any bonds and notes issued pursuant to subsection (3)(b)"; inserted (3)(b) relating to the sale of bonds and notes to establish a self-insurance workers' compensation fund; in (4) substituted reference to subsection (3)(a) for reference to subsection (3) and in middle inserted "or the joint board created by two or more public corporations as provided in subsection (3)(b)(iii)"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective May 12, 1989.

1987 Amendment: In (4) changed "subsection (2)" to "subsection (3)".

1981 Amendment: Substituted "state compensation insurance fund" for "accident or administration fund, as the case may be" in (1).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Exclusive as to Cities:

As to a private employer, such as a contractor and his truck driver, the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) is contractual in character and became binding on them at their election but not otherwise. As to the city and its employees, the Act is exclusive, compulsory, and obligatory. Sullivan v. Butte, 117 M 215, 157 P2d 479 (1945).

Compensation plan No. 3 is, as to a city, exclusive, compulsory, and obligatory upon both employer and employee. Butte v. Indus. Accident Bd., 52 M 75, 156 P 130 (1916).

National Forest Service Not a Public Corporation: The national forest service is not a public corporation within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) and is not covered by this section, providing that where a public corporation is the employer, or any contractor doing contract work for such corporation, the provisions of compensation plan No. 3 shall be exclusive and compulsory upon employer and employee. State ex rel. Loney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 87 M 191, 286 P 408 (1930).

Attorney General's Opinions

Joint Solid Waste Management District as Political Subdivision — No Authority to Issue Bonds for Workers' Compensation Reserve Fund: Because a joint solid waste management district has been vested with broad plenary powers that may be exercised independent of a city or county governing body, a joint district must be considered a political subdivision within the meaning of 2-9-211. However, a joint solid waste management district or similar political subdivision does not have specific or express authority under this section to participate in workers' compensation plan No. 1 or to issue bonds to establish a workers' compensation self-insurance fund. The bonding authority in 2-9-211 may not be used as a basis for issuance of bonds for the establishment of a reserve fund to guarantee payment of workers' compensation claims. 45 A.G. Op. 22 (1994).

39-71-405. Liability of employer who contracts work out.

Case Notes

Independent Contractor's Contractual Rather Than Statutory Duty to Comply With Workers' Compensation Act — Trigger of Prime Contractor's Obligation to Provide Coverage: McClure was injured while working for a tribal-owned business, Smith Enterprises, on the Flathead Indian Reservation. Smith Enterprises was working as an independent contractor for Blaze Construction. Blaze's contract with the BIA required Blaze to ensure that all operations performed under the contract were covered by workers' compensation. Smith Enterprises did not obtain coverage, and McClure argued that because his employer had not complied with the requirements of the Workers' Compensation Act, then under this section Blaze was liable for providing workers' compensation benefits. Blaze argued that because Smith Enterprises was a tribal-owned business performing work on a reservation, Smith Enterprises had no obligation to comply with the Act and that therefore its failure to do so did not trigger any duty on Blaze's part under the statute to provide benefits to McClure. The Supreme Court held that although Smith Enterprises did not have a statutory obligation to comply with the Act, it did have a contractual obligation to comply and Blaze's failure to ensure that Smith Enterprises complied with its contractual obligation did trigger Blaze's duty to provide workers' compensation benefits to McClure. McClure v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 272 M 94, 899 P2d 1093, 52 St. Rep. 685 (1995).

Survival of Motion for Judgment for Failure to State Claim — Set of Facts Under Which Recovery Possible: All that needs to be shown to survive a motion for judgment for failure to state a claim is that there is a set of facts under which a claimant could recover. Thus, in this case, reversal of the Workers' Compensation Court's dismissal of a claimant's petition for failure to state a claim was proper because under a set of facts yet to be adduced in the court, claimant might be able to recover under the petition. Glaude v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 271 M 136, 894 P2d 940, 52 St. Rep. 367 (1995).

General Contractor Not Required to Provide Benefits for Independent Subcontractor: A subcontractor was injured on the job and claimed workers' compensation benefits as an employee of the general contractor. The Supreme Court held that to determine employee status, a four-part test had to be applied to determine whether the general contractor had sufficient right of control to render the subcontractor an employee. The court applied the test of exercise of control, method of payment, furnishing of equipment, and right to fire. The court found that the subcontractor was not an employee. The court held that the law required only that the general contractor provide benefits for a nonindependent contractor. Walling v. Cigna Ins. Co., 247 M 441, 807 P2d 1335, 48 St. Rep. 250 (1991).

Cement Contractor Not Subcontractor — No Contractual Relationship: A cement contractor was hired to do excavation work for certain property owners and suggested that another contractor contact the owners concerning other work needed on the project. The second contractor was hired, and some of the cement contractor's work was done at the direction of the second contractor. An employee of the cement contractor was injured on the job, and when he learned that the cement contractor was without coverage, he sought compensation from the second contractor's insurer on the theory that the cement contractor was an uninsured subcontractor. The Supreme Court held that there was no contractual relationship between the two contractors. Both had been hired directly by the owners, and the second contractor had no authority to fire the cement contractor. Therefore, the second contractor's insurer had no duty towards the injured employee. Andrews v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 241 M 203, 786 P2d 18, 47 St. Rep. 203 (1990).

No Workers' Compensation Act Limitation on Contractor Liability to Compensate Employee of Uninsured Subcontractor: When a general contractor is compelled, pursuant to this section, to pay workers' compensation benefits to an employee of an uninsured subcontractor, the general contractor's liability is not limited by 39-71-411 to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the employee could maintain an action for negligence against the general contractor, despite the subcontractor's failure to provide workers' compensation coverage. Webb v. Mont. Masonry Constr. Co., 233 M 198, 761 P2d 343, 45 St. Rep. 1420 (1988).

Subsection (2) Interpretation — No Coverage for Indemnity by One Insurance Carrier Against Another: Subsection (2) of this section holds liable for benefits the employer of a nonindependent contractor engaged in work which is a part of or process in the business of the employer. The subsection essentially grants workers' compensation coverage to a nonindependent contractor employee in the same manner as if there were no intervening nonindependent contractor, but it was not intended to address situations in which the contractor is sufficiently independent to carry its own workers' compensation insurance. Further, the subsection does not cover a claim for indemnity by one insurance carrier against another. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Castle Mtn. Corp., 227 M 236, 739 P2d 461, 44 St. Rep. 1045 (1987), distinguishing Carlson v. Cain, 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Insurer Liable to Noncovered Subcontractor Entitled to Subrogation: Claimant was injured while delivering newspapers for her fiance, who had contracted with the Billings Gazette to deliver its newspaper. The Gazette's insurer, Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company, became liable under 39-71-405 when it was determined that the fiance failed to provide workers' compensation coverage for his employee, the claimant. When Hartford denied the compensation claim, claimant settled with a third party suspected of causing the automobile accident, for a sum much less than might have been expected from a trial and judgment. After settlement, Hartford claimed subrogation against the amount received in settlement. The Workers' Compensation Court awarded benefits to claimant, and the Supreme Court affirmed. On remand to the lower court to determine costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court held that Hartford was entitled to the proceeds of subrogation under 39-71-414. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that a claimant is bound by all provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act which provide for subrogation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Trucker's Status as Independent Contractor Affirmed — Ability to Terminate Contract: The plaintiff owner of a semitrailer truck who contracted with the defendant to haul the defendant's hay to another ranch was injured while unloading the hay. The plaintiff appealed the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court that he was an independent contractor and not entitled to workers' compensation. The Supreme Court applied the four-part test used in Sharp v. Hoerner Waldorf Corp., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298 (1978), to determine the issue of control over the plaintiff's trucking business and held, inter alia, that inasmuch as the plaintiff's employment could not be terminated in the middle of hauling a load of hay, the employer did not have complete control over the employee and the plaintiff's relationship with the defendant was that of an independent contractor. Solheim v. Tom Davis Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034, 41 St. Rep. 326 (1984), overruled on other grounds in Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Fiancee's Expectancy — Gratuitous Employment Precluded: Cain had a contract with the Billings Gazette to deliver papers to outlying areas. He met claimant, and she moved in with him. They later became engaged. Cain furnished claimant with room, board, and the use of an automobile. Claimant began delivering papers for Cain without compensation although he normally paid others $30 a day for the same work. Claimant was injured in an auto accident while delivering papers. Claimant was awarded workers' compensation. Both Cain and the Gazette challenged the finding that claimant was Cain's employee and asserted that even if she was, she fell within the exemption from coverage of 39-71-401(2)(f). The Supreme Court found that though there was no express agreement for compensation, claimant worked virtually full-time for Cain. She expected to marry Cain and that her participation in the business would provide for her future security. The court found sufficient evidence in the record to establish a contract for hire. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

Test for Independent Contractor or Employee:

In Montana the "control test", under which the right to control details of the individual's work is decisive, may be used to determine whether employee status exists and also to determine who the employer is. The four factors to be considered under the "control test" are: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control; (2) method of payment; (3) furnishing of equipment; and (4) right to fire. Employment status can be established on the strength of any one of the factors. Carlson v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 204 M 311, 664 P2d 913, 40 St. Rep. 865 (1983).

This section provides a two-part test, both parts of which must be met before a person can be found to be an independent contractor. The section also reiterates the basic test in Montana, namely the right of control over the person doing the work involved. The court will consider four factors when attempting to determine the issue of right of control. Those factors are: (1) direct evidence of right or exercise of control, (2) method of payment, (3) furnishing of equipment, and (4) right to fire. Independent contractorship is established usually only by a convincing accumulation of these and other tests, while employment can be proved on the strength of one of the four factors. Sharp v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298, 35 St. Rep. 1430 (1978).

Indemnification for Amount of Settlement Under Specific Contract Provisions: When, under the terms of a contract between two interstate trucking firms, the appellant agreed to provide workers' compensation coverage and to save the appellee's carrier harmless from any liability arising out of the relationship between the appellant and his employees, the appellee's carrier was entitled to be indemnified for an amount paid in settlement of a workers' compensation claim. Indus. Indem. Co. v. McIntosh, 185 M 158, 604 P2d 1233, 37 St. Rep. 14 (1980).

Independent Contractor Status Supported by Substantial Evidence: The trial court's finding that a general contractor did not lose his independent contractor status when the defendants began making direct payments to the contractor's employees and subcontractors in order to keep them from walking off the job was supported by substantial evidence. Kosmerl v. Barbour, 180 M 208, 589 P2d 1017, 36 St. Rep. 210 (1979).

Test for Independent Contractor When No Written Contract: When there is no written contract between the parties, the court will look to the facts alone to determine whether the employer has the right to control the work of the person whose status is in question. Sharp v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 178 M 419, 584 P2d 1298, 35 St. Rep. 1430 (1978).

Independent Contractor's Coverage: Bank which required independent contractor to provide workers' compensation coverage against the claims of employees of a subcontractor was immune from suit by employee of subcontractor to recover damages suffered, allegedly due to bank's negligence. State ex rel. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. District Court, 161 M 127, 505 P2d 408 (1973).

Common-Law Remedy: Where independent contractor defense is not applicable to general employer, general employer is substituted for immediate employer of claimant and is liable under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), so that claimant cannot maintain common-law personal injury action against general employer. Campbell v. Shell Oil Co., 329 F. Supp. 846 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Lumberman — Not an Employee: A lumberman who contracted with lumber company to cut, log, and mill certain timber was not an employee of the lumber company. Kimball v. Indus. Accident Bd., 138 M 445, 357 P2d 688 (1960).

Independent Contractor:

In an action to recover an assessment made on compensation paid to truck drivers whom employer claimed were the employees of an independent contractor, it was proper to give an instruction that the Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) was not a party to the contract with the independent contractor and was not bound to recognize the contracting parties but could assert its rights against "party employing the laborer". Jeffries Coal Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 131 M 511, 312 P2d 128 (1957).

An "independent contractor", excluded from the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) by this section, is one employed to perform work on condition that he is free from the control of the employer as respects the manner in which the details are to be executed. Nelson v. Stukey, 89 M 277, 300 P 287, 78 ALR 483 (1931).

1997 Amendment: (Version effective on occurrence of contingency) Chapter 276 deleted second sentence that read: "The workers' compensation old fund liability tax under 39-71-2503 is not a premium for the purpose of this section"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on the date that the budget director certifies that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to 39-71-2505 (now repealed).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Delayed Effective Date — Contingency: Section 34(3), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 8 [39-71-406], 19, 22, 24, and 31(2)] are effective on the date that the budget director certifies that the old fund liability tax is terminated pursuant to [section 28] [39-71-2505, now repealed]." On September 16, 1998, the budget director certified that the old fund liability tax terminates effective January 1, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 637 inserted second sentence providing that old fund liability tax is not a premium; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 13, 1993.

Severability: Section 10, Ch. 637, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 14, Ch. 637, L. 1993, provided: "The workers' compensation old fund liability tax imposed on sole proprietors, subchapter S. corporation shareholders, partners of partnerships, and members and managers of limited liability companies applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to tax years beginning after December 31, 1992."

1985 Amendment: At the end of the section, deleted "except that nothing in this section shall be construed as prohibiting contributions by employees to a hospital fund, as elsewhere in this chapter provided".

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (2)(a), after "39-71-119", inserted "if the injury is established by objective medical findings and"; inserted (6) requiring that entitlement be established by objective medical findings; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 619 in (4), in first sentence before "cause", substituted "major contributing" for "sole and exclusive" and after "cause of the" substituted "accident" for "injury or death"; inserted (6) defining major contributing cause; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (5) relating to a nonwork-related injury.

GENERAL

Necessity for Objective Medical Findings to Prove Compensable Injury: For injuries occurring after the 1995 amendments to this section and the decision in Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar., 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996), the claimant must show through objective medical findings that an injury occurred. Matthews v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 225, 296 M 76, 985 P2d 741, 56 St. Rep. 888 (1999).

Right to Temporary Total Disability After Prior Claim of Total Disability — Estoppel Issues: A worker's claim that a 1988 back injury forced him to quit working and left him with no earning capacity could not be considered a claim that he was permanently totally disabled because he was merely describing his physical condition following the injury and he is not a medical professional capable of anticipating the duration of his disability from that injury. He later developed carpal tunnel syndrome and testified that he was able to work in spite of ongoing carpal tunnel syndrome symptoms. Thus, he was not estopped from claiming and receiving benefits for temporary total disability arising from a later case of carpal tunnel syndrome. Caekaert v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 105, 885 P2d 495, 51 St. Rep. 1202 (1994), followed, with regard to applicability of the last injurious exposure rule, in Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 285 M 76, 945 P2d 433, 54 St. Rep. 1051 (1997).

Worsening of Carpal Tunnel Syndrome After Payment for Operations: State Fund paid for early 1988 carpal tunnel surgical procedures but refused to pay for further late 1992 and early 1993 surgeries, claiming that a second injury occurred in the worker's independent poultry business not covered by State Fund. The Workers' Compensation Court erred when it agreed with State Fund. State Fund offered no substantial evidence that maximum healing had been reached or that a second event or exposures caused the necessity for the second set of surgeries. In addition, the medical testimony showed that the claimant suffered worsening symptoms caused by the originally occurring carpal tunnel syndrome. Caekaert v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 105, 885 P2d 495, 51 St. Rep. 1202 (1994), followed, with regard to applicability of the last injurious exposure rule, in Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 285 M 76, 945 P2d 433, 54 St. Rep. 1051 (1997). See also Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997), and Burglund v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 286 M 134, 950 P2d 1371, 54 St. Rep. 1339 (1997).

Temporary Abandonment of Course of Employment — Substantial Deviation From Employer's Business: The District Court erred in determining that claimant was injured during the course and scope of his employment when claimant had stopped to visit his family during a 5-day trip to haul a load of lumber and was injured in a car crash after 6 hours of drinking with his brother. The continuity of claimant's employment was severed by the 6-hour abandonment of the course of employment and remained severed until claimant returned to the point of deviation from the path of duty. Dale v. Trade Street, Inc., 258 M 349, 854 P2d 828, 50 St. Rep. 359 (1993).

INJURY IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT

Coffee Break — Employee Injuries Within Scope of Employment: Blue Cross Blue Shield (BCBS) provides its employees with a 15-minute break both morning and afternoon and allows employees to leave the building for walks or to shop during these breaks. An employee, who sustained injuries when struck by an automobile while walking across a street to purchase a coworker's gift during her afternoon break, filed for workers' compensation benefits, claiming that her injuries occurred during employment. In denying benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the injuries suffered by the employee while traveling away from her employer did not arise out of and in the course of employment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that because the employee usually walked during breaks that were provided and paid for by BCBS and would have been on a normal break if not injured, the employee's activity during the break did not constitute a substantial personal deviation from employment. Carrillo v. Liberty NW. Ins., 278 M 1, 922 P2d 1189, 53 St. Rep. 829 (1996).

Animosity Underlying Employer's Policies — Injury Reasonably Connected With Employment: Pinyerd was assaulted by another employee in the sales yard of a car dealership. Relying on Penny v. Anaconda Co., 194 M 409, 632 P2d 1114 (1981), the Workers' Compensation Court found that the assault resulted from personal animosity unrelated to employment and that Pinyerd's injury was not compensable. The Supreme Court held that the injury occurred in the course of employment, having occurred on the employer's premises during work hours, when both employees were supposed to be performing work duties. The fact that employees sometimes quarrel and fight while at work does not make a resulting injury one that arises out of employment. There must be some reasonable connection between the injury suffered and the employment or the conditions under which it is pursued. In determining whether the injury arose out of employment, the court found that the intensely competitive atmosphere of the workplace, pitting employees against each other for sales quotas and commissions without any framework within which to compete, created daily friction among the sales staff, including resentment of Pinyerd's success in sales, that resulted in a substantial cause for animosity and the subsequent assault. The reasonable connection between injury and employment having been established, Pinyerd's injury was held to be compensable. Pinyerd v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 271 M 115, 894 P2d 932, 52 St. Rep. 332 (1995).

Determination of Work-Related Injury — Controlling Factors: Controlling factors relied on to determine a work-related injury include whether: (1) the activity was undertaken at the employer's request; (2) the employer, either directly or indirectly, compelled the employee's attendance at the activity; (3) the employer controlled or participated in the activity; and (4) both employer and employee mutually benefited from the activity. The presence or absence of each factor may or may not be determinative, and the significance of each factor must be considered in the totality of all attendant circumstances. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994), affirming Courser v. Darby School District, 214 M 13, 692 P2d 417 (1984), and Dale v. Trade Street, Inc., 258 M 349, 854 P2d 828 (1993).

Inconsistent Testimony Regarding Injury — Burden of Proof Not Met: The Workers' Compensation Court correctly held that Rose failed to meet the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence that he was entitled to benefits under this section. That holding was based on inconsistencies in Rose's testimony regarding: (1) a preexisting medical condition; (2) fabrications about how a previous injury occurred; (3) his denial on hospital forms that the present problem was work-related; and (4) the fact that the employer was not given notice of any disability or injury until after Rose was laid off and the possible sale of his business fell through. Rose v. Burdick's Locksmith, 265 M 178, 875 P2d 337, 51 St. Rep. 447 (1994).

Workers' Compensation Not Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Harassment on the Job: Sexual harassment on the job is an intentional act not arising from an accident, and the Workers' Compensation Act is not an exclusive remedy for a claim for damages for emotional pain and suffering. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

INJURY NOT IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT

Substantial Credible Evidence of Maximum Healing Prior to Nonwork-Related Injury — Claim Denied: Paterson sought temporary total disability benefits, claiming that a nonwork-related injury had exacerbated a prior work-related injury and was thus compensable. To determine whether maximum healing of the work-related injury had occurred, the insurer presented a hypothetical scenario to Paterson's physician, consisting of three components that the insurer intended to establish through its witnesses in subsequent testimony. Based on the hypothetical, the doctor agreed that Paterson did reach maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson then paraphrased his version of events based on his witnesses' testimony, and the doctor opined that Paterson had not reached maximum healing. The Workers' Compensation Court found more credible the evidence presented in proving the hypothetical, including findings regarding Paterson's work history and back symptomology, his lack of fear of losing current employment or not obtaining future employment, and the affordability and availability of medical care. The court did not err in holding that Paterson had reached maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson v. Mont. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

GOING AND COMING RULE

Police Dispatcher's Slip and Fall on Public Sidewalk Outside Police Station While on Way to Work: On April 2, a police department dispatcher slipped and fell on the public sidewalk in front of the police station while on her way to work. She was on the sidewalk that paralleled the street and not on the sidewalk that ran from the sidewalk paralleling the street to the door of the police station. At the time of the fall, her shift had not begun, she was not being paid, and she was not performing work-related duties. She clearly did not meet any of this section's exceptions to the general rule that injuries during travel are not compensable. She had not yet reached her place of employment. Although the city maintained the public sidewalk on which she fell, she was not on a sidewalk used only by her employer's employees and persons conducting city business. The general public used the sidewalk, and she was subject to an ordinary hazard common to all pedestrians, not just persons working at and conducting affairs with the police department. Heath v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 1998 MT 111, 288 M 463, 959 P2d 480, 55 St. Rep. 437 (1998).

Personal Errand Coverage Rejected: Strickland was seriously injured while returning to work from an errand when the car that she was driving was struck by another. The Supreme Court held that although there was conflicting evidence as to whether the errand was personal or for Strickland's employer, there need be only substantial evidence to support the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court. The Supreme Court also held that coverage for injuries received while on a personal errand is prohibited by this section of law because none of the conditions for coverage set forth in this section were satisfied by the facts of the case. Strickland v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 273 M 254, 901 P2d 1391, 52 St. Rep. 962 (1995).

Temporary Abandonment of Course of Employment — Substantial Deviation From Employer's Business: The District Court erred in determining that claimant was injured during the course and scope of his employment when claimant had stopped to visit his family during a 5-day trip to haul a load of lumber and was injured in a car crash after 6 hours of drinking with his brother. The continuity of claimant's employment was severed by the 6-hour abandonment of the course of employment and remained severed until claimant returned to the point of deviation from the path of duty. Dale v. Trade Street, Inc., 258 M 349, 854 P2d 828, 50 St. Rep. 359 (1993).

GENERAL

State Fund Entitled to Indemnification From Previous Insurer — No Showing of Maximum Healing and Later Injury by Previous Insurer: Chaney claimed that he was injured in 1983 when he slipped and fell at his employing sawmill, which was then insured by USF&G. Chaney also consulted several physicians between 1989 and 1992 concerning numbness in his hands. In 1992, Chaney had surgery to correct carpal tunnel syndrome. State Fund paid benefits while reserving its rights against Chaney and USF&G, but the Workers' Compensation Court held that State Fund was not entitled to indemnification by USF&G. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that USF&G had the burden of proving that Chaney suffered an injury during subsequent employment after he had reached maximum healing but that it failed to provide the proof. Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996).

Claimant Need Not Rely on Medical Testimony to Prove That It Was "More Probable Than Not" That Injury Occurred: The lower court denied Plainbull's claim on the basis that there was conflicting medical testimony pertaining to when Plainbull had injured his eye and that therefore he had not met his burden of proving medically that it was "more probable than not" that an injury had occurred to his eye. The Supreme Court held that the statute does not require medical proof of probability and that Plainbull had introduced other evidence that met his burden of showing that it was more probable than not that he had suffered an injury. Plainbull v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 264 M 120, 870 P2d 76, 51 St. Rep. 181 (1994), followed in Prillaman v. Community Medical Center, 264 M 134, 870 P2d 82, 51 St. Rep. 189 (1994), and distinguished in Matthews v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 225, 296 M 76, 985 P2d 741, 56 St. Rep. 888 (1999).

Stroke — Claim Denied: Claimant suffered a stroke while on the job. The Workers' Compensation Court properly denied his claim for benefits and properly gave greater weight to testimony of the doctors who treated claimant for his stroke and managed his care afterward as opposed to testimony of doctors who saw claimant 4 to 6 years after the stroke on referral by claimant's attorney. Pepion v. Blackfeet Tribal Indus., 257 M 485, 850 P2d 299, 50 St. Rep. 374 (1993).

Claimant Liable for Restitution for Benefits Paid Under Order Reversed on Appeal: Reil was granted about $13,750 in benefits by the Workers' Compensation Court, of which $3,000 was retained by Reil's counsel for costs and fees. On appeal, the Supreme Court in Reil v. Billings Processors, Inc., 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617 (1987), reversed the award after finding that Reil failed to provide his employer with timely notice of his injury. In a subsequent declaratory action, the Workers' Compensation Court ruled that restitution was proper, denied Reil's joinder of counsel as a third-party defendant, and ordered Reil to reimburse State Fund for all compensation benefits and medical expenses received. Although there is nothing in the Workers' Compensation Act that specifically refers to restitution, neither do the exclusivity provisions of the Act preclude restitution. Therefore, Reil was properly ordered to reimburse State Fund for compensation and benefits paid pursuant to the lower court judgment that was subsequently reversed on appeal. Reil v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 274, 837 P2d 1334, 49 St. Rep. 734 (1992).

Failure to Prove Causal Connection Between Injury and Inability to Work — Relief From Liability for Total Disability: Claimant failed to show that a 1987 injury caused the condition that resulted in his total loss of wages. Because the findings and conclusions of the Workers' Compensation Court were supported by substantial credible evidence and because that court's decisions regarding claimant's injuries were specific and consistent, the order denying temporary total benefits was affirmed and the city that employed claimant was relieved of liability for claimant's total disability. Norman v. Whitefish, 248 M 490, 812 P2d 1259, 48 St. Rep. 525 (1991).

Maximum Healing Not Reached Prior to Subsequent Accident: The Supreme Court held that the defendant insurance company was liable to the claimant for permanent partial disability payments because there was substantial evidence to support a finding that there had not been maximum healing of the claimant's condition before he found a new job and was injured a second time. O'Brien v. Guar. Fund Serv., 241 M 267, 786 P2d 1169, 47 St. Rep. 251 (1990).

First Insurer Entitled to Indemnification for Subsequent Injuries When First Injury Subject to "Maximum Healing": A private insurance company settled with the claimant on his workers' compensation claim and then sought indemnification from the State Fund, arguing that the claimant's first injury had reached the point of maximum healing and any additional benefits were due to a second injury that occurred after the State Fund had become the claimant's insurer. The Supreme Court ruled that if any portion of the funds paid by the insurance company were in reality the State Fund's responsibility, then the insurance company could seek indemnification and it had not waived its right to do so by entering into a compromise with the claimant. EBI/Orion Group v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 240 M 99, 782 P2d 1276, 46 St. Rep. 1973 (1989), followed in Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996).

Aneurysm: Employee suffered a ruptured congenital brain aneurysm while performing his work duties at the family-owned business during a period of unusually stressful working conditions. Medical and other evidence supported the conclusion that his death was the result of a compensable injury. Winchell v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 299, 766 P2d 1313, 46 St. Rep. 1 (1989).

Compensable Subsequent Injury — Benefits Receivable: When medical testimony showed a causal connection between an original injury and surgery performed 3 years later due to a subsequent injury, claimant was entitled to receive benefits payable because of medical treatment necessitated by the original injury, including any medical benefits reserved. Rightnour v. Kare-Mor, Inc., 225 M 187, 732 P2d 829, 44 St. Rep. 141 (1987), order and judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court after final settlement was reopened affirmed in Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989), and followed in Guild v. Rockwood Ins. Co., 229 M 466, 747 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 2139 (1987). (Decisions based on law prior to 1989 amendment related to nonwork-related injury.)

Decedent's Blood Pressure and Arteriosclerosis Aggravated by Stress: Decedent, a refuse hauler, had a temporary job helping the "lead man". On March 7, he was told he was to be his route's lead man on March 9. On March 9, he was under emotional stress as he wished to do well and perhaps receive a permanent position. He worked especially hard and was ahead of schedule when he died of heart failure while lifting a heavy object. The helper usually did most of the lifting. Decedent had the most difficult and confusing route in the city of Great Falls. He had high blood pressure and narrowing of the arteries at the time he was hired by the city. One doctor testified that his physical and emotional stress may have played a very direct role in his sudden death by aggravating his preexisting conditions, and the other two testifying doctors stated this was at least medically possible. The Workers' Compensation Court properly found this to have occurred and properly found a compensable injury. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Employment at Two Other Places Following Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in determining that the claimant's disability was proximately caused by an industrial accident while she was employed by the appellant's insured even though the claimant was employed after the injury by two other employers before filing a claim against the insured. There was substantial credible evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's decision. Tenderholt v. Travel Lodge Int'l, 218 M 523, 709 P2d 1011, 42 St. Rep. 1792 (1985).

Medically Possible Aggravation of Preexisting Condition Sufficient to Grant Compensation: Proof that it is medically possible that an industrial accident or injury aggravated a preexisting condition may, together with other evidence, establish a compensable disability. Bykonen v. Mont. Power Co., 217 M 169, 703 P2d 856, 42 St. Rep. 1112 (1985), following Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981), and clarified, in that medical possibility evidence in and of itself does not necessarily extinguish claimant's burden to prove the case by a preponderance of the evidence, in Laber v. Skaggs Alpha Beta, 247 M 172, 805 P2d 1375, 48 St. Rep. 150 (1991).

Liability for Failure to Notify of Claim Denial Subject to Existence of Employer/Employee Relationship: The plaintiff owner of a semitrailer truck who was injured while unloading the defendant's hay brought an action in the Workers' Compensation Court for payment for his injuries. On appeal of that court's judgment, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's argument that the insurer was liable for benefits because of its failure to deny benefits within 30 days ignored the fact that there was no employer/employee relationship between the parties. The 20% penalty provided in 39-71-2907 for paying unreasonably delayed claims applies to delays in denial longer than the 30 days specified in 39-71-606 and provides sufficient protection for persons in the position of the plaintiff. That section is therefore inapplicable in the absence of the requisite employee relationship. Solheim v. Tom Davis Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034, 41 St. Rep. 326 (1984), overruled in Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Election by Claimant Between Occupational Disease Act and Workers' Compensation Act Permissible: The fact that a person may have a compensable disease under the Occupational Disease Act does not preclude eligibility under the Workers' Compensation Act. Thus a claimant who meets the requirements of both acts may choose his remedy. The phrase "exclusive remedy" in 39-72-305 means that an employee does not have a common-law action against his employer. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Preexisting Condition — Caused by Injury or Disease: For the purposes of determining whether a preexisting condition was so aggravated or accelerated by a particular employment that the employee is eligible for workers' compensation benefits, there is no distinction between a preexisting condition caused by an injury and one caused by disease. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Medical Evidence Indicating Phlebitis Caused by Requirements of Claimant's Janitress/Bartender Duties: The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court's award to claimant despite employer's assertion that claimant's thrombosis was caused by factors other than claimant's employment as a janitress/bartender. The reviewing court reasoned that the medical evidence at trial supported claimant's theory that her phlebitis was caused by the standing required by her employment rather than by her outside activities of sitting and sewing, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court when there is substantial evidence to support its findings of fact. Wise v. Perkins, 202 M 157, 656 P2d 816, 40 St. Rep. 1 (1983).

Aggravation of Preexisting Injury — Burden of Proof of Insurers: Plaintiff injured his back while working for one company in 1977 and again while working for another company in 1979. There was a question of whether claimant had reached a medically stable condition at the time of the second injury. On remand, the Supreme Court held that the burden of proof is properly placed on the insurance company which is at risk at the time of the accident in which a compensable injury is claimed. If it is later determined that the previous insurer should pay the benefits, the later insurer has a right to seek indemnity for benefits already paid. Belton v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 202 M 384, 658 P2d 405, 40 St. Rep. 158 (1983), followed in Intermtn. Ins. Co. v. Church Mut. Ins. Co., 228 M 32, 740 P2d 682, 44 St. Rep. 1317 (1987), Stangler v. Home Ins. Co., 229 M 251, 746 P2d 99, 44 St. Rep. 1944 (1987), Richter v. Indus. Indem. Co., 241 M 518, 788 P2d 308, 47 St. Rep. 467 (1990), Allen v. Employers Commercial Union, 246 M 105, 803 P2d 644, 47 St. Rep. 2280 (1990), and Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996). See also Eastman v. Transport Ins. Co., 255 M 262, 843 P2d 300, 49 St. Rep. 936 (1992).

Medically Stable Condition — New Liability for Previous Injury: Plaintiff injured his back while working for one company in 1977 and again while working for a different company in 1979. The trial court, relying on the "completely healed" language in Little v. Structural Sys., 188 M 482, 614 P2d 516, 37 St. Rep. 1187 (1980), found that the 1977 injury had been aggravated by the 1979 injury and held the insurer at the time of the 1977 injury liable for disability benefits. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled the "completely healed" holding of Little and held that new liability arises on a previous injury when it has reached a point of "maximum healing" or a "medically stable condition", terms which are medically determinable. A person may never be "completely healed" from an injury. The case was remanded for a new evidentiary hearing. Belton v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 202 M 384, 658 P2d 405, 40 St. Rep. 158 (1983), followed in Intermtn. Ins. Co. v. Church Mut. Ins. Co., 228 M 32, 740 P2d 682, 44 St. Rep. 1317 (1987), Stangler v. Home Ins. Co., 229 M 251, 746 P2d 99, 44 St. Rep. 1944 (1987), Lee v. Group W Cable TCI of Mont., 245 M 292, 800 P2d 702, 47 St. Rep. 2116 (1990), and in Kelly v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 200, 835 P2d 774, 49 St. Rep. 699 (1992). See also Ballard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 447, 767 P2d 1327, 46 St. Rep. 128 (1989), and Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Rights of Decedent's Relatives and Dependents — Law at Time of Injury as Governing: Generally, the compensation rights of the relatives and dependents of a deceased employee are controlled by the law in effect at the time of the injury and not the law in effect upon the employee's death or at the time of the grant of an award. This rule is based on the theory that the Workers' Compensation Act does not create new rights of action in the relatives or dependents of an employee on his death, but rather, his right merely survives for their benefit. Iverson v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 198 M 340, 645 P2d 1366, 39 St. Rep. 1040 (1982).

Apportionment Among Successive Insurers — Rejected: Montana has never recognized the doctrine of apportioning loss among successive insurers under the Montana Workers' Compensation Act, and the Supreme Court found no compelling reason to adopt it in this case. Hartl v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 176 M 540, 579 P2d 1239 (1978).

Preexisting Condition — Aggravation — Evidence: There was sufficient evidence to support the decision to allow Workers' Compensation Court's recovery for injury suffered by the claimant in the course of employment that aggravated a preexisting condition. Close v. St. Regis Paper Co., 175 M 158, 573 P2d 163 (1977). See also Perry v. Tomahawk Transp., 226 M 318, 735 P2d 308, 44 St. Rep. 686 (1987).

Partnership: A carpenter was denied compensation for injury sustained while working on a new residence constructed by partner where he was in employ of partner as an individual and not in employ of partnership, a covered employer under this section. Marker v. Zeiler, 140 M 44, 367 P2d 311 (1961). (Dissenting opinion, 140 M 44, 367 P2d 311 (1961).)

Poliomyelitis: Death of street department foreman from polio was attributed to his employment. Hines v. Indus. Accident Bd., 138 M 588, 358 P2d 447 (1960).

Unusual Strain or Exertion Not Necessary: An unexpected injury received in the ordinary performance of a duty in the usual manner is an injury by accident and, if there is medical causation, it is compensable. Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958).

Aggravation or Acceleration of Disease: The rule that the employer takes the employee as he finds him is well established. The fact that an employee was suffering from a preexisting disease or disability does not preclude compensation if the disease or disability was aggravated or accelerated by an industrial injury which arose out of and in the course of the employment. Gaffney v. Indus. Accident Bd., 129 M 394, 287 P2d 256 (1955).

Decision of Board — Presumption: Where a decision of the Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) as to whether an accident arose out of or in the course of the employment involved the consideration of conflicting evidence as to essential facts or the deduction of permissible but diverse inferences therefrom, its solution of such conflict is presumed to be correct and the burden of proof is upon the party attacking it to show they were erroneous. Partoll v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 122 M 305, 203 P2d 974 (1949).

Employers Not Insurers of Employees at All Times:

Employers are not made insurers of their employees at all times during their period of employment under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), and unless claimants for compensation under that Act received injuries arising out of and in the course of their employment, there can be no recovery of compensation. Griffin v. Indus. Accident Fund, 111 M 110, 106 P2d 346 (1940), explained in Guarascio v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 497, 374 P2d 84 (1962).

While Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) must be liberally construed, it does not contemplate that employer is insurer of employee at all times during his period of employment, nor is it founded on the theory of life insurance or a social insurance law. Sullivan v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Helena, 103 M 117, 61 P2d 838 (1936).

Pneumonia:

Evidence in which claimant asserted that the death of the worker was caused by bronchopneumonia induced by a fall while unloading ties, which caused a rectal abscess necessitating an operation from which he made normal recovery but left him so weak that after returning to work in a mine he contracted pneumonia from which he died a few days later, was so unsubstantial as to warrant a finding of the Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) that there was no connection between the alleged fall and the death of the worker, thus justifying dismissal of the claim. Nigretto v. Indus. Accident Fund, 111 M 83, 106 P2d 178 (1940).

Where evidence disclosed no fracture of rib or crushing and no discoloration of the skin from the blow, it was insufficient to establish that pneumonia, which caused death, was the result of accidental injury claimed to have been suffered when plow handle held by worker struck his chest. Doty v. Indus. Accident Fund, 102 M 511, 59 P2d 783 (1936).

Neurosis Compensable: A disabling neurosis which has been caused by an accidental injury is compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). O'Neil v. Indus. Accident Bd., 107 M 176, 81 P2d 688 (1938); Best v. London Guar. & Accident Co., 100 M 332, 47 P2d 656 (1935); Sykes v. Republic Coal Co., 94 M 239, 22 P2d 157 (1933).

Act Does Not Provide Measure of Damages in Tort Action: In action by employee for negligence of employer who had not elected to be bound by the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the compensation provided by the Act is not to be taken as a yardstick to measure plaintiff's damages, since the compensation is not based upon a cause of action for tort and omits entirely the element of pain and suffering. Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 M 603, 69 P2d 764 (1937).

Lightning — Act of God:

In a lightning case the question for decision is whether accident arose out of and in the course of employment, or if by reason of his employment the employee was exposed to greater danger of being struck than others in same locality. Where employee was ordered to place metal pipe on iron scrap pile, after rain, near trees, pole, and wire fence where lightning struck more frequently, his employment increased danger and his widow was entitled to compensation for his death. Sullivan v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Helena, 103 M 117, 61 P2d 838 (1936).

The terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) are sufficiently comprehensive to include injury resulting from an act of God. Thus, death resulting to an employee of a county from lightning while he is engaged at work on a public road is death resulting from an industrial accident, but there can be no recovery therefor without proof that the injury causing death arose "out of" and "in the course of" the employment. Wiggins v. Indus. Accident Bd., 54 M 335, 170 P 9 (1918).

Heat Prostration: Death of state highway employee caused by heat prostration while working on oil-surfaced highway on mid-July afternoon was compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), and fact he lived 11 days after injury did not affect widow's right to recover compensation. Ryan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 100 M 143, 45 P2d 775 (1935).

Burden of Proof: Burden is on claimant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that worker died as the result of an accidental injury, but it was not incumbent upon widow to have an autopsy performed to establish the cause of death. Birdwell v. Three Forks Portland Cement Co., 98 M 483, 40 P2d 43 (1935).

Industrial Accident Not Proximate Cause of Death: A laborer about an ore sampler had for a number of years been suffering from a large ulcer on the front of one of his legs between the knee and the ankle. Physicians grafted skin on the denuded area of the ulcer successfully and he returned to work, the healed area being bandaged. A week thereafter he died from blood poisoning. His widow, asserting that death was due to an injury sustained by decedent shortly after returning to work in that a rock had struck the healed ulcerous area causing an abrasion through which the infectious germs had entered into the bloodstream, made claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). The claim was properly rejected where evidence warranted the conclusion that decedent did not sustain an injury to the leg as claimed, but that if he did, such injury was not the proximate cause of his death, but, as found by both the Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) and District Court, the blood poisoning was due to infection from the ulcer prior to the time of the alleged injury. Kerns v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 87 M 546, 289 P 563 (1930).

Exclusive Remedy: The Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), insofar as it provides compensation to an injured employee for injuries received from an accident growing out of and in the course of his employment, is exclusive of all other remedies. Wirta v. N. Butte Min. Co., 64 M 279, 210 P 332, 30 ALR 964 (1922).

Determination of Dependency: In determining whether a claimant was a dependent, the board is not concerned with problematical future conditions, but only with the condition of the claimant at the time of the injury to the decedent. Morgan v. Butte Cent. Min. & Milling Co., 58 M 633, 194 P 496 (1920).

INJURY IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT

Food Transfers — Injuries Sustained in Course of Employment: A Glacier Park hotel manager suffered complete paralysis below the waist and a serious head injury resulting in memory loss and diminished intellectual capacity in an automobile accident while returning from another lodge within the park where he returned borrowed food, obtained money for the operating tills of his hotel, and met with employees to discuss the evening's food transfers. During the meeting, alcohol was consumed. Affirming the Workers' Compensation Court decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the manager's injuries arose out of and in the course of his employment. Parker v. Glacier Park, Inc., 249 M 225, 815 P2d 583, 48 St. Rep. 687 (1991), distinguished in St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. James, 257 M 348, 849 P2d 187, 50 St. Rep. 302 (1993).

Lack of Medical Evidence on Cause of Disability — Burden of Proof in Light of Purposes of Act — Standard of Appellate Review: Where the claimant and insurer presented medical evidence as to the uncertainty of the cause of the claimant's multiple sclerosis (MS) but it was shown that the onset of claimant's MS coincided with a job-related injury, the Supreme Court held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court that the claimant's MS was caused by that injury. Under the rationale of Moffett v. Bozeman Canning Co., 95 M 347, 26 P2d 973 (1933), the Workers' Compensation Court properly considered the timing of the claimant's traumatic injury and the purposes of the Workers' Compensation Act along with the evidence of a lack of medical certainty as to the cause of the claimant's disease. Given all these factors and the standard of appellate review of decisions of the Workers' Compensation Court established in McGee v. Bechtel Corp., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156 (1979), the Supreme Court could not conclude that the Workers' Compensation Court was clearly erroneous. Conway v. Missoula Serv. Co., 205 M 459, 669 P2d 225, 40 St. Rep. 1427 (1983), followed in Hengel v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 224 M 525, 730 P2d 1163, 43 St. Rep. 2387 (1986).

Medical Evidence Indicating Phlebitis Caused by Requirements of Claimant's Janitress/Bartender Duties: The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court's award to claimant despite employer's assertion that claimant's thrombosis was caused by factors other than claimant's employment as a janitress/bartender. The reviewing court reasoned that the medical evidence at trial supported claimant's theory that her phlebitis was caused by the standing required by her employment rather than by her outside activities of sitting and sewing, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court when there is substantial evidence to support its findings of fact. Wise v. Perkins, 202 M 157, 656 P2d 816, 40 St. Rep. 1 (1983).

Course of Employment: Sufficient evidence was present to support the finding and conclusion that decedent's death arose out of and in the course of his employment, whether applying the "deviation" rule, "dual purpose" rule, or "going and coming" rule. Steffes v. USF&G Co., 177 M 83, 580 P2d 450 (1978), distinguished in Strickland v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 273 M 254, 901 P2d 1391, 52 St. Rep. 962 (1995).

Injury Arising Out of and in the Course of Employment — Going to and From Work: The death of a tileworker, hired in Utah for a construction project in Montana, in a one-car accident on a highway in Montana while driving to the site of the proposed employment, who was to receive monetary compensation for the time spent in traveling to the job, arose out of and in the course of his employment. Guarascio v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 497, 374 P2d 84 (1962).

No Particular Tasks at Time of Injury: Where an employee was injured while riding on a conveyor belt during a period when he had no particular tasks to perform and the evidence showed that the action was one which could be reasonably contemplated by the employment, the injury arose out of as well as in the course of employment. Richardson v. J. Neils Lumber Co., 136 M 601, 341 P2d 900 (1959).

No Formula for "Out of and in the Course of Employment": No exact formula can be laid down which will automatically solve every case involving the question whether an accident arises out of and in the course of the employment, but each case must depend upon its particular facts and circumstances. Partoll v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 122 M 305, 203 P2d 974 (1949).

Lunch Period: Where employees of defendant were permitted to play handball in garage and had played such game daily during their lunch hour for a period of about 3 months, and employees were required to eat their lunches on the premises so as to be there if a call came, and only employees participated in the game, an injury caused when an employee, while jumping for the ball, accidentally struck another breaking his glasses, was sufficiently incidental to the employment to have arisen out of and in the course of his employment. Geary v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 120 M 485, 188 P2d 185 (1947).

Causal Connection:

To entitle a worker to compensation under this Act he must be able to prove by a preponderance of the evidence the following essential elements: (1) the injury must have resulted from an industrial accident (2) arising out of and in the course of his employment; the term arising "out of" presupposing a causal connection between the employment and the injury, and the words "in the course of" referring to the time, place, and circumstances under which the accident took place. Landeen v. Toole County Ref. Co., 85 M 41, 277 P 615 (1929).

It was the duty of an employee of a coal company each morning before the arrival of others employed at the coalyard to open a gate in the fence surrounding it; for that purpose he had been entrusted with a key. To reach the gate it had been his custom with the knowledge of his employer and without objection on the part of the employer, after alighting from a streetcar, to cross premises adjacent to those of the employer. Alighting from the car on the morning of the accident, some 900 feet from the gate, and moving toward it he was struck by an automobile, his injuries resulting in death the following day. Since there was a causal connection between his injuries and the duties imposed upon him by his employer, his widow was entitled to compensation. Herberson v. Great Falls Wood & Coal Co., 83 M 527, 273 P 294 (1929).

Exposure to More Than Normal Risk: An injury to a worker arises "out of" his employment if it is the result of exposure to a hazard peculiar to the employment, or of exposure to more than the normal risk to which the people of the community generally are subject. Wiggins v. Indus. Accident Bd., 54 M 335, 170 P 9 (1918).

Terms Employed Conjunctively: The phrase "injury arising out of and in the course of his employment" means that to warrant payment of compensation the facts must disclose that the injury or death, as the case may be, resulted from an industrial accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. These terms are employed conjunctively, and not disjunctively, and the burden of proof is upon the claimant to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that these conditions are met. Wiggins v. Indus. Accident Bd., 54 M 335, 170 P 9 (1918).

INJURY NOT IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT

Bellboy Driving Guest's Car to Charge Battery: The Workers' Compensation Court was affirmed in its decision that injuries to a seasonal bellboy at a resort hotel caused by an accident during speeding and reckless driving of an automobile owned by a hotel guest did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. The claimant was driving the automobile to charge its battery. Other than the fact that the incident occurred during hours of employment, there was nothing to indicate that operation of a guest's car was within the course of employment. The Supreme Court held that the action constituted a deviation from the course of employment. Hicks v. CNA Ins. Co., 236 M 113, 768 P2d 346, 46 St. Rep. 224 (1989).

Failure to Establish Thoracic Outlet Syndrome as Injury: Claimant failed to prove that a work-related incident was a contributing cause of his thoracic outlet syndrome when he failed to report to his employer or physicians any injury and when three physicians who treated him all testified that the syndrome was a gradually developing problem that could not have been caused by a single traumatic incident, but rather existed for a considerable period prior to the alleged accident. Nelson v. Asarco, Inc., 227 M 272, 739 P2d 943, 44 St. Rep. 1074 (1987).

Injury After Retrieving Keys and Money Not Within Course and Scope of Employment: A convenience store clerk received injuries in an automobile accident after retrieving store keys and money from a night clerk. He left the store items at his apartment and was injured returning to a night club. His injuries did not occur within the course and scope of his employment, and he therefore was not eligible for compensation benefits under the Worker's Compensation Act. Hetland v. Magnum Petroleum, 225 M 389, 733 P2d 343, 44 St. Rep. 326 (1987).

No Reasonably Immediate Service to Employer: The underlying principle to consider in construing course of employment is whether the employee was performing some reasonably immediate service to the employer at the time of injury, Morgan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 133 M 254, 321 P2d 232 (1958). Emphasizing the personal nature of deceased's trip, the Supreme Court decided that driving late at night to meet a morning business meeting was not a reasonably immediate service to employer. Ogren v. Orion Group, Inc., 222 M 515, 723 P2d 944, 43 St. Rep. 1467 (1986), followed in Dale v. Trade Street, Inc., 258 M 349, 854 P2d 828, 50 St. Rep. 359 (1993).

Personal Nature of Trip — Benefits Precluded: Claimant's husband flew an employee in a company plane from Missoula to Great Falls, then flew alone to Wyoming to pick up his daughter. The plane broke down, and the husband was killed in a car accident on the return trip. Despite the fact that travel expenses were paid by the employer, the solely personal nature of the trip to Wyoming prevented application of the dual purpose rule and exceptions to the going-and-coming rule. Deviation from business purposes was so substantial as to sever the employment connection. Ogren v. Orion Group, Inc., 222 M 515, 723 P2d 944, 43 St. Rep. 1467 (1986).

Injury From Fighting Not Compensable — Connection to Employment Required: Plaintiff suffered a back injury in an industrial accident in February 1978. He suffered intermittent periods when he was unable to work as a result of the injuries, during which he was compensated under the Workers' Compensation Act. In November 1979, plaintiff was engaged in an altercation with a fellow employee at work, as a result of which his injuries were aggravated. He was denied compensation for the aggravated injury. Unless some reasonably immediate service to the employer can be discerned, a determination of whether an injury arises out of and occurs in the course of employment is controlled by the particular facts of the case. The Supreme Court adopted the rule that the fact that employees sometimes quarrel and fight while at work does not make the injury that may result one that arises out of their employment. There must be some reasonable connection between the injury suffered and the employment or the conditions under which employment was pursued. That did not exist here as only personal animosity was involved. Penny v. The Anaconda Co., 194 M 409, 632 P2d 1114, 38 St. Rep. 1429 (1981), distinguished in Pinyerd v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 271 M 115, 894 P2d 932, 52 St. Rep. 332 (1995).

Travel Pay — Effect on Workers' Compensation: Since claimant was not entitled to travel pay under this section, she was not entitled to workers' compensation for an injury sustained en route to work. Hagerman v. Galen St. Hosp., 174 M 249, 570 P2d 893 (1977), followed in Buhl v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 363, 769 P2d 1258, 46 St. Rep. 428 (1989).

Injury Arising Out of and in the Course of Employment: Injury, resulting from a mauling by a grizzly bear in a national park, occurring away from employer's premises while the claimant was on personal recreation not connected with his activities as an employee and not incidental to nor required by his employment, did not arise out of nor was it in the course of his employment. Williams v. Glacier Park Co., 140 M 440, 373 P2d 517 (1962).

GOING AND COMING RULE

Injury While Helping Fellow Employee Get to Work — No Special Benefit Exception to General Rule: Claimant argued that her case fit the special benefit exception to the going and coming rule because at the time she was injured she was conferring a reasonably immediate service to her employer through her attempt to help a fellow employee get to work. The Workers' Compensation Court properly found no exception to the general rule under the rationale that if merely securing an employee's presence at work is in every case a special benefit, the exception swallows up the rule. Buhl v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 363, 769 P2d 1258, 46 St. Rep. 428 (1989), followed in St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. James, 257 M 348, 849 P2d 187, 50 St. Rep. 302 (1993), and Strickland v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 273 M 254, 901 P2d 1391, 52 St. Rep. 962 (1995).

Worker Injured Going to Job on Drilling Rig Within Scope of Employment — Transportation as Reasonable Belief of Employment: An oil driller contacted claimant and arranged transportation to the rig, with work to begin upon arrival. Claimant was injured on the way to the job and filed for benefits. The Supreme Court ruled that claimant had a reasonable belief as to employment and since the single purpose of his trip was to go to the site of employment in a transportation mode furnished by the employer, coverage was appropriate. Lassabe v. Simmons Drilling, Inc., 228 M 94, 743 P2d 568, 44 St. Rep. 1369 (1987), distinguished in Roberts v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 273 M 266, 903 P2d 782, 52 St. Rep. 967 (1995).

Travel Allowance to Go Home on Weekend — Weekday Trip Home: Claimant, working away from his home base, received a travel allowance for trips to his home on the weekend. His employer also provided claimant with a subsistence allowance and intended for him to remain at the work site during the workweek. After finishing work on a midweek evening, claimant, driving his car, set off for his home to visit his wife. He subsequently was involved in an automobile accident and was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol. Claimant filed a claim in which he contended he was injured in connection with his employment. His injuries were not compensable because, although he was receiving a travel allowance, he was not receiving an allowance for the type of travel he was engaged in at the time of his accident. His injuries were not suffered while he was traveling to or from work, nor was he injured in the course of his employment. He did not come within the "travel status" exception which provides for compensation for injuries sustained when an employee is required to travel away from home on his employer's business. There was no benefit or service to the employer in claimant's midweek trip. Correa v. Rexroat Tile, 217 M 126, 703 P2d 160, 42 St. Rep. 1075 (1985).

Teacher — Weekend Visit Home From Graduate Program: Claimant, a teacher attending a master program during summer session, suffered permanent total disablement when he fell from his motorcycle while returning to classes after a weekend visit home. The Workers' Compensation Court ruled the injury was work-related and compensable on basis that graduate program was substantially related to claimant's teaching and administrative responsibilities. The Supreme Court found claimant within the paid travel exception to the going and coming rule and affirmed Workers' Compensation Court decision. The Supreme Court applied the substantial credible evidence standard of review. Courser v. Darby School District, 214 M 13, 692 P2d 417, 41 St. Rep. 2283 (1984).

When Deviation Removes Employee From Course of Employment: An identifiable deviation from a business trip for personal reasons takes the employee out of the course of his employment until he returns to the route of the business trip, unless the deviation is so small as to be disregarded as insubstantial. Here, a boomer electrician, miles out into a rural area, without his family, who stopped for a beer and a game of pool after completing his workday and then resumed his journey, had not deviated so from his trip as to remove him from the course of his employment, where he was within the travel pay exception to the "going and coming" rule. Gordon v. H. C. Smith Constr. Co., 188 M 166, 612 P2d 668, 37 St. Rep. 593 (1980).

When Employee Covered Under "Going and Coming" Rule: Under workers' compensation cases, the "going and coming" rule states that travel by an employee to and from work is generally regarded as outside the course and scope of employment. The exception of this rule is that where a deliberate and substantial payment is made for the expense of travel, the journey to and from work is held to be in the course of employment. In McMillen v. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975), the court held that when transportation payment is singled out in the employment contract, the travel to and from work is brought within the course of employment. Injuries sustained en route are therefore compensable. Appellant claims that since the employment contract called the additional compensation "subsistence" pay and "travel" pay, the deceased was not in the course of employment. The test to be applied to determine coverage under the exception to the "going and coming" rule really becomes a simple matter of substance over form. In this instance, there can be no question that the underlying consideration singled out in the employment contract was travel and that coverage is proper. Gordon v. H. C. Smith Constr. Co., 188 M 166, 612 P2d 668, 37 St. Rep. 593 (1980), distinguished in Dale v. Trade Street, Inc., 258 M 349, 854 P2d 828, 50 St. Rep. 359 (1993).

"Arising Out of and in the Course of" Employment — Travel:

When transportation is a subject in the employment contract, travel to and from work is brought within the course of employment and injuries sustained en route are compensable. Ellingson v. Crick Co., 166 M 431, 533 P2d 1100 (1975).

When an employee was injured while traveling to work due to a mechanical failure of his vehicle and a union contract between the employer and the employee's union provided for a travel allowance, the travel allowance was for the benefit of the employer and the employee's injury "arose out of and in the course of" his employment. McMillen v. Arthur G. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975).

Employee Subject to Call: Injuries sustained after the completion of the regular work by an employee subject to call may in a proper case be compensable as an injury arising out of and in the course of employment. Geary v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 120 M 485, 188 P2d 185 (1947).

Firemen Returning Home: Where a city fireman upon completing his 8-hour night shift and while on his way home fell on an ice-covered sidewalk sustaining injuries from which he died, his widow was not entitled to compensation under plan No. 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the injuries not having arisen in the course of his employment. Griffin v. Indus. Accident Fund, 111 M 110, 106 P2d 346 (1940), explained in Guarascio v. Indus. Accident Bd., 140 M 497, 374 P2d 84 (1962).

Injured While Going to Work: Where an employee, while on his way to work, was struck by an automobile, his injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, and he was neither entitled to compensation nor to hospitalization under the general provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). Murray Hosp. v. Angrove, 92 M 101, 10 P2d 577 (1932).

HEART ATTACK

Tangible Happening of Traumatic Nature — Heart Attack Symptoms Insufficient: Although medical records and testimony showed that decedent first felt the symptoms of a heart attack while at work and then continued to work, there was nothing in the record to indicate that it was suffered as a result of a tangible happening of a traumatic nature. Under Ness v. Diamond Asphalt Co., 143 M 560, 393 P2d 43 (1964), a heart attack occurring at work but not as a result of work is not an injury under the statute. Therefore, there was no compensable injury. Moen v. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 185 M 79, 604 P2d 765, 36 St. Rep. 2220 (1979).

Heart Failure: Heart failure may be classified as an industrial accident where it is brought about by unusual stress and strain in employment. Rathbun v. Taber Tank Lines, Inc., 129 M 121, 283 P2d 966 (1955), explained in Murphy v. The Anaconda Co., 133 M 198, 321 P2d 1094 (1958).

Heat Prostration — Death Compensable Although Heart Disease Also Present: Death of worker caused by extreme heat from cement kilns which he was attending prior to his collapse was compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) and fact that decedent was suffering from heart disease previous to and on the day of his death did not prevent recovery by his widow. Birdwell v. Three Forks Portland Cement Co., 98 M 483, 40 P2d 43 (1935), distinguished in Woin v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 99 M 163, 43 P2d 663 (1935), and Ryan v. Indus. Accident Bd., 100 M 143, 45 P2d 775 (1935).

Aggravation or Acceleration of Disease: The death of a coal miner, who was predisposed to heart disease, from shock while coming from work in the mine in which the temperature was very high and passing through an air course into which ice-cold air was being forced by means of a fan, rendering the temperature therein very low, was due to an "industrial" accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Nicholson v. Roundup Coal Min. Co., 79 M 358, 257 P 270 (1927).

Case Notes

Waiver of Workers' Compensation Benefits Allowed — Distribution of Proportionate Share of Benefits: Decedent who died in the course of employment was survived by two children of a prior marriage and by the widow of a second marriage. Decedent's insurer and others with potential liability for death claims settled with the widow for substantial sums, but the children were not parties to the settlement. No workers' compensation claim was filed by the widow, though one was filed by decedent's employer. The compensation carrier began paying one-third of the compensation benefits to the widow and reserved two-thirds pending final determination of the children as beneficiaries. The widow advised the carrier that she did not wish to receive workers' compensation benefits and returned those she had been issued. The Workers' Compensation Court held that, as a matter of public policy, the widow could not waive death benefits and that the children's interest in the benefits would vest only if the widow died or remarried prior to the passing of 500 weeks after decedent's death. On rehearing, the court found the children to be stepchildren of the widow and therefore entitled to benefits, to be equally divided between the parties. The children appealed, contending that the widow should not be compelled to receive benefits she did not claim or intended to waive and that the children were each entitled to one-half of all available benefits. The Supreme Court held that under 1-3-204, the surviving widow could waive or abandon her right to benefits and that upon waiver the surviving children were entitled to no more than their proportionate share provided by law. 39-71-411. Provisions of chapter exclusive remedy — nonliability of insured employer.

Case Notes

Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Claim Barred by Exclusive Remedy Provision of Workers' Compensation — Burden Not Met for Separate Cause of Action for Intentional or Malicious Act: Maney's son, who worked for Cheff clearing timber on property belonging to the Louisiana Pacific Corporation, was killed when a tree fell on him. Maney brought an action against Cheff and the Louisiana Pacific Corporation for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress after seeing her son die in the hospital as a result of the accident. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in dismissing Maney's claim. Citing the comprehensive language in the applicable Montana statutes and cases from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that the intent of the Montana Legislature in providing the exclusive remedy of workers' compensation was to preclude any employer liability whatever for compensation as a result of or concerning an employee's injury or death. The Supreme Court also held that Maney had not met her burden under 39-71-413 because she had alleged no facts demonstrating an intentional or malicious infliction of emotional distress. The court also held that the District Court had correctly dismissed the Louisiana Pacific Corporation's cross-claim against Cheff for indemnity and contribution because those claims were also barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of this section. Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Whether Tort Claim Barred by Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Provisions — Posttraumatic Stress Disorder Not Compensable: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. Onstad did not file a workers' compensation claim; nevertheless, Payless contended that the claim was precluded by the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act and that the Workers' Compensation Court, rather than the District Court, should have made the initial determination whether Onstad's injuries were covered by workers' compensation. The Supreme Court noted that in accord with prior case law, the District Court did have jurisdiction to determine whether Onstad's tort claim was barred by the exclusivity provision, then went on to hold that Onstad's injury was not compensable under the Workers' Compensation Act because it was primarily a posttraumatic mental injury related to Onstad's stress of contending with the attack. Thus, Payless's exclusivity defense failed as a matter of law. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000). See also Yarborough v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 282 M 475, 938 P2d 679 (1997).

Liability of Employer for Tortious Act: Although the language of 39-71-413 provides for a cause of action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, pursuant to Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986), such an action may be brought against an employer as well. To fail to hold employers liable in the same manner as their employees by permitting an employer to commit an intentional and malicious act or omission that causes an injury to an employee and then to allow the employer to hide behind the exclusivity statutes would defeat the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in this section. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

Spoliation of Evidence Claim Not Barred by Exclusivity of Workers' Compensation Act: As part of an industrial accident case, Olivers requested that equipment involved in the accident remain intact so that it could be examined by an expert. The equipment was subsequently altered, and Olivers brought an action for negligent and intentional spoliation of evidence. The District Court determined that the exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act barred Olivers from bringing a claim for spoliation of evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that by definition, injuries that trigger an exclusive remedy under the Act are internal or external harm to a worker's body, but the loss or impairment of a person's ability to bring an action against a third party for spoliation of evidence is not an injury covered by the Act. Thus, Olivers' claim was not barred by the Act's exclusivity provisions. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999).

Constitutionality of Section Allowing Setoff to Claim Against Uninsured Employers' Fund: Thayer died from an injury on the job, after incurring medical expenses of $253,207.98. Because the employer did not carry workers' compensation insurance, Thayer's wife, Phyllis, was entitled to receive medical benefits and death benefits provided by the uninsured employers' fund, pursuant to 39-71-503. The fund paid $85,000 in medical cost reimbursement, which the state accepted in full satisfaction of its claim. Phyllis subsequently brought negligence actions against the employer and a coemployee and product liability actions against the retail seller and the manufacturer of the product that Thayer was using when he was fatally injured. The uninsured employers' fund discharged Phyllis's claim for wage loss benefits following her receipt of a $100,000 settlement from the employer, applying the setoff pursuant to 39-71-511 in order to discharge the remaining future benefits that Phyllis would have been entitled to receive from the fund, but did not seek recovery of any of the benefits paid to Phyllis prior to receipt of the settlement or the benefits paid based on the amounts recovered from third parties. Phyllis asserted that the setoff essentially gave the fund a subrogation interest in her settlement from the employer, that the fund could not subrogate until she was made whole, and that to hold otherwise would be a violation of her constitutional right to full legal redress. The Supreme Court disagreed. Because the fund is merely a legislatively provided safety net standing in place of the employer to provide some basis for recovery when the employer is impecunious, it is reasonable to condition the fund's obligations on the extent to which the employer fails to provide compensation. Further, because the fund is not an insurer, limiting the fund's obligation to the extent of the uninsured employer's ability to compensate the employee or the employee's family does not diminish the employee's right to full legal redress. The plain language of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., does not distinguish between third parties and uninsured employers. In this case, the employee was uninsured, so the exclusive remedy provision in this section did not apply, and Phyllis could pursue benefits from the fund up to the amount of workers' compensation benefits that she would have received if the employer were insured. Also, pursuant to 39-71-509, Phyllis could bring a tort action against the employer in addition to any responsible third party. Thayer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 304, 297 M 179, 991 P2d 447, 56 St. Rep. 1223 (1999), following Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997).

Failure to Acknowledge Employee on Payroll — Employer Uninsured — Exclusive Remedy Unavailable: Defendant employer hired plaintiff employee Buerkley "under the table". Buerkley did not submit an employment application and was not required to comply with any existing hiring procedures; he did not use a time clock as did other employees; his paycheck was not drawn from the employer's payroll account, and no deductions were taken from his paycheck; he was not held out to others as an employee; and he was not reported as an employee on the payroll reports provided to the trust by which employees were provided coverage for work-related injuries.

Buerkley was injured on the job, after which he submitted the proper application paperwork, backdated to a date prior to the injury; he began using the timeclock; and his paychecks began to reflect deductions for workers' compensation coverage. The trust adjusters found that Buerkley was entitled to compensation, but Buerkley rejected a settlement offer and sought damages in District Court, at which time the trust adjusters discovered the falsified employment records. Buerkley contended that an employer who has not properly complied with the requirements of 39-71-401 is an uninsured employer pursuant to 39-71-501 and, therefore, subject to the civil remedies provided in 39-71-508 and 39-71-515. He also contended that the employer should not, as a matter of law and public policy, be allowed to rely on the exclusive remedy in this section. Defendant's argued, and the District Court agreed, that whether or not plaintiff's employment was reported to the trust by which they were self-insured, they elected coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act, and thus the Workers' Compensation Act was Buerkley's exclusive remedy. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act is to effectuate a compromise between industry and labor and cited 2A Larson, The Law of Workman's Compensation 65.40 (1998), for the premise that workers' compensation statutes are often described as a quid pro quo exchange of rights and remedies. However, the requisite quid pro quo is absent when an employer has deliberately avoided the cost of insuring an employee by failing to acknowledge the employee's existence in payroll records. In those cases, the employer should not be able to take refuge behind the exclusive remedy provision. Thus, for purposes of the remedies in Title 39, ch. 71, part 5, Buerkley's employer was uninsured at the time of the injury and the exclusive remedy provision did not apply. Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999), following Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175 (1996).

Principles Controlling When Allegations Sufficient to Avoid Exclusive Remedy Provisions — Employer's Knowledge of Employee's Risk and Violations of Safety Standards Insufficient Basis for Intentional Tort: While the language of 39-71-413 provides for a cause of action only against a fellow employee or other servant who intentionally and maliciously injures an employee, an action of this nature may be brought against an employer as well, pursuant to Sitzman v. Shumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657 (1986). Allegations of negligence, no matter how wanton, are insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy of the Workers' Compensation Act, as set out in this section. A plaintiff who attempts to avoid the exclusive remedy provisions must establish that an intentional act with malice caused the injury at issue. An employer's violation of safety statutes or regulations is insufficient to avoid exclusivity because that violation would at most constitute negligence and does not serve as a basis for an intentional tort. Even an employer's knowledge of a high degree of risk to an employee working under dangerous conditions does not, in itself, establish the intentional act necessary to avoid exclusivity. Allegations or evidence that an employer knew that its act created a high degree of harm to an employee is sufficient to meet the intentional act requirement of 39-71-413; however, the employee must allege and establish that the employer had actual knowledge that the employee was being harmed, because mere allegations that the employer had ample reason to know of the harm are insufficient. In the present case, the employer's knowledge that Calcaterra was working 10 feet above the floor on an unsecured ladder and without a safety belt and lanyard, thus risking injury, was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact that the employer directed intentional harm at Calcaterra. The employer's motion for summary judgment was properly granted, absent a genuine issue of material fact, and the claim was barred by the exclusivity provision. Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590, 55 St. Rep. 762 (1998), distinguishing Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314 (1995). See also Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 2001 MT 193, 306 M 249, 32 P3d 764 (2001), in which it was held that a decisional law change regarding the definition of intentional and malicious in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), did not constitute sufficient extraordinary circumstances under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), so as to allow reopening the 1998 Calcaterra decision.

Negligence Insufficient to Avoid Exclusive Remedy Provision of Workers' Compensation Coverage — Violation of Safety Statute Only Evidence of Negligence: Schmidt's husband was killed on the job, and she argued that the state, his employer, was liable for damages beyond workers' compensation coverage because the state's employee, her husband's supervisor, had acted intentionally and maliciously in ordering her husband to use an old tractor to accomplish a certain task, resulting in her husband's death. Schmidt additionally argued that the state violated provisions of the Montana Safety Act, which also constituted an intentional act. The Supreme Court stated that although there was a split in the holdings of its previous cases, without resolving the conflict, it was going to follow the line of cases that stated that allegations of negligence, no matter how wanton, are insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy of workers' compensation provisions and that to succeed in avoiding the exclusivity, the plaintiff must show that the employer's employee or agent intended the result of any intentional act. The Supreme Court further held that a violation of a safety statute by itself only indicates negligence, not an intentional act. Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23, 54 St. Rep. 1321 (1997), following Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980).

Corporate Shareholder Landlords Not Protected by Exclusive Remedy: The District Court dismissed an action filed by an employee, who was injured on property owned by the defendants, who were shareholders as well as landlords of the property, ruling that the exclusive remedy rule protected the shareholders from liability. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the exclusive remedy provision provided no protection because the claim was filed against the defendants in their capacity as landlords, not as shareholders in the corporate employer. Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997).

Exclusive Remedy:

Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Citing case law from other states and the public policy expressed by the Legislature, the Supreme Court held that the refusal of the Legislature to provide coverage under the workers' compensation laws precluded the applicability of the exclusive remedy theory upon which those laws are based. The Supreme Court also held that because the definition of injury contained in this section must be construed consistently with the definition of injury in 39-71-119, an injury excluded by the definition in 39-71-119 must also be excluded from the exclusive remedy provisions of this section. Because Stratemeyer did not suffer an injury covered by the exclusive remedy provision of the workers' compensation laws, he was free to bring a separate tort action against the county. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep 245 (1996), followed in Kleinhesselink v. Chevron, U.S.A., 277 M 158, 920 P2d 108, 53 St. Rep. 668 (1996), and Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999). Stratemeyer and Kleinhesselink were distinguished in Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Where both employer and employee elected to come under the Montana Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the provisions of the Act were exclusive. If benefits provided by the Act were not paid by the employer, the employee's sole remedy was with the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry). Carlson v. The Anaconda Co., 165 M 413, 529 P2d 356 (1974).

Employer's immunity from common-law liability remains even when there have been wanton, willful, and intentional violations of safety statutes, and the immunity is abrogated only if the injury itself was intentionally inflicted. Enberg v. The Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

Where electric company's independent contractor was specifically required to carry workers' compensation insurance, an employee of the contractor could not bring an action in tort against the electric company for injuries he suffered when a pole broke. Buerkle v. Mont. Power Co., 157 M 57, 482 P2d 564 (1971).

Where independent contractor defense is not applicable to general employer, general employer is substituted for immediate employer and is liable for injury under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) and claimant cannot maintain common-law personal injury action against general employer. Campbell v. Shell Oil Co., 329 F. Supp. 846 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Where employee was injured while performing work assigned to him under contract between his employer and second company, failure of second company to file timely injury report with Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) prevented it from invoking exclusive jurisdiction in Board as "exclusive remedy" after employee filed civil suit in District Court. State ex rel. Broesder v. Indus. Accident Bd., 154 M 178, 461 P2d 456 (1969).

Employee, having elected to be bound by workers' compensation law, and being compensated thereunder, was not entitled to maintain an action against employer for negligence, notwithstanding contention that employer's actions were willful and therefore not within statute barring employee's action against employer for common-law negligence. Employee was not third-party beneficiary of safety clauses in contract between employer and United States and could not maintain action against employer for common-law negligence in absence of express promise in contract between employer and United States to pay damages to employee for employer's negligence. Hensley v. U.S., 279 F. Supp. 548 (D.C. Mont. 1968).

Exclusive Remedy Provisions Precluding Negligence Suit Following Successful Remedy Under Occupational Disease Act: Torres was injured by chemicals while pursuing a doctorate of philosophy in chemistry at Montana State University. She filed a workers' compensation claim, which was denied, but the parties later entered into a disputed liability settlement under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana. Torres then brought suit against the state for negligence. The District Court correctly dismissed the negligence claim, holding that the exclusivity provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Disease Act of Montana precluded pursuit of the tort claim. The only exception to the exclusivity provisions is in 39-71-413, regarding intentional or malicious acts or omissions by the employer or a coemployee. Torres v. St., 273 M 83, 902 P2d 999, 52 St. Rep. 833 (1995).

Failure to Install or Maintain Safety Device — No Allegation of Intentional or Malicious Acts — Exclusivity Provision of Workers' Compensation Act Prevails: Plaintiff sued, alleging that her son's death, which was covered by workers' compensation insurance, was caused by the negligence of defendant in not installing or maintaining a safety device. The District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Act provided the exclusive remedy. Plaintiff urged the court to carve out judicial exception to the Act to provide tort liability when a worker is killed because of failure to install or maintain a required safety device. The Supreme Court declined to make a judicial exception and relied on the legislative determination that absent intentional and malicious conduct, employees cannot sue their employers for injuries sustained during the course of their employment that are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Kortes v. Pool Co., 270 M 474, 893 P2d 322, 52 St. Rep. 291 (1995). See also Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Liability of Coemployee: Section 27-1-703 provides that to the extent a coemployee has immunity from liability under the Workers' Compensation Act, a trier of fact cannot consider or determine negligence by the coemployee. The existence of immunity must be determined by the District Court. No statute or rule requires pleading the inapplicability of the Workers' Compensation Act because the jurisdiction of the District Court over common-law personal injury claims is indisputable. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992), distinguishing Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929), and Massey v. Selensky, 212 M 68, 685 P2d 938 (1984).

Workers' Compensation Exclusivity and Coemployee Immunity Matters to Be Pleaded Affirmatively — Timeliness: Workers' compensation exclusivity and coemployee immunity are matters of avoidance that, pursuant to Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), must be pleaded affirmatively. When these matters were raised only after plaintiff's case in chief rather than in initial pleadings, after opportunity for discovery, or at the pretrial conference, the procedure did not provide appropriate notice to plaintiff or apprise the District Court that the issues were before it. Consideration of the matters was thus waived as not timely raised. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992).

Claimant Liable for Restitution for Benefits Paid Under Order Reversed on Appeal: Reil was granted about $13,750 in benefits by the Workers' Compensation Court, of which $3,000 was retained by Reil's counsel for costs and fees. On appeal, the Supreme Court in Reil v. Billings Processors, Inc., 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617 (1987), reversed the award after finding that Reil failed to provide his employer with timely notice of his injury. In a subsequent declaratory action, the Workers' Compensation Court ruled that restitution was proper, denied Reil's joinder of counsel as a third-party defendant, and ordered Reil to reimburse State Fund for all compensation benefits and medical expenses received. Although there is nothing in the Workers' Compensation Act that specifically refers to restitution, neither do the exclusivity provisions of the Act preclude restitution. Therefore, Reil was properly ordered to reimburse State Fund for compensation and benefits paid pursuant to the lower court judgment that was subsequently reversed on appeal. Reil v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 274, 837 P2d 1334, 49 St. Rep. 734 (1992).

Joint Venturer Immune From Liability: A company engaged in a joint venture with the primary employer is also considered an employer and is immune from negligence liability following an award of workers' compensation benefits. Papp v. Rocky Mtn. Oil & Minerals, Inc., 236 M 330, 769 P2d 1249, 46 St. Rep. 400 (1989).

No Workers' Compensation Act Limitation on Contractor Liability to Compensate Employee of Uninsured Subcontractor: When a general contractor is compelled, pursuant to 39-71-405, to pay workers' compensation benefits to an employee of an uninsured subcontractor, the general contractor's liability is not limited by this section to compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the employee could maintain an action for negligence against the general contractor, despite the subcontractor's failure to provide workers' compensation coverage. Webb v. Mont. Masonry Constr. Co., 233 M 198, 761 P2d 343, 45 St. Rep. 1420 (1988).

Material Issue of Fact Concerning Exclusivity: Two workers injured in a Montana automobile accident while returning home from the job site in North Dakota sued their employer for damages caused by the negligence of their fellow employee who was driving the car. The employer paid workers' compensation assessments for the two workers in North Dakota but not in Montana, pursuant to a multistate agreement between Montana and North Dakota that coverage would be controlled by the site of the work. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the ground that the Montana workers' compensation fund provided the exclusive remedy. The appellate court held that summary judgment is precluded because there is a material issue of fact as to whether the fund provided the exclusive remedy. Webb v. Tom Brown, Inc., 807 F2d 783 (9th Cir. 1987).

Trench Collapse Not Intentional Harm — Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy: When a trench collapsed on a worker installing pipe, there was nothing to indicate an intentional and malicious act on the part of the employer. The conduct was, at most, gross negligence; therefore, the exclusivity clause of the Workers' Compensation Act applied. Adsem v. Roske, 224 M 269, 728 P2d 1352, 43 St. Rep. 2188 (1986).

Exception to Exclusiveness of Compensation Remedy: The election referred to in this section is the election to come under the Workers' Compensation Act made by an employer not specifically covered pursuant to 39-71-401(2) and has no reference to an employee seeking to recover for injuries suffered as the result of an assault and battery committed personally by an employer, even though the employee may have filed for and received workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court provided coverage when the injury is by the employer in a manner similar to coverage provided by the Legislature in 39-71-413 when the injury is by a fellow employee. The court held that a narrow exception to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy exists when the employer personally commits an assault and battery upon an employee. Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), in which Sitzman's "narrow exception" to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy, existing when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee, was used as precedent for the holding that although 39-71-413 provides for an action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, such an action may be brought against an employer as well—in this case, a major oil company. See also Oedewaldt v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc., 687 F. Supp. 517, 45 St. Rep. 1366 (D.C. Mont. 1988). However, see Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993).

No Exception for Express Contractual Indemnity — Immunity Defense Asserted: Farmers Union Elevator Company (Farmers), as lessee, signed an indemnity provision in a lease agreeing to indemnify the lessor, Burlington Northern, for any loss, damage, injury, or death from any act or omission of Farmers, its employees, or agent, to the person or property of the parties to the lease and their employees. When an injured Farmers employee sued Burlington Northern for personal injuries suffered on the job, Burlington Northern brought Farmers into the suit as a third-party defendant, seeking contribution or indemnity. On certification from federal District Court, the Montana Supreme Court held that Farmers can properly assert 39-71-411 as a complete defense to a third-party action for express indemnity. Although 39-71-411 is a substantial impairment of the contractual relationship between Farmers and Burlington Northern, the section is constitutional. The purpose of the prohibition against contribution or indemnity, to perpetuate Montana's workers' compensation system in light of recent tort law development, is a significant and legitimate public purpose. The Supreme Court further found that it is not an appropriate distinction under Montana's Workers' Compensation Act to hold that an action to enforce an indemnity contract is an action separate from the original claim for the injury of the employee. An employer should not be held liable for damages sustained by an injured employee, whether such damages are sought by the employee directly or indirectly through recovery from a third party. Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985), distinguishing Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

Contribution and Indemnity Claim Barred — Constitutionality: In a federal diversity case, an injured worker sued a third party who joined the insured employer as a third-party defendant, seeking contribution or indemnity on the basis of an express indemnity agreement. The federal court certified the case to the Montana Supreme Court for its interpretation of 39-71-411. The Supreme Court held that it is constitutional for an employer to use 39-71-411 as a complete defense to a third-party claim for contribution or indemnity. A strict scrutiny analysis does not apply because an employer's immunity from tort liability is constitutionally recognized in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const. Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985), distinguishing Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

Injury in Auto Accident Caused by Insured Coemployee — Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy: The decedent employee was killed in an automobile accident while in the course of his employment. It was alleged that his coemployee's negligence was the sole cause of the accident. The decedent's heirs applied for and received workers' compensation benefits. In an action by the decedent's heirs to recover damages from the coemployee's insurance company under a policy's uninsured motorist provisions, the trial court improperly held that the negligent driver was an uninsured motorist. The court reasoned, first, that 39-71-411 required that the heirs' exclusive remedy was the Workers' Compensation Act, thus the driver's insurance was not applicable and the driver was operating an uninsured vehicle. Second, the insurer's refusal to provide coverage under the "bodily injury" portion of its policy qualified the driver as an uninsured motorist. However, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the driver was an insured motorist as he had coverage under legally adequate insurance policies, but recovery from him was dependent on and denied by the exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act. Hubbel v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 218 M 21, 706 P2d 111, 42 St. Rep. 1365 (1985).

Dual Capacity Doctrine — Alleged Negligence in Maintenance of Truck: The plaintiff filed a wrongful death and survival action when Robert Herron died in a truck crash. Herron purportedly died because of negligent maintenance of the truck's brakes by the company's service department. The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's dismissal based on the exclusive remedy provision of this section. The Supreme Court cited a similar case in Illinois in which significance was placed on the fact that the employer furnished the truck to the employee. Because the operation of the truck was an incident of the injured man's employment, the court rejected the dual capacity exception to the exclusivity provision. Herron v. Pack & Co., 217 M 429, 705 P2d 587, 42 St. Rep. 1303 (1985).

No Proof Harm Directed at Plaintiff — No Cause Outside Exclusive Remedy Statute: When an injured employee's allegations go no further than to charge an employer with knowledge of a hazardous machine, the complaint does not state a cause of action outside the purview of this exclusive remedy statute. The facts as set forth by the injured worker cannot be interpreted to show that harm was specifically directed at him. The trial court correctly construed the intentional harm exception to the exclusivity provision. Noonan v. Spring Creek Forest Prod., Inc., 216 M 221, 700 P2d 623, 42 St. Rep. 759 (1985), followed in Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993), and Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314, 52 St. Rep. 705 (1995).

State Fund Liable for Bad Faith in Settlement: Plaintiff suffered an injury compensable under the state Workers' Compensation Act. His employer was insured by the state fund in accordance with Plan III, under Title 39, ch. 71, part 23. After plaintiff achieved maximum healing, settlement negotiations were begun. After unsuccessful attempts at settlement, the state fund's counteroffer was reduced to writing and a formal petition for full and final settlement was submitted to plaintiff. Plaintiff's attorney, after initially rejecting the offer, waived his fees and drafted a cover letter accepting the terms of the petition. Plaintiff went to the state fund office to accept the offer, but the state fund withdrew its previous offer because it took exception to the language of the cover letter. Plaintiff filed suit alleging bad faith by the state fund. The District Court granted summary judgment to the state fund, relying on the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411 and 39-71-2905. The Supreme Court reversed, relying on the reasoning of its opinions in Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), and Vigue v. Evans Products Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), relating to Plan I and Plan II insurers. The court held that the tortious conduct did not arise within the employment relationship and was not work-related and was therefore not covered by the exclusive remedy provisions. The court said that since the insurance code played no part in the Hayes and Vigue cases, those decisions were equally applicable to the state fund. Birkenbuel v. Mont. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 212 M 139, 687 P2d 700, 41 St. Rep. 1647 (1984).

Dual Capacity Doctrine — Products Liability Suit by Employee Against Employer — Employer Not a Manufacturer or Seller of the Product: A worker injured on an oil rig sued his employer, the owner of the rig, for products liability, claiming the rig was defective. The dual capacity doctrine is invoked in workers' compensation cases when the employer may be said to owe some duty to an injured employee distinct from his duties as an employer, commonly, when an employee is injured by a piece of equipment manufactured by the employer. Whether this doctrine exists in Montana is not clear; but the question need not be answered because, even assuming that the doctrine applies in Montana, the facts do not support products liability as to the employer. The employer did not manufacture oil rigs to sell to the public and did not place in the stream of commerce the rig involved or any other rig. Montana law requires one held liable for products liability to have been a seller of the defective product. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Punitive or Exemplary Damages for Employer's Negligence — Barred by Section: This section bars any claim by an employee against his employer for punitive or exemplary damages for negligence leading to employee's injury. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Election by Claimant Between Occupational Disease Act and Workers' Compensation Act Permissible: The fact that a person may have a compensable disease under the Occupational Disease Act does not preclude eligibility under the Workers' Compensation Act. Thus a claimant who meets the requirements of both acts may choose his remedy. The phrase "exclusive remedy" in 39-72-305 means that an employee does not have a common-law action against his employer. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Rights of Decedent's Relatives and Dependents — Law at Time of Injury as Governing: Generally, the compensation rights of the relatives and dependents of a deceased employee are controlled by the law in effect at the time of the injury and not the law in effect upon the employee's death or at the time of the grant of an award. This rule is based on the theory that the Workers' Compensation Act does not create new rights of action in the relatives or dependents of an employee on his death, but rather, his right merely survives for their benefit. Iverson v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 198 M 340, 645 P2d 1366, 39 St. Rep. 1040 (1982).

"Intentional Harm" Exclusivity Exclusion — Definition: "Intentional harm" removes an employer from the protection of the exclusivity clause of this section. Pleading negligence, however wanton or malicious, will not suffice; there must be harm maliciously and specifically directed at an employee or class of employees out of which specific intentional harm is received by the employee as a proximate result. Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717, 37 St. Rep. 874 (1980), followed in Herron v. Pack & Co., 217 M 429, 705 P2d 587, 42 St. Rep. 1303 (1985), and distinguished in Noonan v. Spring Creek Forest Prod., Inc., 216 M 221, 700 P2d 623, 42 St. Rep. 759 (1985), and Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314, 52 St. Rep. 705 (1995). See also Oedewaldt v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc., 687 F. Supp. 517, 45 St. Rep. 1366 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Not a Prohibited Exculpatory Clause: The exclusionary clause of this section, as part of virtually all employment contracts in the state, is not a contract prohibited by 28-2-702, which declares exculpatory contracts contrary to the policy of the law. Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717, 37 St. Rep. 874 (1980).

Intentional Torts Arising During Workers' Compensation Settlement: An injured employee brought suit against the workers' compensation insurance carrier and the insurance adjuster for the intentional torts of fraud, conversion, and infliction of emotional distress. The suit was brought after the injured employee prevailed in his claim for workers' compensation. The Supreme Court said this suit is not barred by the exclusivity provision of this section. The claimed injury is distinct from the original on-the-job injury; it occurred after the employment relation terminated, and it is not covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257, 37 St. Rep. 485 (1980), followed in Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105, 44 St. Rep. 1221 (1987).

Exclusive Jurisdiction — Exception: A claimant who sustains an injury covered by the Workers' Compensation Act may assert a separate action for damages in District Court against an insurer and its adjuster for the commission of intentional torts in the processing and handling of a workers' compensation claim. Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488, 37 St. Rep. 474 (1980).

Contract to Indemnify — Upheld Where No Defense Asserted Under This Section: The contract between the general contractor and a subcontractor contained an indemnity provision. An employee of the subcontractor was injured and recovered a judgment against the general contractor. The contractor then sued to enforce the indemnity clause. The subcontractor was forced to indemnify. The Supreme Court held that a contract of indemnity falls within the "other legal transaction" exception to the general rule that an employer who has paid an employee benefits pursuant to a workers' compensation claim is not subject to further liability arising out of injuries as to third parties claiming contribution for indemnity. Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979), distinguished in Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985).

No Third-Party Right to Noncontractual Indemnity or Contribution: A third party, sued by an injured employee, has no right to indemnity or contribution from a negligent employer if the employer and the employee are covered by the Montana Workers' Compensation Act unless such a right were to arise out of some other legal transaction between the employer and third party. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86, 36 St. Rep. 2107 (1979).

Assault by Supervisor: Where discharged probationary employee had allegedly been "patted on the rear" and called obscene names by supervisory employee prior to discharge, employee's sole remedy for alleged acts constituting assault was under Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), and court held that "pat on the rear" was legal trifle, and nominal damages of $1 were sufficient. Brown v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 167 M 418, 539 P2d 374 (1975).

General Contractor's Liability:

General employer was immune from suit by independent contractor's employee for injuries sustained in performing work on the general employer's electrical lines where contractor provided workers' compensation coverage although general employer did not require it to do so in the contract. Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974).

Bank which required independent contractor to provide workers' compensation coverage against the claims of employees of a subcontractor was immune from suit by employee of subcontractor to recover damages suffered, allegedly due to bank's negligence. State ex rel. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. District Court, 161 M 127, 505 P2d 408 (1973).

Joint Venture as Employer: Individual members of joint venture are "employers" within act and as such are immune from tort actions for death of employees of joint venture. Hamman v. U.S., 267 F. Supp. 420 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

39-71-412. Liability of third party other than employer or fellow employee — additional cause of action.

Case Notes

Workers' Compensation Claimant's Comparative Negligence Not Applicable in Determining Eligibility — Subrogation Appropriate Only After Claimant Made Whole: McMillan was injured in January 1987 while his employer was performing logging work for the U.S. government. McMillan filed a worker's compensation claim in Montana for which the state did not dispute liability, and he then filed an action under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The federal District Court determined that McMillan was entitled to recover $4,762,686 in damages from the United States, diminished by 45% for McMillan's comparative negligence to $2,619,477. The State Compensation Insurance Fund (State Fund) then sought a determination from the Workers' Compensation Court that the State Fund could assert a subrogation claim against McMillan's recovery from the United States and cease paying benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court held that the full measure of McMillan's loss was $4,762,686, the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court, and that pursuant to the equitable "made whole" doctrine articulated in In re Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335 (1990), McMillan must recover that amount, plus the costs of recovery, before the State Fund was entitled to subrogation. The State Fund appealed, contending that the amount necessary to make McMillan whole was actually $2,619,477 after taking into account McMillan's comparative negligence, plus attorney fees and costs of recovery. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Zacher formula does not contemplate a deduction from a claimant's entire loss for comparative negligence, in accordance with state law, which does not consider a claimant's fault in determining eligibility. Reducing the calculation of McMillan's entire loss, and thus his eligibility for benefits, for comparative negligence would introduce a claimant's fault into the workers' compensation system in violation of Montana law. Thus, the State Fund's subrogation interest could be properly asserted only after McMillan recovered the full amount of the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. McMillan, 2001 MT 168, 306 M 155, 31 P3d 347 (2001).

Physician's Standard of Care Toward Examinee Sent to Physician by Examinee's Employer or Insurer or by Some Other Third Party: At the request of the workers' compensation insurer of an injured worker's employer, a physician examined the worker. He reported his findings to, and his fee was paid by, the insurer. He wrote the worker a letter telling her that she had a back sprain, that no treatment was needed, and that she had an impairment rating of 2% of the whole person. She went back to work, suffered a severely herniated disc in her back, and has significant physical limitations as a result. She sued the doctor for negligence. He claimed that he did not have a physician-patient relationship with her and therefore had no duty of care toward her. The Supreme Court held that based on 27-1-701, a physician who performs an examination of an employee, insured, or other person at the request of a third party has a duty to exercise the level of care required by the physician's professional training and experience and the duty to exercise ordinary care to: (1) discover those conditions that pose imminent danger to the examinee's physical and mental well-being; (2) take reasonable steps to communicate any such condition to the examinee; and (3) ensure that when the physician advises an examinee about a condition, the advice comports with the standard of care for the profession. The court stated that it was not thereby concluding that the physician has the same duty of care as toward a patient. Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

Question of Fact as to Whether Claimant Made Whole — Subrogation Interests: An insurer is not entitled to invade a claimant's paid third-party claim via subrogation until the claimant has been made whole. The question of whether a claimant has been made whole is a question of fact, not a question of law, dependent on the level of the claimant's physical recovery and the extent of the claimant's compensation through benefits paid or damages recouped. Pursuant to Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 266, 794 P2d 335 (1990), no distinction is made between voluntary and nonvoluntary settlements when articulating the rule regarding an insurer's right to subrogation. In this case, a third-party settlement that did not in fact represent the amount necessary to make the claimant whole could not be relied on to entitle an insurer as a matter of law to a subrogation interest in the settlement proceeds. Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 279 M 472, 929 P2d 205, 53 St. Rep. 1241 (1996), overruling Brandner v. Travelers Ins. Co., 179 M 208, 587 P2d 933 (1978), and Getten v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 240 M 90, 782 P2d 1267 (1989).

Jurisdiction to Allocate Settlement Funds Affirmed — Maximum Healing Not Required: Wildin was injured in a car accident during her employment, and her employer's insurer, CNA Insurance Company (CNA), paid over $35,000 to her in medical and disability benefits. Wildin then sued State Farm Fire and Casualty Company (State Farm), the insurer of the other driver, and contacted CNA to see if it would join the suit. No answer was received, so Wildin and State Farm proceeded to settle her suit for $15,000. CNA would not agree to the settlement. Wildin then filed a petition with the Department of Labor and Industry to have the settlement funds allocated. The examiner concluded that the Department had jurisdiction to allocate the funds and allocated one-third to CNA and two-thirds to Wildin, after deducting attorney fees. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court held that there is no provision in this section that requires an insurer to consent before suit can be brought and no requirement in 39-71-414 that an insurer consent to settlement of the suit. Moreover, as far as Wildin and State Farm were concerned, they had done everything necessary under 39-71-414(5) (prior to 1991 amendment) to settle the suit before Wildin petitioned to allocate the funds. Citing 39-71-414 and First Interstate Bank v. Tom Sherry Tire, 235 M 48, 764 P2d 1287 (1988), the Supreme Court also held that maximum healing does not have to occur before a claimant can settle a claim. The Department therefore had jurisdiction to issue the allocation order. Wildin v. CNA Insurance Co., 256 M 354, 846 P2d 1022, 50 St. Rep. 108 (1993).

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Liability of Coemployee: Section 27-1-703 provides that to the extent a coemployee has immunity from liability under the Workers' Compensation Act, a trier of fact cannot consider or determine negligence by the coemployee. The existence of immunity must be determined by the District Court. No statute or rule requires pleading the inapplicability of the Workers' Compensation Act because the jurisdiction of the District Court over common-law personal injury claims is indisputable. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992), distinguishing Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929), and Massey v. Selensky, 212 M 68, 685 P2d 938 (1984).

Workers' Compensation Exclusivity and Coemployee Immunity Matters to Be Pleaded Affirmatively — Timeliness: Workers' compensation exclusivity and coemployee immunity are matters of avoidance that, pursuant to Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), must be pleaded affirmatively. When these matters were raised only after plaintiff's case in chief rather than in initial pleadings, after opportunity for discovery, or at the pretrial conference, the procedure did not provide appropriate notice to plaintiff or apprise the District Court that the issues were before it. Consideration of the matters was thus waived as not timely raised. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992).

Coemployee Immunity: The negligent act of parking in a restricted zone on the employer's property while punching in does not take an employee outside the course and scope of employment so as to remove the employee from coemployee immunity that protects him from common law liability. Massey v. Selensky, 225 M 101, 731 P2d 906, 44 St. Rep. 71 (1987).

Contribution and Indemnity Claim Barred — Constitutionality: In a federal diversity case, an injured worker sued a third party who joined the insured employer as a third-party defendant, seeking contribution or indemnity on the basis of an express indemnity agreement. The federal court certified the case to the Montana Supreme Court for its interpretation of 39-71-411. The Supreme Court held that it is constitutional for an employer to use 39-71-411 as a complete defense to a third-party claim for contribution or indemnity. A strict scrutiny analysis does not apply because an employer's immunity from tort liability is constitutionally recognized in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const. Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985), distinguishing Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

No Exception for Express Contractual Indemnity — Immunity Defense Asserted: Farmers Union Elevator Company (Farmers), as lessee, signed an indemnity provision in a lease agreeing to indemnify the lessor, Burlington Northern, for any loss, damage, injury, or death from any act or omission of Farmers, its employees, or agent, to the person or property of the parties to the lease and their employees. When an injured Farmers employee sued Burlington Northern for personal injuries suffered on the job, Burlington Northern brought Farmers into the suit as a third-party defendant, seeking contribution or indemnity. On certification from federal District Court, the Montana Supreme Court held that Farmers can properly assert 39-71-411 as a complete defense to a third-party action for express indemnity. Although 39-71-411 is a substantial impairment of the contractual relationship between Farmers and Burlington Northern, the section is constitutional. The purpose of the prohibition against contribution or indemnity, to perpetuate Montana's workers' compensation system in light of recent tort law development, is a significant and legitimate public purpose. The Supreme Court further found that it is not an appropriate distinction under Montana's Workers' Compensation Act to hold that an action to enforce an indemnity contract is an action separate from the original claim for the injury of the employee. An employer should not be held liable for damages sustained by an injured employee, whether such damages are sought by the employee directly or indirectly through recovery from a third party. Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985), distinguishing Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

No Subrogation Unless Claimant Made Whole: The insurer is not entitled to subrogation rights under 39-71-414 when, in a case of reasonably clear liability, the claimant is forced to settle a third-party claim for the amount of the insurance policy limits of the third-party tortfeasor and when the amount of the settlement, together with the claimant's workers' compensation award, does not grant full legal redress to the claimant. Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234, 42 St. Rep. 1502 (1985).

Employee Suit Against Employer's Parent Corporation — Mere Holding Company Not Liable: Under the workers' compensation law provision that an employee may sue a third party in tort for causing injury to an employee, the employee may sue the parent corporation of a subsidiary corporation for which the employee works, but must establish that the parent corporation had an independent duty toward the employee. In the present case the facts failed to establish that any duty was breached by the parent corporation. The parent corporation was simply a holding company that carried on no business other than operating through its subsidiaries. Any negligence of the subsidiary employer in regard to employee's products liability theory could not be passed on to the parent corporation. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Contract to Indemnify — Upheld Where No Immunity Defense Asserted: The contract between the general contractor and a subcontractor contained an indemnity provision. An employee of the subcontractor was injured and recovered a judgment against the general contractor. The contractor then sued to enforce the indemnity clause. The subcontractor was forced to indemnify. The Supreme Court held that a contract of indemnity falls within the "other legal transaction" exception to the general rule that an employer who has paid an employee benefits pursuant to a workers' compensation claim is not subject to further liability arising out of injuries as to third parties claiming contribution for indemnity. Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979), distinguished in Raisler v. Burlington N., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985).

No Third-Party Right to Noncontractual Indemnity or Contribution:

A third party, sued by an injured employee, has no right to indemnity or contribution from a negligent employer if the employer and the employee are covered by the Montana Workers' Compensation Act unless such a right were to arise out of some other legal transaction between the employer and third party. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86, 36 St. Rep. 2107 (1979).

Provision in 39-71-411 for exclusive remedy under this Act does not preclude a defendant who is liable at common law to employee from seeking indemnity from plaintiff's employer as third-party defendant on an indemnity agreement. DeShaw v. Johnson, 155 M 355, 472 P2d 298 (1970).

General Contractor's Liability:

General employer was immune from suit by independent contractor's employee for injuries sustained in performing work on the general employer's electrical lines where contractor provided workers' compensation coverage although general employer did not require it to do so in the contract. Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974).

Bank which required independent contractor to provide workers' compensation coverage against the claims of employees of a subcontractor was immune from suit by employee of subcontractor to recover damages suffered, allegedly due to bank's negligence. State ex rel. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. District Court, 161 M 127, 505 P2d 408 (1973).

No Reduction of Insurance Coverage by Workers' Compensation Benefits: The amount of injured worker's recovery from uninsured motorist coverage cannot be reduced by any workers' compensation benefits received by him; Insurance Commissioner had no authority to approve a policy providing for such reduction. Sullivan v. Doe, 159 M 50, 495 P2d 193 (1972).

Right to Sue Third Party:

Plaintiff, who received workers' compensation benefits for injuries sustained while in the employ of independent contractor, was denied claim against the landowners since they exercised no control over work area. Baird v. Chokatos, 156 M 32, 473 P2d 547 (1970).

Employee of joint venture was entitled to sue engineering firm in relation of independent contractor as to joint venture for engineering firm's negligence causing injury to employee under that portion of statute (prior to 1969 amendment) giving right of action against third parties when injuries are caused by act of some person other than employer. Hamman v. U.S., 267 F. Supp. 420 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 229 in (1) at beginning substituted "If an employee is intentionally injured by an intentional and deliberate act of the employee's employer or by the intentional and deliberate act of a fellow employee" for "If an employee receives an injury", near middle after "duties of employment" deleted "and the injury or injuries so received by the employee are caused by the intentional and malicious act or omission of a servant or employee of his employer, then", and at end substituted "person whose intentional and deliberate act caused the intentional injury" for "servants or employees of his employer causing the injury"; inserted (2) providing that an employer is not vicariously liable for the intentional and deliberate acts of an employee; inserted (3) defining intentional injury; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 12, 2001.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 229, L. 2001, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's workers' compensation law is the exclusive remedy for an employee injured or killed in the scope of employment, as included in Article II, section 16, of the Montana Constitution and implemented by the Legislature in section 39-71-411, MCA; and

WHEREAS, the exclusive remedy provision of workers' compensation can be described as a quid pro quo exchange of rights and remedies, which is intended to relieve an injured employee of the responsibility of undertaking lengthy and expensive legal action to recover compensation for job-related injuries by proving an employer's negligence while relieving the employer of the burden of defending against work-related claims through the traditional common-law defenses of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and the fellow servant rule to defeat the employee's claim; and

WHEREAS, in 1973, the Montana Legislature enacted section 39-71-413, MCA, which allowed an injured employee to sue a servant or employee of the employer when the injury was the result of an intentional or malicious act by the servant or employee of the injured employee's employer; and

WHEREAS, in a 2000 decision, Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 Mont. 401 (2000), the Montana Supreme Court revisited the standard used for determining whether an employer's act or omission was protected under the exclusive remedy; and

WHEREAS, the court applied section 39-71-413, MCA, to employers and held that actual malice, as described in section 27-1-221, MCA, which provides that a person acts with malice if an employer has knowledge of facts or intentionally disregards facts that create a high probability of injury and deliberately acts with conscious or intentional disregard or indifference to that high probability, would be the standard applied; and

WHEREAS, the exclusive remedy provision in the Workers' Compensation Act should provide that an injured employee has a cause of action for damages against an employer or the employer's employee only if the employer or fellow employee causes an intentional injury."

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 229, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] [39-71-413] is effective on passage and approval [approved April 12, 2001] and applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Case Notes

Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Claim Barred by Exclusive Remedy Provision of Workers' Compensation — Burden Not Met for Separate Cause of Action for Intentional or Malicious Act: Maney's son, who worked for Cheff clearing timber on property belonging to the Louisiana Pacific Corporation, was killed when a tree fell on him. Maney brought an action against Cheff and the Louisiana Pacific Corporation for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress after seeing her son die in the hospital as a result of the accident. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in dismissing Maney's claim. Citing the comprehensive language in the applicable Montana statutes and cases from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that the intent of the Montana Legislature in providing the exclusive remedy of workers' compensation was to preclude any employer liability whatever for compensation as a result of or concerning an employee's injury or death. The Supreme Court also held that Maney had not met her burden under this section because she had alleged no facts demonstrating an intentional or malicious infliction of emotional distress. The court also held that the District Court had correctly dismissed the Louisiana Pacific Corporation's cross-claim against Cheff for indemnity and contribution because those claims were also barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411. Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Liability of Employer for Tortious Act: Although the language of this section provides for a cause of action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, pursuant to Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986), such an action may be brought against an employer as well. To fail to hold employers liable in the same manner as their employees by permitting an employer to commit an intentional and malicious act or omission that causes an injury to an employee and then to allow the employer to hide behind the exclusivity statutes would defeat the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in this section—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under this section. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

Principles Controlling When Allegations Sufficient to Avoid Exclusive Remedy Provisions — Employer's Knowledge of Employee's Risk and Violations of Safety Standards Insufficient Basis for Intentional Tort: While the language of this section provides for a cause of action only against a fellow employee or other servant who intentionally and maliciously injures an employee, an action of this nature may be brought against an employer as well, pursuant to Sitzman v. Shumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657 (1986). Allegations of negligence, no matter how wanton, are insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy of the Workers' Compensation Act, as set out in 39-71-411. A plaintiff who attempts to avoid the exclusive remedy provisions must establish that an intentional act with malice caused the injury at issue. An employer's violation of safety statutes or regulations is insufficient to avoid exclusivity because that violation would at most constitute negligence and does not serve as a basis for an intentional tort. Even an employer's knowledge of a high degree of risk to an employee working under dangerous conditions does not, in itself, establish the intentional act necessary to avoid exclusivity. Allegations or evidence that an employer knew that its act created a high degree of harm to an employee is sufficient to meet the intentional act requirement of this section; however, the employee must allege and establish that the employer had actual knowledge that the employee was being harmed, because mere allegations that the employer had ample reason to know of the harm are insufficient. In the present case, the employer's knowledge that Calcaterra was working 10 feet above the floor on an unsecured ladder and without a safety belt and lanyard, thus risking injury, was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact that the employer directed intentional harm at Calcaterra. The employer's motion for summary judgment was properly granted, absent a genuine issue of material fact, and the claim was barred by the exclusivity provision. Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590, 55 St. Rep. 762 (1998), distinguishing Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314 (1995). See also Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 2001 MT 193, 306 M 249, 32 P3d 764 (2001), in which it was held that a decisional law change regarding the definition of intentional and malicious in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), did not constitute sufficient extraordinary circumstances under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), so as to allow reopening the 1998 Calcaterra decision.

Negligence Insufficient to Avoid Exclusive Remedy Provision of Workers' Compensation Coverage — Violation of Safety Statute Only Evidence of Negligence: Schmidt's husband was killed on the job, and she argued that the state, his employer, was liable for damages beyond workers' compensation coverage because the state's employee, her husband's supervisor, had acted intentionally and maliciously in ordering her husband to use an old tractor to accomplish a certain task, resulting in her husband's death. Schmidt additionally argued that the state violated provisions of the Montana Safety Act, which also constituted an intentional act. The Supreme Court stated that although there was a split in the holdings of its previous cases, without resolving the conflict, it was going to follow the line of cases that stated that allegations of negligence, no matter how wanton, are insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy of workers' compensation provisions and that to succeed in avoiding the exclusivity, the plaintiff must show that the employer's employee or agent intended the result of any intentional act. The Supreme Court further held that a violation of a safety statute by itself only indicates negligence, not an intentional act. Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23, 54 St. Rep. 1321 (1997), following Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980).

Failure to Install or Maintain Safety Device — No Allegation of Intentional or Malicious Acts — Exclusivity Provision of Workers' Compensation Act Prevails: Plaintiff sued, alleging that her son's death, which was covered by workers' compensation insurance, was caused by the negligence of defendant in not installing or maintaining a safety device. The District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Act provided the exclusive remedy. Plaintiff urged the court to carve out judicial exception to the Act to provide tort liability when a worker is killed because of failure to install or maintain a required safety device. The Supreme Court declined to make a judicial exception and relied on the legislative determination that absent intentional and malicious conduct, employees cannot sue their employers for injuries sustained during the course of their employment that are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Kortes v. Pool Co., 270 M 474, 893 P2d 322, 52 St. Rep. 291 (1995). See also Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Malice as Applied to Intentional Injury: The definition of actual malice in 27-1-221, adopted in 1987 for purposes of punitive damages, did not change the standard used to determine whether an injury was intentional for purposes of the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act. The definition of malice in 1-1-204 is still applicable to workers' compensation cases. Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993), followed in Lockwood v. W.R. Grace & Co., 272 M 202, 900 P2d 314, 52 St. Rep. 705 (1995).

Trench Collapse Not Intentional Harm — Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy: When a trench collapsed on a worker installing pipe, there was nothing to indicate an intentional and malicious act on the part of the employer. The conduct was, at most, gross negligence; therefore, the exclusivity clause of the Workers' Compensation Act applied. Adsem v. Roske, 224 M 269, 728 P2d 1352, 43 St. Rep. 2188 (1986).

Intentional Act — Scope of Policy Exclusion: Alfred Elwell was injured when defendant squirted chemical smoke into the air chamber of Elwell's respirator. The action was outside the coverage of the Workers' Compensation Act because premised on an intentional act. Plaintiff brought declaratory judgment action to determine rights, liabilities, and duties under a home owner's policy it issued to defendant. Plaintiff contended a clause in its policy referring to "bodily injury or property damage which is either expected or intended" was the same as the intentional act exclusion under workers' compensation. Defendant contended the act was a practical joke, and no injury was intended. The Supreme Court held that 39-71-413 permits the filing of a third-party action where acts of an employee are intentional, irrespective of whether the results of the act were intended. The agreed facts in this case form the basis for such a third-party action. These same facts are not excluded by the insurance policy language relating to intended injury or damage. Millers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Strainer, 204 M 162, 663 P2d 338, 40 St. Rep. 743 (1983). See also Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23, 54 St. Rep. 1321 (1997).

Failure to Award Exemplary Damages: The jury's failure to award exemplary or punitive damages was not equivalent to a finding of no malice so as to bar the award of actual or compensatory damages. Poeppel v. Fisher, 175 M 136, 572 P2d 912 (1977).

No Intentional and Malicious Act as Matter of Law: Where injured employee had gotten along well with defendant foreman up to the time of accident, and could not say that the foreman had anything personal against him, and where it appeared that the foreman was away from the jobsite at the time of the accident, the provision permitting an injured worker to bring suit against a coworker if his injuries were the result of the coworker's "intentional and malicious act or omission", was inapplicable as a matter of law. Boyer v. Kloepfer, 170 M 472, 554 P2d 1116 (1976).

Employee's Remedy Against Employer for Assault: When employee's coworker's claim of assault consisted merely of "pats on the rear" and being called "sweetheart", nominal damages were justified because in a working environment a "pat on the rear" is hardly actionable assault and battery, for the law disregards trifles. Brown v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 167 M 418, 539 P2d 374 (1975).

Exclusive Remedy:

Where electric company's independent contractor was specifically required to carry workers' compensation insurance, an employee of the contractor could not bring an action in tort against the electric company for injuries he suffered when a pole broke. Buerkle v. Mont. Power Co., 157 M 57, 482 P2d 564 (1971).

Employee who had received workers' compensation benefits for personal injury was precluded from maintaining action against owner of 98% of corporate stock on theory he was coemployee, since act granted immunity to coemployees. Baird v. Remoir, 156 M 348, 480 P2d 186 (1971).

Injured employee receiving workers' compensation benefits was barred from seeking damages for same injuries in negligence action against coemployee. Madison v. Pierce, 156 M 209, 478 P2d 860 (1970).

Where employee was injured while performing work assigned to him under contract between his employer and second company, failure of second company to file timely injury report with Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) prevented it from invoking exclusive jurisdiction in Board as "exclusive remedy" after employee filed civil suit in District Court. State ex rel. Broesder v. Indus. Accident Bd., 154 M 178, 461 P2d 456 (1969).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 172 in (5), at end of second sentence deleted "and may not be reopened by the department" and inserted third sentence concerning mediation of subrogation dispute; and in (7), at end of second sentence after "subrogation", deleted "and may not be reopened by the department" and inserted third sentence regarding mediation of subrogation dispute. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Transition: Section 10, Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided: "Any surplus funds remaining in the underinsured employers' fund on [the effective date of this section] must be deposited in the uninsured employers' fund provided in 39-71-502 [now repealed]." Section 12(2), Ch. 172, L. 1997, provided that sec. 10 was effective on passage and approval. Approved March 28, 1997.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 459 substituted second sentence of (6)(a) regarding insurer subrogation rights for former sentence that read: "The insurer may subrogate against the entire settlement or award of a third-party claim brought by the claimant or his personal representative, without regard to the nature of the damages"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 323 substituted (5) regarding stipulation of the proportion of a third-party settlement allocable under subrogation for former (5) that read: "(5) If the amount of compensation and other benefits payable under the Workers' Compensation Act have not been fully determined at the time the employee, the employee's heirs or personal representatives, or the insurer have settled in any manner the action as provided for in this section, the department shall determine what proportion of the settlement shall be allocated under subrogation. The department's determination may be appealed to the workers' compensation judge". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 574 inserted (7) relating to stipulations covering third-party settlements. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (6) permitting insurer full subrogation even though claimant is not fully compensated and allowing full subrogation upon settlement of wrongful death claim.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Collateral Source Reduction of Judgment for Workers' Compensation Payments: Because a workers' compensation insurer is entitled under this section to subrogation for all compensation and benefits paid or to be paid, payments may not be deducted from a judgment as a collateral source under 27-1-308, which allows a collateral source deduction from a judgment, but not if the collateral source payor has a subrogation right. Therefore, the trial court properly refused to deduct ongoing workers' compensation death benefits and erroneously deducted workers' compensation medical and funeral expense payments. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Question of Fact as to Whether Claimant Made Whole — Subrogation Interests: An insurer is not entitled to invade a claimant's paid third-party claim via subrogation until the claimant has been made whole. The question of whether a claimant has been made whole is a question of fact, not a question of law, dependent on the level of the claimant's physical recovery and the extent of the claimant's compensation through benefits paid or damages recouped. Pursuant to Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 266, 794 P2d 335 (1990), no distinction is made between voluntary and nonvoluntary settlements when articulating the rule regarding an insurer's right to subrogation. In this case, a third-party settlement that did not in fact represent the amount necessary to make the claimant whole could not be relied on to entitle an insurer as a matter of law to a subrogation interest in the settlement proceeds. Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 279 M 472, 929 P2d 205, 53 St. Rep. 1241 (1996), overruling Brandner v. Travelers Ins. Co., 179 M 208, 587 P2d 933 (1978), and Getten v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 240 M 90, 782 P2d 1267 (1989).

Jurisdiction to Allocate Settlement Funds Affirmed — Maximum Healing Not Required: Wildin was injured in a car accident during her employment, and her employer's insurer, CNA Insurance Company (CNA), paid over $35,000 to her in medical and disability benefits. Wildin then sued State Farm Fire and Casualty Company (State Farm), the insurer of the other driver, and contacted CNA to see if it would join the suit. No answer was received, so Wildin and State Farm proceeded to settle her suit for $15,000. CNA would not agree to the settlement. Wildin then filed a petition with the Department of Labor and Industry to have the settlement funds allocated. The examiner concluded that the Department had jurisdiction to allocate the funds and allocated one-third to CNA and two-thirds to Wildin, after deducting attorney fees. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court held that there is no provision in 39-71-412 that requires an insurer to consent before suit can be brought and no requirement in this section that an insurer consent to settlement of the suit. Moreover, as far as Wildin and State Farm were concerned, they had done everything necessary under subsection (5) of this section (prior to 1991 amendment) to settle the suit before Wildin petitioned to allocate the funds. Citing this section and First Interstate Bank v. Tom Sherry Tire, 235 M 48, 764 P2d 1287 (1988), the Supreme Court also held that maximum healing does not have to occur before a claimant can settle a claim. The Department therefore had jurisdiction to issue the allocation order. Wildin v. CNA Insurance Co., 256 M 354, 846 P2d 1022, 50 St. Rep. 108 (1993).

Portion of Workers' Compensation Subrogation Statute Unconstitutional Impairment of Right to Full Redress: Subsection (6)(a) of this section, which directs that an insurer has a right to subrogate even though the injured worker's damages exceed his total recoveries, has the effect of legislatively overruling the equitable theory that subrogation cannot begin until the injured worker is made whole, and that subsection is in violation of the constitutional right to legal redress expressed in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., in that it restricts an injured worker's right to full redress against third-party tortfeasors. In a case of reasonably clear liability in which a claimant is forced to settle for the limits of an insurance policy that, together with claimant's workers' compensation award, do not grant full legal redress to claimant under general tort law, an insurer is not entitled to subrogation rights under workers' compensation law. Francetich v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 252 M 215, 827 P2d 1279, 49 St. Rep. 222 (1992), following Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977), and White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272 (1983), distinguishing Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488 (1989), and overruling Brandner v. Travelers Ins. Co., 179 M 208, 587 P2d 933 (1978). See also Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234 (1985), and Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335 (1990).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Workers' Compensation Claimant's Comparative Negligence Not Applicable in Determining Eligibility — Subrogation Appropriate Only After Claimant Made Whole: McMillan was injured in January 1987 while his employer was performing logging work for the U.S. government. McMillan filed a worker's compensation claim in Montana for which the state did not dispute liability, and he then filed an action under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The federal District Court determined that McMillan was entitled to recover $4,762,686 in damages from the United States, diminished by 45% for McMillan's comparative negligence to $2,619,477. The State Compensation Insurance Fund (State Fund) then sought a determination from the Workers' Compensation Court that the State Fund could assert a subrogation claim against McMillan's recovery from the United States and cease paying benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court held that the full measure of McMillan's loss was $4,762,686, the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court, and that pursuant to the equitable "made whole" doctrine articulated in In re Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335 (1990), McMillan must recover that amount, plus the costs of recovery, before the State Fund was entitled to subrogation. The State Fund appealed, contending that the amount necessary to make McMillan whole was actually $2,619,477 after taking into account McMillan's comparative negligence, plus attorney fees and costs of recovery. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Zacher formula does not contemplate a deduction from a claimant's entire loss for comparative negligence, in accordance with state law, which does not consider a claimant's fault in determining eligibility. Reducing the calculation of McMillan's entire loss, and thus his eligibility for benefits, for comparative negligence would introduce a claimant's fault into the workers' compensation system in violation of Montana law. Thus, the State Fund's subrogation interest could be properly asserted only after McMillan recovered the full amount of the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. McMillan, 2001 MT 168, 306 M 155, 31 P3d 347 (2001).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Workers' Compensation Subrogation Right Created by Statute — Subrogation Agreement Not Created by Correspondence Between Attorneys for Claimant and Insurer: Roadarmel suffered an industrial injury and filed a workers' compensation claim against his employer, and the claim was defended by Royal Insurance Company (Royal). Roadarmel received a judgment and then filed a third-party action against two companies that had supplied the chemicals that injured him. Roadarmel's attorney, White, properly notified Royal that the third-party action was being commenced. Pursuant to this section, Roadarmel requested that Royal pay a portion of the costs, and Royal agreed to participate in the costs rather than waive its subrogation rights, tendering a check for $5,000 toward the costs. Roadarmel was successful in the third-party action, and White advised Royal that the third parties would appeal. The appeal was upheld, and White notified Royal of that fact, attaching copies of the settlement check and jury verdict forms, a breakdown of the actual costs of the third-party action, and a request that Royal determine its subrogation interest in a portion of the third-party proceeds. Royal independently computed the amount that it contended that it was owed and advised Roadarmel in letters that an action would be filed to determine Royal's subrogation interests. White did not respond to the letters, and 3 1/2 years passed before Royal filed a petition to determine its subrogation rights. Royal later learned through discovery that White had disbursed the third-party proceeds on the same day that Royal had been requested to determine its subrogation interest, allegedly instructing Roadarmel to hold the funds pending a subrogation determination. Royal then also filed a separate count against White for an alleged breach of the duty of trust owed Royal as a third-party beneficiary of the trust imposed on the third-party proceeds. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that a subrogation agreement had been formed in the exchange of letters between White and Royal's counsel, that the statute of limitations on the contract had not expired, and that Roadarmel and White were jointly and severally liable for $63,864.79 for breaching the subrogation contract and failing to honor Royal's first lien of the third-party judgment. Roadarmel and White appealed, contending that Royal's subrogation action was based on a statutory liability that was time-barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-211 and that the 3-year statute of limitations in 72-34-511, which governs actions based on an alleged breach of trust, also barred Royal's action against White. Royal argued that the correspondence between the parties formed an enforceable contract that was subject to the longer statute of limitations in 27-2-202. The Supreme Court agreed with Roadarmel and White. The correspondence only confirmed in writing that which was required by and took place entirely in the context of the mandatory statutory procedures and did not create an enforceable contract. Although the court recognized the rights of equitable subrogation at common law, those rights were conceptually distinguished from an insurer's first lien against third-party proceeds recovered by an injured employee, which constitutes a statutory liability amounting to an unqualified right of reimbursement not found at common law. As set out in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Glassing, 269 M 76, 887 P2d 218 (1994), the concept of subrogation merely gives the insurer the right to prosecute the cause of action that the insurer possessed, so the insurer's claim by subrogation, being purely derivative, is subject to the same statute of limitations as though the cause of action were sued upon by the insured. The statutory right to reimbursement or recoupment is distinguishable from the insurer's right of subrogation proper. Thus, Royal's claim against Roadarmel, being based on a liability created by statute, was time-barred under 27-2-211(1)(c). Further, Royal's breach of trust claim against White was time-barred by 72-34-511. Because Royal's statutory lien was extinguished as a matter of law 2 years after Royal received notice that the third-party action was settled, by the time that the statute of limitations on White's actions began to run, even if that time was determined to be the date on which he disbursed the third-party funds, he could no longer be characterized as a trustee, constructive or otherwise, of the third-party proceeds. The case was reversed and remanded for summary judgment in favor of Roadarmel and White. Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105, 57 St. Rep. 1080 (2000).

Contract Based Upon Mutual Mistake as to Workers' Compensation Law on Subrogation Rights of Insurer: Brown entered into a settlement agreement with the State Fund for $52,329.17, less $18,666.67 characterized as the "subrogation due the State Fund". Brown then pursued a third-party claim and settled for less than the policy limits. After the Supreme Court's decision in Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335 (1990), holding that an insurer is not entitled to subrogation unless the claimant is fully compensated for the injury, Brown sued to recover the money withheld by the State Fund. The Supreme Court held that Brown was entitled to rescind the agreement because the parties had made a mutual mistake as to state law that pertains to subrogation rights. However, the Supreme Court refused to award Brown the money retained by the State Fund on the basis that the whole agreement was void and that the lower court would have to determine the amount of money that Brown was entitled to receive. Brown v. Richard A. Murphy, Inc., 261 M 275, 862 P2d 406, 50 St. Rep. 1330 (1993).

No Subrogation Unless Claimant Made Whole:

Under the law of this section as it read at the time of injury in 1983 (but prior to the 1987 general revision), when a claimant recovers against a third party, an insurer has no subrogation rights until the claimant has been made whole for his entire loss and any costs of recovery, including attorney fees. In determining whether a claimant has been whole, the amounts received and to be received under the claim must be added to amounts received or to be received from third party claims and also added to the costs of recovery, including attorney fees. When that total equals claimant's entire loss, the insurer is entitled to subrogation from all amounts received by the claimant in excess of his entire loss pursuant to this section. In re Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335, 47 St. Rep. 1167 (1990), followed in Brown v. Richard A. Murphy, Inc., 261 M 275, 862 P2d 406, 50 St. Rep. 1330 (1993), and expressly overruling Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234 (1985), and Getten v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 240 M 90, 782 P2d 1267, 46 St. Rep. 1967 (1989), to the extent those cases contain requirements that may be interpreted as adding to this holding. The Zacher decision was clarified and expanded in Francetich v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 252 M 215, 827 P2d 1279, 49 St. Rep. 222 (1992). Zacher was also followed in St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. McMillan, 2001 MT 168, 306 M 155, 31 P3d 347 (2001).

The insurer is not entitled to subrogation rights under 39-71-414 when, in a case of reasonably clear liability, the claimant is forced to settle a third-party claim for the amount of the insurance policy limits of the third-party tortfeasor and when the amount of the settlement, together with the claimant's workers' compensation award, does not grant full legal redress to the claimant. Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234, 42 St. Rep. 1502 (1985).

Jurisdiction Prior to Division Determination of Subrogation Rights: The claimant received $25,000 from his own insurer, and the State Fund ordered him to pay $12,500 of those funds over to the Fund under its subrogation rights. The Workers' Compensation Court ordered the money returned, stating that the Fund had no right to any of the money until the Division made a determination as to subrogation rights. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the Workers' Compensation Court did not have jurisdiction to determine subrogation rights, it did have jurisdiction to determine that the Fund had no right to claim any subrogation funds prior to a ruling by the Division. Malek v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 311, 709 P2d 965, 47 St. Rep. 568 (1990).

Jurisdiction of Division to Compute Amount of Subrogation Prior to Settlement of Third-Party Claim: Representatives of the deceased brought a third-party wrongful death action against the driver of the other vehicle in an accident resulting in the decedent's death. The insurer sought subrogation against the economic portion of the wrongful death recovery. The Supreme Court ruled that the Division had jurisdiction to determine the subrogation rights of the insurer because in the case before it, the third-party claim had not yet been settled. Getten v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 240 M 90, 782 P2d 1267, 46 St. Rep. 1967 (1989).

Settling Claim Well Within Policy Limits — Full Legal Redress: The representatives of the deceased argued that the insurer was not entitled to subrogation because the estate had not received full legal redress in the wrongful death action brought on the decedent's behalf. The Supreme Court ruled that subrogation was available because the wrongful death suit had been settled for $1.5 million when more than $6 million was available and that settling well within the policy limits constituted full legal redress. Getten v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 240 M 90, 782 P2d 1267, 46 St. Rep. 1967 (1989).

Forum for Determination of Subrogation Rights — Third Party Action: When the settlement of a third-party action precedes full determination of the claim, the Workers' Compensation Division is the proper forum for resolving the issue of the proper amount of subrogation allocated to the insurer. First Interstate Bank of Missoula v. EBI Co./Orion Group, 235 M 48, 764 P2d 1287, 45 St. Rep. 2150 (1988).

Subrogation Rights Based on Full Legal Redress: The Workers' Compensation Court, relying on 39-71-414(1), concluded that Elwell's employer, ASARCO, was entitled to subrogation against Elwell's third-party settlement from a coemployee. On appeal, Elwell contended that although he was receiving the maximum benefits allowed under the Workers' Compensation Act, they were not sufficient to compensate him for his injury, so ASARCO was not entitled to subrogation. The Supreme Court, citing its decision in Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234, 42 St. Rep. 1502 (1985), held that when a claimant is forced, in a case of clear liability, because of maximum limits of an insurance policy, into a settlement with a third-party tortfeasor, the amount of which settlement, together with claimant's workers' compensation award, does not give the claimant full legal redress, the insurer or the employer is not entitled to subrogation rights under 39-71-414 until the claimant has attained full legal redress. A question of fact exists as to whether the total prospective workers' compensation benefits, plus the recovery from the third-party insurer, will give the claimant full legal redress. The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court was reversed and the cause remanded for a determination of whether full legal redress was obtained, and if that is the case, ASARCO would then be entitled to subrogation for that portion which exceeded full legal redress. Elwell v. Am. Smelting & Ref., Inc., 219 M 248, 711 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 1992 (1985).

Who Entitled to Interest on Funds in Escrow: Claimant Elwell negotiated a third-party settlement against a coemployee for $50,000, the policy limit. He incurred attorney fees of $16,500 and costs of $30, leaving a net recovery of $33,470. Pursuant to 39-71-414(2)(d), Elwell was entitled to one-third, or $11,157. Employer ASARCO asserted a subrogation right to the $22,313 balance, which right was disputed by Elwell. The parties invested the disputed money in a tax-exempt money market fund, drawing interest at a variable rate. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that Elwell was entitled to the interest on the disputed amount, but on appeal ASARCO claimed the court was in error in awarding Elwell the interest. The Supreme Court held that since Elwell's right to the $22,313 was dependent on whether his benefits plus his recovery from the third-party insurer constituted full legal redress, a determination of which of the parties is entitled to the interest is dependent upon who has the right to the proceeds or any portion thereof. In the event the Workers' Compensation Court, on remand, determines ASARCO is entitled to a portion or all of the $22,313, it will also be entitled to the interest earned in the same proportion. Otherwise, Elwell is entitled to the interest accumulation. Elwell v. Am. Smelting & Ref., Inc., 219 M 248, 711 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 1992 (1985).

Insurer Liable to Noncovered Subcontractor Entitled to Subrogation: Claimant was injured while delivering newspapers for her fiance, who had contracted with the Billings Gazette to deliver its newspaper. The Gazette's insurer, Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company, became liable under 39-71-405 when it was determined that the fiance failed to provide workers' compensation coverage for his employee, the claimant. When Hartford denied the compensation claim, claimant settled with a third party suspected of causing the automobile accident, for a sum much less than might have been expected from a trial and judgment. After settlement, Hartford claimed subrogation against the amount received in settlement. The Workers' Compensation Court awarded benefits to claimant, and the Supreme Court affirmed. On remand to the lower court to determine costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court held that Hartford was entitled to the proceeds of subrogation under 39-71-414. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that a claimant is bound by all provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act which provide for subrogation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Full Subrogation Denied — Equivocal Notice of Election to Participate: That insurer was entertaining a reservation about whether it would participate in the payment of attorney fees was buttressed by correspondence from the adjuster which stated: "I can appreciate your concern over our principal's refusal to make a substantial advance to cover costs, as I am sure that Mrs. Sorum [claimant] does not have the funds available to readily advance these funds. However, we would be agreeable to participating on a pro rata basis, the incurred costs of discovery, and would also furnish the services of our own attorney to assist you. I would question very seriously that we would have any obligation to participate in the cost of attorney's fees incurred to prosecute the declaratory judgment action. I wish to point out that the law clearly states that we are entitled to a 50% recovery of the total benefits we have paid, regardless of whether we participate in any manner. This, understandably, is one of the reasons why the company is not agreeable to making advances along the lines you have previously suggested." No other interpretation of the foregoing language is possible except that the company was hedging with respect to sharing the payment of attorney fees. Therefore, the insurer was only entitled to a 50% subrogation. Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983).

No Right of Insurer to Prosecute or Impose Attorney's Services Unless Claimant Fails to Institute: The claimant has a right to his own attorney in a third-party action, and the employer and its insurer have no right to impose another attorney's services or prosecute such an action unless the claimant refuses or fails to institute the action within 1 year from the date of the injury. Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983).

Requisites for Election of Insurer to Participate — Speed, Explicitness, and Limitations: It should be apparent that when a request is made upon an insurer under this section for payment of a share of the attorney fees and costs of an action against a responsible third party, the response of the insurer as to its intention should be explicit, immediate, and without reservation. Such a response is necessary because it will aid the claimant's attorney to evaluate the claim from his client's viewpoint and will give assurance to the claimant that costs will be shared as incurred if the suit is unsuccessful. Further, it means that attorney fees in the third-party suit will be shared in those cases where the claimant is responsible for fees. Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983).

No Subrogation From Wrongful Death Action: Swanson's husband was killed in the course of his employment. The Workers' Compensation insurer paid Swanson in full satisfaction of its obligation. Swanson then brought an action against a third party for the death of her husband and reached a settlement. The Workers' Compensation insurer then sought subrogation out of the settlement. After discussing the difference between a survival action and wrongful death and distinguishing Fisher v. Missoula White Pine Sash Co., 164 M 41, 518 P2d 759 (1974), the Supreme Court concluded that the subrogation rights of the insurer do not extend to recoveries made under wrongful death unless the death was instantaneous and there is no survival action. If the death is instantaneous, the insurer is entitled to subrogation from that portion of the judgment or settlement that represents economic loss as opposed to noneconomic loss. Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 639 (1982). See also Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983), for discussion of the Swanson rule.

Contract to Indemnify — Other Legal Transaction: The contract between the general contractor and a subcontractor contained an indemnity provision. An employee of the subcontractor was injured and recovered a judgment against the general contractor. The contractor then sued to enforce the indemnity clause. The subcontractor was forced to indemnify. The Supreme Court held that a contract of indemnity falls within the "other legal transaction" exception to the general rule that an employer who has paid an employee benefits pursuant to a workers' compensation claim is not subject to further liability arising out of injuries as to third parties claiming contribution for indemnity. Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

Subcontractor to Indemnify Contractor: The contract between Wright, the general contractor, and De Beer, the subcontractor, contained an indemnity provision. An employee of De Beer's was injured and recovered a judgment against Wright. Wright sued to enforce the indemnity clause. The Supreme Court found that the clause included not only the negligence of De Beer but also that of Wright. It made no difference whether Wright was actively or passively negligent. Further, a covenant not to sue between the employee and De Beer had no effect on the operation of the clause. Wright Constr. Co. v. De Beer Mechanical Constr. Co., 185 M 47, 604 P2d 323, 36 St. Rep. 2385 (1979).

No Conflict Between Statutes — Subrogation: If an employer is not liable by way of indemnity or contribution to a third party, he may, even though himself negligent, recover from the third person through the injured employee under the subrogation rights created by law. There is no conflict between 27-1-703 and this section. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86, 36 St. Rep. 2107 (1979). (Comment: 27-1-703 was amended in 1981.)

Allocation When Insurer Elects Not to Participate in Third-Party Costs: When the insurer does not participate in the costs of the third-party action, it is entitled to 50% of the subrogation rights, but the recovery is limited to and hinged upon the right of the injured worker to receive one-third of the amount recovered in the third-party action, after costs and attorney fees have been deducted. Brandner v. Travelers Ins. Co., 179 M 208, 587 P2d 933 (1978), distinguished in Hall v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 218 M 180, 708 P2d 234, 42 St. Rep. 1502 (1985), and overruled in Francetich v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 252 M 215, 827 P2d 1279, 49 St. Rep. 222 (1992). See also Butori v. Bruce Metcalf Sportsman 66, 228 M 52, 740 P2d 1126, 44 St. Rep. 1335 (1987).

Constitutionality: Since the allowance of subrogation in workers' compensation cases is in the furtherance of equity and justice, the claimant is not thereby deprived of his full legal redress, and the law is constitutional. Brandner v. Travelers Ins. Co., 179 M 208, 587 P2d 933 (1978).

Allocation When Insurer Participates in Third-Party Costs: A Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) order that the insurer must pay costs and attorney fees on a continuous basis in proportion to the insurer's recovery against a third-party judgment was correct. Tuttle v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 177 M 166, 580 P2d 1379 (1978).

Purpose of Subrogation Provision: The purpose of the subrogation provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act is to compensate the employer and insurer to some extent for the additional liability they assume under the Act for wrongful actions of third-party tortfeasors. Tuttle v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 177 M 166, 580 P2d 1379 (1978).

Subrogation — Oral Agreement: Where there was oral contract to compromise subrogation rights alleged, there was issue of fact concerning its existence, and plaintiff was entitled to trial by jury. Therefore, action for declaratory judgment to construe alleged contract was improper. State ex rel. Indus. Indem. Co. v. District Court, 169 M 10, 544 P2d 438 (1975).

Subrogation to Wrongful Death Settlement: Subrogation rights of employer's insurer extended to wrongful death benefits recovered from third-party tortfeasor by worker's surviving kin. Fisher v. Missoula White Pine Sash Co., 164 M 41, 518 P2d 795 (1974), holding that statement in Hardware Mutual Cas. Co. v. Butler, 116 M 73, 148 P2d 563 (1944), that subrogation rights of employer and insurer against third-party tortfeasor may exist independently of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) was dictum and should be disregarded.

Uninsured Motorist Coverage Receipts: It is not permissible for an insurance company to reduce its liability under an uninsured motorist clause by workers' compensation benefits, and the Insurance Commissioner had no authority to approve a policy providing for such a reduction. Sullivan v. Doe, 159 M 50, 495 P2d 193 (1972).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 in (1) after "may" inserted "after mediation pursuant to department rules" and after "petition" substituted "the workers' compensation court for resolution of the dispute" for "a department of labor and industry appeals referee for resolution of the dispute in accordance with 39-51-1109 and may appeal from a decision of the appeals referee in the same manner as prescribed in 39-51-2403 and 39-51-2404"; and in (2) after "chapter" inserted "and after mediating pursuant to department rule". Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(1), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Case Notes

Administrative Procedure Applicable to Determining Questions of Status of Workers: The legislative intent of this section was to create a single administrative procedure for settling disputes over the status of workers as employees or independent contractors. Worker status implicates more than just collection of workers' compensation premiums; it also involves the right of the state to collect unemployment compensation contributions and has other state and federal implications. The Supreme Court found that this procedure was established as a more comprehensive examination of worker status and was the appropriate procedure to follow in determining status questions. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Sky Country, Inc., 239 M 376, 780 P2d 1135, 46 St. Rep. 1760 (1989).

Case Notes

Workers' Compensation Benefit Reduction Provision Violative of Right to Full Legal Redress: Under subsection (1) of this section, an insurer was entitled to reduce by 30% the benefits otherwise payable to an injured worker if the worker received anything short of full legal redress. The effect of this provision was to transfer dollars recovered from a third-party tortfeasor back to the insurer, which plainly violates the constitutional entitlement to full legal redress. The statute did not create a new class of benefits or eliminate any benefits, nor was it dictated by federal law; rather, it simply allowed the automatic and arbitrary reduction of benefits whenever a worker obtained a third-party settlement or award. The District Court did not err in finding the benefit reduction provision to be an unconstitutional violation of the right to full legal redress. Connery v. Liberty NW. Ins. Case Notes

Issue of Department of Labor and Industry Jurisdiction Raised in Two Separate Hearings — Collateral Estoppel Applicable — Due Process Rights Not Implicated When Party Fails to Pursue Available Remedies: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Department of Labor and Industry should have allowed plaintiff to raise the argument that State Fund had improperly canceled plaintiff's policy for nonpayment of a premium as a defense to the claim by the Uninsured Employers' Fund for assessments and penalties. The court said that the issue was not barred by collateral estoppel because an order from a first hearing only determined whether the Department had subject matter jurisdiction over contract disputes between an insurance carrier and its policyholder (a determination that plaintiff did not appeal) and did not address the issue raised in a second hearing, which was whether the Department had jurisdiction to determine coverage in a proceeding seeking a penalty and indemnification. The court held that collateral estoppel did not apply because the issues in the two hearings were not identical. The court went on to hold that the Department did have jurisdiction, through its quasi-judicial power, to resolve the dispute regarding whether State Fund had rightfully canceled the policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. In the first case, a hearings officer determined that the Department did not have subject matter jurisdiction over the contractual dispute between plaintiff and State Fund, noting that proper adjudication would be in the District Court. The Department only has jurisdiction granted to it by statute, and the adjudication of insurance contracts does not fall within its jurisdiction. Plaintiff's failure to appeal the issue from the first hearing precluded it from arguing that the Department did have jurisdiction over the insurance contract dispute regarding a penalty and indemnification in the second hearing, so relitigation of the jurisdiction question in the second proceeding was barred by collateral estoppel. Further, it was error to give the Department jurisdiction to adjudicate the insurance contract dispute pursuant to its general quasi-judicial powers because an administrative agency may not assume jurisdiction without express delegation by the Legislature and there is no statutory delegation of authority to the Department to resolve contract disputes. Rather, regulation of insurance contracts is governed by the Insurance Commissioner and the relevant statutes relating to insurance disputes. The Department cannot and should not be adjudicating disputes between insurance companies and employers. The Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that plaintiff was denied due process when it was prevented from presenting evidence relating to the insurance contract between itself and State Fund was also erroneous. Plaintiff had the opportunity to appeal the initial Department order to the Workers' Compensation Court, but failed to do so. Plaintiff also had the opportunity to pursue its remedies against State Fund in District Court, but again failed to do so. There is no denial of due process when a party fails to pursue the remedies provided. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Uninsured Employers' Fund Not Required to Resolve Insurance Disputes — Burden of Proving That Employer Uninsured Properly Met: Plaintiff carried a workers' compensation policy with State Fund. Following nonpayment of a premium, State Fund canceled plaintiff's coverage effective February 1, 1996. Plaintiff issued a premium check, but did not mail it until after the cancellation date. State Fund received the check and cashed it, applying the amount to the unpaid portion of the policy. Plaintiff believed that because the check was cashed, coverage was continued. Two months later, one of plaintiff's employees was injured on the job and filed a claim with State Fund, which again informed plaintiff that coverage had been canceled and sent plaintiff an application to reenroll. Coverage became effective shortly thereafter. Upon a request for review, State Fund determined that it had complied with the contract terms and properly canceled the policy and refused to backdate the new policy. Because plaintiff was not covered under the original policy at the time of the accident, the claim was forwarded to the Employment Relations Division's Uninsured Employers' Fund (UEF). Following a determination that the employee was not covered at the time of the accident, UEF paid the employee's medical bills, assessed a penalty against plaintiff for the period of noncoverage, and presented plaintiff with a claim for indemnification for the medical bills. Plaintiff requested a contested case hearing before the Department of Labor and Industry, arguing that State Fund had improperly canceled the policy. The hearings officer dismissed the request on grounds that the Department lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the issue because plaintiff was seeking a remedy or the enforcement of a right founded in the insurance contract, thus giving the District Court jurisdiction. Plaintiff did not appeal the decision to the Workers' Compensation Court, but instead requested another contested case hearing with the Department to challenge UEF's determination that plaintiff was an uninsured employer and also contested the penalty and raised two other issues related to the propriety of State Fund's policy cancellation. The hearings officer again refused to consider plaintiff's contention that it was insured at the time of the injury, based on plaintiff's failure to appeal the prior jurisdictional decision. At the hearing, a UEF compliance specialist testified that national and state databases both showed that coverage had been canceled, and plaintiff did not present evidence of any other coverage, so the hearings officer concluded that UEF met its burden of proof that plaintiff was uninsured and held plaintiff liable for the penalty and medical benefits. On appeal, the Workers' Compensation Court reversed, holding that in order to meet its burden of proof, UEF needed to prove not only that the insurance was canceled but also that State Fund's cancellation of the policy was legally correct. The court found that the hearings officer had improperly shifted the burden of proof from UEF to plaintiff, resulting in a violation of plaintiff's due process rights to contest the allegation that it was uninsured. The Supreme Court reversed, agreeing instead with the hearings officer that UEF met its burden by establishing that plaintiff was not insured on the date of the injury. The responsibility of sorting through claims and defenses between an employer and its insurer does not fall on UEF, which is merely a safety net for injured workers of uninsured employers, but rather it is the responsibility of the employer to resolve disputes with the insurance carrier. To impose any more onerous requirement on UEF would frustrate the intent of UEF. Having confirmed that plaintiff was uninsured, UEF was statutorily required to pay the injured employee the same benefits that would have been received had plaintiff been insured and was not obligated to do more. Thus, the Workers' Compensation Court erred in holding that UEF failed to prove that plaintiff was an uninsured employer. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Failure to Acknowledge Employee on Payroll — Employer Uninsured — Exclusive Remedy Unavailable: Defendant employer hired plaintiff employee Buerkley "under the table". Buerkley did not submit an employment application and was not required to comply with any existing hiring procedures; he did not use a time clock as did other employees; his paycheck was not drawn from the employer's payroll account, and no deductions were taken from his paycheck; he was not held out to others as an employee; and he was not reported as an employee on the payroll reports provided to the trust by which employees were provided coverage for work-related injuries. Buerkley was injured on the job, after which he submitted the proper application paperwork, backdated to a date prior to the injury; he began using the timeclock; and his paychecks began to reflect deductions for workers' compensation coverage. The trust adjusters found that Buerkley was entitled to compensation, but Buerkley rejected a settlement offer and sought damages in District Court, at which time the trust adjusters discovered the falsified employment records. Buerkley contended that an employer who has not properly complied with the requirements of 39-71-401 is an uninsured employer pursuant to this secton and, therefore, subject to the civil remedies provided in 39-71-508 and 39-71-515. He also contended that the employer should not, as a matter of law and public policy, be allowed to rely on the exclusive remedy in 39-71-411. Defendant's argued, and the District Court agreed, that whether or not plaintiff's employment was reported to the trust by which they were self-insured, they elected coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act, and thus the Workers' Compensation Act was Buerkley's exclusive remedy. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of the Workers' Compensation Act is to effectuate a compromise between industry and labor and cited 2A Larson, The Law of Workman's Compensation 65.40 (1998), for the premise that workers' compensation statutes are often described as a quid pro quo exchange of rights and remedies. However, the requisite quid pro quo is absent when an employer has deliberately avoided the cost of insuring an employee by failing to acknowledge the employee's existence in payroll records. In those cases, the employer should not be able to take refuge behind the exclusive remedy provision. Thus, for purposes of the remedies in part 5 of this chapter, Buerkley's employer was uninsured at the time of the injury and the exclusive remedy provision did not apply. Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999), following Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506 (1993).

Limitation on Entitlement to Uninsured Employers' Fund Benefits Not Equal Protection Violation or Restriction on Access to Courts: Zempel was injured while working for an enrolled tribal member on a reservation. Although the tribe carried insurance covering tribal members, Zempel's employer was not covered by workers' compensation insurance, nor was Zempel an enrolled tribal member. Zempel sought benefits from the tribe's insurer through tribal court, but it was determined that the employer was not required to carry insurance. Zempel then sought benefits under the uninsured employers' fund, but the claim was denied because the employer was not an uninsured employer as defined in this section. Zempel appealed on the grounds that this section deprived him of equal protection and violated his constitutional right of access to courts. However, equal protection does not require that all persons be treated alike regardless of whether their circumstances are the same but only that all persons be treated alike under like circumstances. Only injured employees of employers meeting the definition of uninsured employer contained in this section are entitled to the substitute workers' compensation benefits that the uninsured employers' fund was created to provide to injured employees of employers who have failed to properly comply with the law. The limitation on entitlement to uninsured employers' fund benefits bears a reasonable relationship to the purpose of that law because it is only those employers subject to the law in the first place upon whom the state can impose the reimbursement and penalty obligations that provide the source of the uninsured employers' fund benefits. Applying the rational basis test, the Supreme Court found no constitutional violation under this section on either issue because Zempel failed to meet the burden of establishing the invalidity of the statute. Zempel was not precluded from pursuing other remedies outside the Workers' Compensation Act. The Supreme Court offered a further observation that when Montana citizens avail themselves of jobs on Indian reservations, they agree to abide by tribal rules. Zempel v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 282 M 424, 938 P2d 658, 54 St. Rep. 415 (1997).

Self-Insured Employer Not Uninsured Employer Despite Subsequent Bankruptcy: Claimant suffered an industrial accident while working for a self-insured employer who accepted liability and paid temporary total benefits until going bankrupt, at which time benefits ceased. After benefits ceased, claimant petitioned for coverage from the uninsured employers' fund. Benefits were properly denied because at the time of injury and thereafter the employer was properly enrolled under plan No. 1 and paid benefits for approximately 2 years. Caldwell v. Great W. Sugar Co., 229 M 448, 746 P2d 627, 44 St. Rep. 2123 (1987).

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 27(1), Ch. 516, L. 1995, provided that this section applies retroactively to all occurrences beginning after October 1, 1977.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 inserted (3) statutorily appropriating amounts necessary to pay benefits; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In (2) deleted former first sentence that read: "Proper surpluses and reserves shall be kept for the fund" and inserted first through fourth sentences (see 1987 Session Law for text).

Case Notes

Constitutionality of Section Allowing Setoff to Claim Against Uninsured Employers' Fund: Thayer died from an injury on the job, after incurring medical expenses of $253,207.98. Because the employer did not carry workers' compensation insurance, Thayer's wife, Phyllis, was entitled to receive medical benefits and death benefits provided by the uninsured employers' fund, pursuant to this section. The fund paid $85,000 in medical cost reimbursement, which the state accepted in full satisfaction of its claim. Phyllis subsequently brought negligence actions against the employer and a coemployee and product liability actions against the retail seller and the manufacturer of the product that Thayer was using when he was fatally injured. The uninsured employers' fund discharged Phyllis's claim for wage loss benefits following her receipt of a $100,000 settlement from the employer, applying the setoff pursuant to 39-71-511 in order to discharge the remaining future benefits that Phyllis would have been entitled to receive from the fund, but did not seek recovery of any of the benefits paid to Phyllis prior to receipt of the settlement or the benefits paid based on the amounts recovered from third parties. Phyllis asserted that the setoff essentially gave the fund a subrogation interest in her settlement from the employer, that the fund could not subrogate until she was made whole, and that to hold otherwise would be a violation of her constitutional right to full legal redress. The Supreme Court disagreed. Because the fund is merely a legislatively provided safety net standing in place of the employer to provide some basis for recovery when the employer is impecunious, it is reasonable to condition the fund's obligations on the extent to which the employer fails to provide compensation. Further, because the fund is not an insurer, limiting the fund's obligation to the extent of the uninsured employer's ability to compensate the employee or the employee's family does not diminish the employee's right to full legal redress. The plain language of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., does not distinguish between third parties and uninsured employers. In this case, the employee was uninsured, so the exclusive remedy provision in 39-71-411 did not apply, and Phyllis could pursue benefits from the fund up to the amount of workers' compensation benefits that she would have received if the employer were insured. Also, pursuant to 39-71-509, Phyllis could bring a tort action against the employer in addition to any responsible third party. Thayer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 304, 297 M 179, 991 P2d 447, 56 St. Rep. 1223 (1999), following Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997).

1997 Amendments: Chapter 284 deleted former (3) that read: "(3) The department may determine that the $1,000 assessments that are charged against an insurer in each case of an industrial death under 39-71-902(1) must be paid to the uninsured employers' fund rather than the subsequent injury fund"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1998.

Chapter 310 in (1)(a), in middle of second sentence after "assessment", inserted "based"; in (1)(b) substituted "collect" for "receive"; in (2) substituted "collected" for "received"; deleted (3) that provided that the Department may determine that the $1,000 assessment charged against an insurer under 39-71-902(1) for an industrial death must be paid to the uninsured employers' fund and not the subsequent injury fund; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Transfer and Credit of Excess Subsequent Injury Funds: Section 6, Ch. 284, L. 1997, provided: "On or before September 1, 1997, the department of labor and industry shall transfer $3.5 million of the funds retained in the fund to the fund in 39-71-201 and credit the amount to offset the insurer's assessment for the administration fund as follows:

Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: At end of (2)(a) increased liability limit from $30,000 to $50,000; inserted (2)(b) providing that limitation does not apply to employer's liability to claimant or his beneficiaries; and inserted (4) allowing for assignment to injured employee of benefits from fund.

Issue of Department of Labor and Industry Jurisdiction Raised in Two Separate Hearings — Collateral Estoppel Applicable — Due Process Rights Not Implicated When Party Fails to Pursue Available Remedies: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Department of Labor and Industry should have allowed plaintiff to raise the argument that State Fund had improperly canceled plaintiff's policy for nonpayment of a premium as a defense to the claim by the Uninsured Employers' Fund for assessments and penalties. The court said that the issue was not barred by collateral estoppel because an order from a first hearing only determined whether the Department had subject matter jurisdiction over contract disputes between an insurance carrier and its policyholder (a determination that plaintiff did not appeal) and did not address the issue raised in a second hearing, which was whether the Department had jurisdiction to determine coverage in a proceeding seeking a penalty and indemnification. The court held that collateral estoppel did not apply because the issues in the two hearings were not identical. The court went on to hold that the Department did have jurisdiction, through its quasi-judicial power, to resolve the dispute regarding whether State Fund had rightfully canceled the policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. In the first case, a hearings officer determined that the Department did not have subject matter jurisdiction over the contractual dispute between plaintiff and State Fund, noting that proper adjudication would be in the District Court. The Department only has jurisdiction granted to it by statute, and the adjudication of insurance contracts does not fall within its jurisdiction. Plaintiff's failure to appeal the issue from the first hearing precluded it from arguing that the Department did have jurisdiction over the insurance contract dispute regarding a penalty and indemnification in the second hearing, so relitigation of the jurisdiction question in the second proceeding was barred by collateral estoppel. Further, it was error to give the Department jurisdiction to adjudicate the insurance contract dispute pursuant to its general quasi-judicial powers because an administrative agency may not assume jurisdiction without express delegation by the Legislature and there is no statutory delegation of authority to the Department to resolve contract disputes. Rather, regulation of insurance contracts is governed by the Insurance Commissioner and the relevant statutes relating to insurance disputes. The Department cannot and should not be adjudicating disputes between insurance companies and employers. The Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that plaintiff was denied due process when it was prevented from presenting evidence relating to the insurance contract between itself and State Fund was also erroneous. Plaintiff had the opportunity to appeal the initial Department order to the Workers' Compensation Court, but failed to do so. Plaintiff also had the opportunity to pursue its remedies against State Fund in District Court, but again failed to do so. There is no denial of due process when a party fails to pursue the remedies provided. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Uninsured Employers' Fund Not Required to Resolve Insurance Disputes — Burden of Proving That Employer Uninsured Properly Met: Plaintiff carried a workers' compensation policy with State Fund. Following nonpayment of a premium, State Fund canceled plaintiff's coverage effective February 1, 1996. Plaintiff issued a premium check, but did not mail it until after the cancellation date. State Fund received the check and cashed it, applying the amount to the unpaid portion of the policy. Plaintiff believed that because the check was cashed, coverage was continued. Two months later, one of plaintiff's employees was injured on the job and filed a claim with State Fund, which again informed plaintiff that coverage had been canceled and sent plaintiff an application to reenroll. Coverage became effective shortly thereafter. Upon a request for review, State Fund determined that it had complied with the contract terms and properly canceled the policy and refused to backdate the new policy. Because plaintiff was not covered under the original policy at the time of the accident, the claim was forwarded to the Employment Relations Division's Uninsured Employers' Fund (UEF). Following a determination that the employee was not covered at the time of the accident, UEF paid the employee's medical bills, assessed a penalty against plaintiff for the period of noncoverage, and presented plaintiff with a claim for indemnification for the medical bills. Plaintiff requested a contested case hearing before the Department of Labor and Industry, arguing that State Fund had improperly canceled the policy. The hearings officer dismissed the request on grounds that the Department lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the issue because plaintiff was seeking a remedy or the enforcement of a right founded in the insurance contract, thus giving the District Court jurisdiction. Plaintiff did not appeal the decision to the Workers' Compensation Court, but instead requested another contested case hearing with the Department to challenge UEF's determination that plaintiff was an uninsured employer and also contested the penalty and raised two other issues related to the propriety of State Fund's policy cancellation. The hearings officer again refused to consider plaintiff's contention that it was insured at the time of the injury, based on plaintiff's failure to appeal the prior jurisdictional decision. At the hearing, a UEF compliance specialist testified that national and state databases both showed that coverage had been canceled, and plaintiff did not present evidence of any other coverage, so the hearings officer concluded that UEF met its burden of proof that plaintiff was uninsured and held plaintiff liable for the penalty and medical benefits. On appeal, the Workers' Compensation Court reversed, holding that in order to meet its burden of proof, UEF needed to prove not only that the insurance was canceled but also that State Fund's cancellation of the policy was legally correct. The court found that the hearings officer had improperly shifted the burden of proof from UEF to plaintiff, resulting in a violation of plaintiff's due process rights to contest the allegation that it was uninsured. The Supreme Court reversed, agreeing instead with the hearings officer that UEF met its burden by establishing that plaintiff was not insured on the date of the injury. The responsibility of sorting through claims and defenses between an employer and its insurer does not fall on UEF, which is merely a safety net for injured workers of uninsured employers, but rather it is the responsibility of the employer to resolve disputes with the insurance carrier. To impose any more onerous requirement on UEF would frustrate the intent of UEF. Having confirmed that plaintiff was uninsured, UEF was statutorily required to pay the injured employee the same benefits that would have been received had plaintiff been insured and was not obligated to do more. Thus, the Workers' Compensation Court erred in holding that UEF failed to prove that plaintiff was an uninsured employer. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Jurisdiction and Nature of Workers' Compensation Court: A driver was injured while operating a tractor-trailer owned by one company and leased to another company that was in turn a division of a third company. The driver was awarded workers' compensation benefits. When the Workers' Compensation Uninsured Employers' Fund sought to collect the amount of the benefits from the company that owned the rig and from the third company, both companies denied any responsibility for the employment of the injured man. The Workers' Compensation Court and the Fund could not agree on the court's jurisdiction, and the instant appeal followed. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute involved benefits payable to the claimant, the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the legislative history relied upon by the Fund and the history of the court indicated that the jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Court went beyond adjudication of workers' claims only when a dispute is related to benefits payable to a claimant, and that the Workers' Compensation Court has declaratory power under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. However, once an election has been made to either take from the fund or pursue a damage action, the election is final and binding on the employee or the employee's beneficiaries, heirs, and personal representatives. An injured employee or the employee's beneficiaries may not receive both benefits from the fund and pursue a damage action"; and inserted (3) and (4) allowing action against employer under 39-71-515 and any other civil remedy provided by law.

Applicability of Tort Statute of Limitations to Independent Cause of Action for Failure to Maintain Workers' Compensation Insurance: Under 39-71-601, a statutory time limit is established for filing a claim with the Department; however, no limit is established within which a claim must be filed in District Court. As established in Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), an independent cause of action authorized by this section is ordinarily considered a negligence action, but strict liability may apply in certain situations. Therefore, the applicable statute of limitations for such actions is the tort statute of limitations of 3 years provided in 27-2-204. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Employee Claim Options Against Uninsured Employer — Concurrent Pursuit of Remedies Not Required: Employer sought dismissal of an action for failure to maintain workers' compensation insurance based on lack of subject matter jurisdiction, arguing that because the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction, all remedies must be pursued at the same time. An employee has several options for bringing claims against an uninsured employer pursuant to this section. However, the language regarding concurrent pursuit of remedies is permissive rather than mandatory. Therefore, a claimant is not required to file and pursue all claims at exactly the same time, and the receipt of benefits from the uninsured employers' fund does not bar a later action in District Court. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Self-Insured Employer Not Uninsured Employer Despite Subsequent Bankruptcy: Claimant suffered an industrial accident while working for a self-insured employer who accepted liability and paid temporary total benefits until going bankrupt, at which time benefits ceased. After benefits ceased, claimant petitioned for coverage from the uninsured employers' fund. Benefits were properly denied because at the time of injury and thereafter the employer was properly enrolled under plan No. 1 and paid benefits for approximately 2 years. Caldwell v. Great W. Sugar Co., 229 M 448, 746 P2d 627, 44 St. Rep. 2123 (1987).

Proof of Fault or Breach of Duty as Necessary for Recovery: In an action for damages against an uninsured employer pursuant to this section, an employee must establish a prima facie case of fault or breach of duty before he can recover for his injuries. Normally the action will be one in negligence; however, strict or vicarious liability may also apply in appropriate situations. Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), followed in Hunnewell v. Syme, 229 M 525, 747 P2d 875, 44 St. Rep. 2189 (1987).

Substantive Amendment to Law Regarding Uninsured Employer — Not Retroactive: Appellant contended that the 1985 amendment to this section and enactment of 39-71-515 were designed to remedy deficiencies in the prior law so that an uninsured employer would not be able to completely escape liability. He argued that since the 1985 legislation was essentially procedural or remedial, it should apply retroactively under 1-2-109, even though the legislation occurred subsequent to his accident. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the statutes imposed a new liability or obligation upon employers and granted employees a new cause of action or right that did not exist prior to enactment. This result fit exactly within the definition of a substantive law, and the court declined to apply the statutes retroactively. Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), followed in Donahue v. Convenience Disposal, Inc., 250 M 261, 818 P2d 839, 48 St. Rep. 916 (1991).

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1985 Amendment: In first sentence near middle after "beneficiaries who", substituted "pursue a claim for" for "elect to receive".

39-71-511. Setoffs to claim against fund.

Case Notes

Constitutionality of Section Allowing Setoff to Claim Against Uninsured Employers' Fund: Thayer died from an injury on the job, after incurring medical expenses of $253,207.98. Because the employer did not carry workers' compensation insurance, Thayer's wife, Phyllis, was entitled to receive medical benefits and death benefits provided by the uninsured employers' fund, pursuant to 39-71-503. The fund paid $85,000 in medical cost reimbursement, which the state accepted in full satisfaction of its claim. Phyllis subsequently brought negligence actions against the employer and a coemployee and product liability actions against the retail seller and the manufacturer of the product that Thayer was using when he was fatally injured. The uninsured employers' fund discharged Phyllis's claim for wage loss benefits following her receipt of a $100,000 settlement from the employer, applying the setoff pursuant to this section in order to discharge the remaining future benefits that Phyllis would have been entitled to receive from the fund, but did not seek recovery of any of the benefits paid to Phyllis prior to receipt of the settlement or the benefits paid based on the amounts recovered from third parties. Phyllis asserted that the setoff essentially gave the fund a subrogation interest in her settlement from the employer, that the fund could not subrogate until she was made whole, and that to hold otherwise would be a violation of her constitutional right to full legal redress. The Supreme Court disagreed. Because the fund is merely a legislatively provided safety net standing in place of the employer to provide some basis for recovery when the employer is impecunious, it is reasonable to condition the fund's obligations on the extent to which the employer fails to provide compensation. Further, because the fund is not an insurer, limiting the fund's obligation to the extent of the uninsured employer's ability to compensate the employee or the employee's family does not diminish the employee's right to full legal redress. The plain language of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., does not distinguish between third parties and uninsured employers. In this case, the employee was uninsured, so the exclusive remedy provision in 39-71-411 did not apply, and Phyllis could pursue benefits from the fund up to the amount of workers' compensation benefits that she would have received if the employer were insured. Also, pursuant to 39-71-509, Phyllis could bring a tort action against the employer in addition to any responsible third party. Thayer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 304, 297 M 179, 991 P2d 447, 56 St. Rep. 1223 (1999), following Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997).

Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 601, L. 1985, which enacted this section, 39-71-511, and 39-71-516 through 39-71-519 and amended 39-71-504, 39-71-508 through 39-71-510, and 39-71-2905, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the public policy of the State of Montana to ensure that every employee who is required to be covered under the state's workers' compensation laws, or his beneficiaries, receive, in the event of compensable injury or death, the monetary compensation to which they are entitled or are adjudged to be entitled under Title 39, chapter 71, part 7; and

WHEREAS, under current laws, an employee of an uninsured employer or the employee's beneficiaries are significantly impeded in the ability to recover full or partial compensation for a compensable injury or death; and

WHEREAS, this situation exists because of all of the following factors:

(1) There is a significant number of uninsured employers in Montana.

(2) The uninsured employers' fund is, for all practical purposes, insolvent.

(3) Existing remedies for an injured employee or his beneficiaries are inadequate, particularly when the negligence of the employer is not or cannot be proven to be the proximate cause of the injury or death."

Case Notes

Properly Invoked District Court Jurisdiction Over Independent Action Held Exclusive: After suffering a work-related injury and finding out from the Department of Labor and Industry that his employer had not made the required election regarding workers' compensation insurance, Dunn filed an independent action in District Court pursuant to 39-71-516 and this section against his employer. Thereafter, the employer's attorney, on behalf of CNA Insurance, petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination that the employer was indeed insured by CNA. Citing Bohmer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 266 M 289, 880 P2d 816 (1994), the Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court properly dismissed CNA's petition. However, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had exclusive jurisdiction over the independent action once its jurisdiction was properly invoked because the employer constituted an uninsured employer. The Supreme Court held that failure of an employer to insure itself is an essential element of the cause of action provided for by this section. The Supreme Court also applied sanctions against the insurer and its attorney for bringing a frivolous action and appeal. CNA Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 273 M 295, 902 P2d 1014, 52 St. Rep. 981 (1995).

Uninsured Employer — Jurisdiction: Petitioner filed an independent cause of action against an employer not enrolled in a workers' compensation plan and then petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a hearing. The District Court stayed its proceedings pending a determination by the Workers' Compensation Court of the extent of injuries and calculation of damages. The Workers' Compensation Court dismissed the petition on the grounds that it lacked jurisdiction over the action. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Workers' Compensation Court does not have jurisdiction over actions filed in the District Court, and the District Court's jurisdiction is not confined to liability issues. Bohmer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 266 M 289, 880 P2d 816, 51 St. Rep. 824 (1994), distinguished in Neustrom v. St., 283 M 179, 939 P2d 990, 54 St. Rep. 552 (1997).

Substantive Amendment to Law Regarding Uninsured Employer — Not Retroactive: Appellant contended that the 1985 amendment to 39-71-508 and enactment of this section were designed to remedy deficiencies in the prior law so that an uninsured employer would not be able to completely escape liability. He argued that since the 1985 legislation was essentially procedural or remedial, it should apply retroactively under 1-2-109, even though the legislation occurred subsequent to his accident. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the statutes imposed a new liability or obligation upon employers and granted employees a new cause of action or right that did not exist prior to enactment. This result fit exactly within the definition of a substantive law, and the court declined to apply the statutes retroactively. Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), followed in Donahue v. Convenience Disposal, Inc., 250 M 261, 818 P2d 839, 48 St. Rep. 916 (1991).

Venue for Action for Failure to Maintain Workers' Compensation Insurance: Under this section, an independent cause of action for failure to maintain workers' compensation insurance must be brought in the District Court in the district in which the claimant resides or in which the alleged violation occurs. As established in Melroe v. Doyle, 239 M 524, 781 P2d 1134 (1989), a defendant may not change venue to a different county when a suit may be commenced in more than one county and the plaintiff files in one of the permissible locations. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Case Notes

Failure to File All Pleadings With Department — Court Not Divested of Jurisdiction: Employer argued that the District Court did not acquire jurisdiction of an action for failure to maintain workers' compensation insurance because claimant did not file all pleadings with the Department as required by this section. Even though the papers were not served on the Department at the same time that they were filed in District Court, that failure does not divest the court of jurisdiction. The purpose of this section is to ensure that the state is aware of its right to subrogation through the filing of pleadings. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Part 6
Claims for Benefits

Part Case Notes

Application of Certain Workers' Compensation Act Provisions to MODA: With respect to the Montana Occupational Disease Act (MODA), the same rationale that applies to workers' compensation cases should apply, specifically: (1) the MODA statutes in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant are controlling; (2) because both Acts involve the same employer-employee relationship, the same rules of liberal construction apply; (3) MODA is to be administered so as to give the employee the greatest possible protection within the purposes of the Act; and (4) when MODA statutes are open to more than one interpretation, one of which is favorable to the employee and another against him, the statutes may be properly construed in a manner most favorable to the employee. Therefore, in liberally construing the statute in effect on the last actual day of work of claimant in the present case, section 92-1331, R.C.M. 1947 (39-72-308, MCA, repealed L. 1979), allowed a common-law right of action although the claimant was not eligible for compensation under MODA. Gidley v. W.R. Grace & Co., 221 M 36, 717 P2d 21, 43 St. Rep. 616 (1986), overruling The Anaconda Co. v. District Court, 161 M 318, 506 P2d 81 (1973).

Application of MAPA to Workers' Compensation Court — Court to Be Guided by Rules of Civil Procedure: Proceedings in the Workers' Compensation Court are governed not by the Rules of Civil Procedure but by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. The Workers' Compensation Court may, however, be guided by the Rules of Civil Procedure to the extent that reference to those rules lies within the discretion of the court under ARM 2.52.224. Moen v. Peter Kiewit & Sons' Co., 201 M 425, 655 P2d 482, 39 St. Rep. 2209 (1982).

Award of Costs on Appeal Where Claimant's Appearance Unnecessary: On appeal, where essentially the only question of liability is as between two insurers and where the claimant is assured of compensation, it is unnecessary for him to make an appearance other than the filing of a short brief stating his position and that he will not appear. Therefore, claimant will not be awarded attorney fees or costs for the appeal. Little v. Structural Systems, 188 M 482, 614 P2d 516, 37 St. Rep. 1187 (1980).

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

Applicability of Tort Statute of Limitations to Independent Cause of Action for Failure to Maintain Workers' Compensation Insurance: Under this section, a statutory time limit is established for filing a claim with the Department; however, no limit is established within which a claim must be filed in District Court. As established in Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), an independent cause of action authorized by 39-71-508 is ordinarily considered a negligence action, but strict liability may apply in certain situations. Therefore, the applicable statute of limitations for such actions is the tort statute of limitations of 3 years provided in 27-2-204. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Knowledge of Injury to Be Accompanied by Recognition of Compensable Character of Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court refused to waive the statute of limitations for filing a claim on the basis that the claimant was aware of his injury. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that it must also be shown that the claimant knew the injury was compensable and that in the case before it, it was clear the claimant lacked that knowledge. Hueth v. Mark Johnson Masonry, 246 M 281, 805 P2d 1312, 47 St. Rep. 2019 (1990).

Waiver of Workers' Compensation Benefits Allowed — Distribution of Proportionate Share of Benefits: Decedent who died in the course of employment was survived by two children of a prior marriage and by the widow of a second marriage. Decedent's insurer and others with potential liability for death claims settled with the widow for substantial sums, but the children were not parties to the settlement. No workers' compensation claim was filed by the widow, though one was filed by decedent's employer. The compensation carrier began paying one-third of the compensation benefits to the widow and reserved two-thirds pending final determination of the children as beneficiaries. The widow advised the carrier that she did not wish to receive workers' compensation benefits and returned those she had been issued. The Workers' Compensation Court held that, as a matter of public policy, the widow could not waive death benefits and that the children's interest in the benefits would vest only if the widow died or remarried prior to the passing of 500 weeks after decedent's death. On rehearing, the court found the children to be stepchildren of the widow and therefore entitled to benefits, to be equally divided between the parties. The children appealed, contending that the widow should not be compelled to receive benefits she did not claim or intended to waive and that the children were each entitled to one-half of all available benefits. The Supreme Court held that under 1-3-204, the surviving widow could waive or abandon her right to benefits and that upon waiver the surviving children were entitled to no more than their proportionate share provided by law. In re Benefits of Gaither, 244 M 383, 797 P2d 208, 47 St. Rep. 1549 (1990).

Insurer Seeking Indemnification Not Subject to One-Year Statute of Limitations: The State Fund argued that the plaintiff insurer was not entitled to seek indemnification for payments made to the claimant because the insurer had not brought its claim within 1 year of the date of the accident. The Supreme Court ruled that the statute imposed the time limit on claims brought on behalf of the claimant and that the insurer was seeking compensation on its own behalf and therefore was not subject to the 1-year requirement. EBI/Orion Group v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 240 M 99, 782 P2d 1276, 46 St. Rep. 1973 (1989), affirmed in 249 M 449, 816 P2d 1070, 48 St. Rep. 791 (1991).

Applicability of Amendment: The 1973 amendment to this section applies to all claims existing at its effective date, without retroactive effect. Since claimant's action had not been barred by the amendment's effective date, the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) had the power to consider his petition for an extension of time. Williams v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 174 M 387, 571 P2d 90 (1977).

Liberal Construction Statute Applied: When no effort was made by claimant to comply with the statute, the claimant cannot turn to the liberal construction statute for relief. Klein v. Independent Wholesale Assoc. Grocers, 167 M 341, 538 P2d 1358 (1975).

Refusal to Give Notice: Where plaintiff suffered compensable injury but failed to fill out Form 54 for workers' compensation after three warnings that he had to fill it out in order to receive benefits, Division's (now State Fund's) refusal to grant benefits was correct, in light of this section, before the 1973 amendment. Klein v. Independent Wholesale Assoc. Grocers, 167 M 341, 538 P2d 1358 (1975).

Duty to Advise Employee: While it may not be the duty of the Division (now State Fund) to solicit claims, it is the Division's (now State Fund's) duty when the Division (now State Fund) is the insurer to fully advise an injured worker when the worker asks for information as to what to do, and the Division (now State Fund) is under a legal and moral duty to deal fairly with employees. Yurkovich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 132 M 77, 314 P2d 866 (1957).

Statutory Provision Mandatory: Compliance with the provisions of this section, requiring an injured worker seeking compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) to present his claim within a specified period from the date of the happening of the accident, is indispensable to the existence of the right to maintain proceedings to compel payment. Williams v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 96 M 204, 29 P2d 649 (1934).

FORM AND CONTENT OF CLAIM

Failure to Inform Employer of Injury Within Statutory Time Limit — Claim Barred: Grenz did not file a claim for benefits within the 12-month statute of limitations unequivocally required by this section, nor did he satisfy the requirement that the claim be filed in writing or assist the employer in completing a report of a new and separate microtrauma injury unrelated to the initial elbow injury. The fact that the insurer accepted liability for Grenz's initial injury did not equitably estop the insurer from denying liability for the subsequent unreported microtrauma injury, nor did the insurer have any duty to inform Grenz of his duty to assert a separate claim. Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 260 M 60, 857 P2d 730, 50 St. Rep. 942 (1993), following Wassberg v. Anaconda Copper Co., 215 M 309, 697 P2d 909 (1985), and distinguishing Scott v. Util. Line Contractors, 266 M 154, 734 P2d 206 (1987), and Weigland v. Anderson-Mayer Drilling Co., 232 M 390, 758 P2d 260 (1988).

Medical Bill and Employer's First Report Sent to Division (Now State Fund) — Requirement for Statutory Filing Met: Claimant failed to submit a Form 54 claim, the usual form filed by claimants to present their claims, but did meet the 1-year notice provision by presenting a medical bill and assisting the employer in completing an Employer's First Report form, both of which were timely submitted to the Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund). Scott v. Util. Line Contractors, 226 M 154, 734 P2d 206, 44 St. Rep. 547 (1987), followed in Weigand v. Anderson-Meyer Drilling Co., 232 M 390, 758 P2d 260, 45 St. Rep. 1138 (1988).

Notice of Subsequent Disability From Prior Accident Not Required — Liberal Construction of Notice Requirement: Where the employee was injured in an industrial accident in 1978 and gave notice to his employer of an injury to his right knee and leg, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in holding the employer's insurance company liable for back injuries from the same accident that were not manifested until 1980. Under the rationale of Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981), the notice requirement is to be liberally construed as not requiring a separate notice for every ache, pain, or discomfort an employee experiences as a result of a compensable accident. The purpose of the notice statute is to allow an employer to promptly investigate the claim and treat the injured worker; that purpose was fulfilled by the notice given in this case. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Form of Claim: A letter to the Workers' Compensation Division (now State Fund) informing it that the writer missed 4 days of work due to an accident and requesting a form is not a "claim" within the meaning of this section. Klein v. Independent Wholesale Assoc. Grocers, 167 M 341, 538 P2d 1358 (1975), overruled in Weigand v. Anderson-Meyer Drilling Co., 232 M 390, 758 P2d 260, 45 St. Rep. 1138 (1988), with respect to a case where there was presented to employer, and through employer to insurer, with claimant's assistance, written information providing details that could have been provided by a further form filled out and presented by claimant.

Multiple Claims: Claimant who filed a claim for compensation on January 16, 1969, covering an injury on August 26, 1968, was not barred from asserting claim to compensation arising from injury on July 12, 1968, where the two injuries were closely related and where the employer and his insurer had actual knowledge of the claim long before 1 year had elapsed following the alleged injury. Love v. Ralph's Food Store, Inc., 163 M 234, 516 P2d 598 (1973).

Doctor Filing Claim: Where doctor filed a claim for services in treating eye of injured employee with the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) within 12 months from the date of the accident, and the employee who lost no wages by his injury filed no claim but acquiesced in the filing of the claim by the doctor when informed, the employee ratified the act of the doctor and the filing of the claim gave the Board (now State Fund) jurisdiction to award compensation for the loss of an eye when it later developed that the employee had become totally blind in one eye. Gugler v. Indus. Accident Bd., 117 M 38, 157 P2d 89 (1945).

KNOWLEDGE OF DISABILITY

Loss in Ability to Engage in Gainful Employment as Disability — Extension Allowed Absent Knowledge of Disability: Under the 1985 interpretation of this section, a disability occurs only when the claimant suffers a loss in the ability to engage in gainful employment. When a claimant was injured but did not file within the 12-month statute of limitations because she was not aware of her disability until her doctor advised her to quit work, she was entitled to the 24-month waiver on presentment of her claim. Conn v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 190, 789 P2d 1213, 47 St. Rep. 425 (1990).

Knowledge of Injury — No Extension of Filing Time: When the claimant felt a sharp pain in his back at the time of an incident in July 1984, continued to have back problems through the next year, purchased a back brace in August 1984, and had leg pains in October and November 1984, there was no credible evidence that he lacked knowledge of the nature, seriousness, and probable compensable character of a latent injury. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying benefits to the claimant because he failed to timely file notice of the accident claimed to have caused the injury. Schmidt v. Home Ins. Co., 227 M 171, 741 P2d 382, 44 St. Rep. 986 (1987).

Latent Injury — Section Interpreted to Toll Time Period Until Discovery: The workers' compensation statute provides that all claims are forever barred unless presented within 12 months of "the date of the happening of the accident". In 3 Larson, Workmen's Compensation Law, section 78.40 (1983), the author states that "It is odd indeed to find, in a supposedly beneficent piece of legislation, the survival of this fragment of irrational cruelty surpassing the most technical forfeitures of legal statutes of limitation." The logic of Larson's position that latent injuries should not be barred until the statutory period has run from the time of discovery is unassailable and appeals to this court, whose duty it is to liberally interpret the Workers' Compensation Act. Therefore, this section is interpreted, in cases of latent injury, so that the time period does not begin to run until the claimant, as a reasonable man, should have recognized the nature, seriousness, and probable compensable character of his latent injury. Bowerman v. Employment Sec. Comm'n, 207 M 314, 673 P2d 476, 40 St. Rep. 2062 (1983), followed in Dodd v. Champion Int'l Corp., 239 M 236, 779 P2d 901, 46 St. Rep. 1649 (1989), and distinguished in Reil v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617, 44 St. Rep. 1985 (1987).

Lack of Knowledge of Disability: There is substantial credible evidence in the record to support both the decision of the administrator and the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court that "there has been a reasonable showing by the claimant of lack of knowledge of disability" when the claimant treated an injury himself believing the injury would go away but was finally compelled to seek medical treatment resulting in knowledge of disability. Pinion v. H. C. Smith Constr. Co., 190 M 103, 619 P2d 167, 37 St. Rep. 1355 (1980).

Requirement to File a Claim Where Symptoms Present: A claimant who was "gassed" by diesel fumes from equipment and burning trash and who was plagued from the time of the gassing to the date of hearing by shortness of breath, weakness, coughing, and other symptoms of chronic disease did not have a latent injury and was required to file a claim for compensation within 1 year of the "gassing". Miller v. Billings, 171 M 91, 555 P2d 747 (1976).

TOLLING OF STATUTE

Failure to Inform Employer of Injury Within Statutory Time Limit — Claim Barred: Grenz did not file a claim for benefits within the 12-month statute of limitations unequivocally required by this section, nor did he satisfy the requirement that the claim be filed in writing or assist the employer in completing a report of a new and separate microtrauma injury unrelated to the initial elbow injury. The fact that the insurer accepted liability for Grenz's initial injury did not equitably estop the insurer from denying liability for the subsequent unreported microtrauma injury, nor did the insurer have any duty to inform Grenz of his duty to assert a separate claim. Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 260 M 60, 857 P2d 730, 50 St. Rep. 942 (1993), following Wassberg v. Anaconda Copper Co., 215 M 309, 697 P2d 909 (1985), and distinguishing Scott v. Util. Line Contractors, 266 M 154, 734 P2d 206 (1987), and Weigland v. Anderson-Mayer Drilling Co., 232 M 390, 758 P2d 260 (1988).

Statute Not Tolled — Payments Not in Lieu of Compensation: The claimant argued that the statute of limitations should have been tolled on his filing a claim because the payments he had received in 1981 were in lieu of compensation. The Supreme Court found that he had received payments based upon wages he was receiving in 1978 when he first injured his shoulder, and therefore he knew that the payments were disability payments and not payments in lieu of compensation. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Payment of Full Salary After Injury — Statute Tolled: Jaeger injured his back in 1977 while employed by Stauffer Chemical but failed to file a workers' compensation claim until 1979. Jaeger argued that because he received full salary after the injury, he did not have knowledge of his injury and the Workers' Compensation Court should grant an extension to the 12-month Statute of Limitations. On appeal the Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court properly found that Jaeger knew or should have known that his earning capacity had been diminished because he was unable to perform his former duties even though Stauffer continued to pay him. However, Stauffer's payment of full salary during the period of his inability to perform his duties amounted to payment of compensation and tolled the Statute of Limitations. Jaeger v. Traveler's Ins. Co., 198 M 263, 645 P2d 942, 39 St. Rep. 919 (1982), distinguished in Turjan v. Valley View Estates, 272 M 386, 901 P2d 76, 52 St. Rep. 740 (1995).

Tolling Statute of Limitations — Knowledge of Accident Imputed to Employer: One of the requirements to toll the Statute of Limitations for the filing of workers' compensation benefits is that the employer has knowledge he is paying compensation to an employee because of an industrial accident. Where the foreman of a claimant had knowledge that the claimant's injuries were work-related, such knowledge could be imputed to the employer. Frost v. Anaconda Co., 198 M 216, 645 P2d 419, 39 St. Rep. 879 (1982), followed in Varela v. Petroleum Cas. Co., 237 M 300, 773 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 819 (1989).

Voluntary Noninsurance Benefits Paid by Employer — Statute Tolled: After a work-related accident that prevented the claimant from returning to work, the employer voluntarily provided him with benefits larger than workers' compensation benefits. The claimant was not prevented from filing for workers' compensation benefits 4 $^{1}_{2}$ years later because the Statute of Limitations had been tolled. The Statute of Limitations for filing a workers' compensation claim is tolled if: (1) the claimant receives compensation from the employer that is substantially comparable to that available under the Workers' Compensation Act; and (2) the employer has knowledge it is paying compensation because of an industrial accident. Frost v. Anaconda Co., 198 M 216, 645 P2d 419, 39 St. Rep. 879 (1982), distinguished in Turjan v. Valley View Estates, 272 M 386, 901 P2d 76, 52 St. Rep. 740 (1995).

WAIVER, ESTOPPEL, AND LACHES

Elements of Estoppel Properly Applied — Lindblom Standard: State Fund was estopped from taking credit for permanent partial disability payments after the Workers' Compensation Court held that the benefits were actually temporary total. The following facts were sufficient to satisfy the elements of estoppel as set out in Lindblom v. Employers' Liab. Assurance Corp., 88 M 488, 295 P 1007 (1930): (1) claimant was informed by State Fund that the benefits he received were for temporary total disability; (2) claimant was never advised that the benefits were anything but temporary total and had no reason to know because the dollar amount of temporary total and permanent partial was the same; (3) claimant never tried to hide the fact that he was receiving a salary, which was reported to State Fund; (4) the corporation bookkeeper requested guidance from State Fund as to the correct reporting of claimant's earnings and simultaneous receipt of temporary total benefits but received no assistance; and (5) claimant would be harmed if his temporary total benefits were reclassified as permanent partial because of the subsequent loss of unlimited benefits. Ryles v. Springhill Ranch Eggs, 247 M 276, 806 P2d 525, 48 St. Rep. 196 (1991).

No Estoppel When Claimant Aware Benefits Not at Rate He Alleged Due Him: The claimant had been injured in 1978. He alleged he received a new injury in 1981 but was paid benefits based on the 1978 rate by the insurer on the basis that the injury was a reoccurrence of the prior accident. The claimant's knowledge of the lower payments prevented him from asserting that the statute of limitations should have been tolled on the theory of equitable estoppel. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Estoppel Allowed — Prior Policy and Actions of Employer: Since employer had repeatedly informed employee that it would file his claim and had on several prior occasions filed the necessary paperwork for the employee, the employee was entitled to compensation even though his claim was not filed in the 12-month period. Schaub v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 389, 770 P2d 522, 46 St. Rep. 450 (1989).

Employer Silent on Necessity of Claim Filing — No Estoppel: The exception to the Statute of Limitations set forth in subsection (1) of this section is that the 1-year limitation may be waived by the employer by acts or representations giving rise to an equitable estoppel. Lindblom v. Employers' Liab. Assur. Corp., 88 M 488, 295 P 1007 (1930), set forth the six elements necessary to find an estoppel. The first of these, that there must be conduct—acts, language, or silence—amounting to misrepresentation of a material fact, was not satisfied by the employer's failure to inform the claimant of the need to file a claim. Claimant's erroneous "understanding" that filing his accident report satisfied the requirements imposed on him by the Workers' Compensation Act was not attributable to any assertions of the employer or his agents. Further, one instance of employer's silence occurred 1 year after the Statute of Limitations had already run. Finally, the employer does not have a duty to pursue the employee's claim; claimant had a duty to act first. Wassberg v. Anaconda Copper Co., 215 M 309, 697 P2d 909, 42 St. Rep. 388 (1985).

Late Claim Caused by Misstatement of Employer or Insurer — Equitable Estoppel Allows Claim: When an employer or insurer has taken some positive action that prevents a workers' compensation claimant from filing a timely claim or leads claimant to reasonably believe he need not file a claim or a claim is not filed because an employer or insurer foists onto the claimant a misinterpretation of the law, the doctrine of equitable estoppel applies. Employer told claimant wife that because her husband died at home, employer had no responsibility. Husband passed out while chopping a hole in some ice, and his employer suggested he go home and see a doctor. He visited friends, got home at about 9:30 p.m., and died of a heart attack. Wife did not know the representation of employer was not true and relied on it, failing to file a claim within the statutorily mandated 12 months. Employer and insurer were barred by equitable estoppel from using the Statute of Limitations to bar wife's claim. Davis v. Jones, 203 M 464, 661 P2d 859, 40 St. Rep. 570 (1983), followed in Mellem v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 237 M 439, 774 P2d 390, 46 St. Rep. 932 (1989), and in Shelley v. USF&G, 252 M 106, 827 P2d 1288, 49 St. Rep. 277 (1992).

Estoppel Inapplicable — No Duty of Employer to Solicit Claim: Where the claimant, after injuring herself at work in 1975, informed her supervisor that she did not wish to file a workers' compensation claim but subsequently did file a claim in 1981, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in its findings that the claim was barred by the 12-month Statute of Limitations and that there were no grounds upon which to hold that the employer and its insurer should be estopped from raising the Statute of Limitations. The claimant decided, although out of ignorance, not to file a claim for her known injury, and the employer had no duty to solicit or file the claim for her. Devlin v. Galusha, Higgins & Galusha, 201 M 134, 655 P2d 979, 39 St. Rep. 2378 (1982).

Equitable Estoppel Denied — Employee Fault: Record was devoid of evidence to support a charge of equitable estoppel in filing a claim where claimant admitted she was not prevented or discouraged from filing a claim and was never misled into believing that the matter regarding a claim filing would be taken care of. Bagley v. Hotel Florence Co., 165 M 145, 526 P2d 1372 (1974).

Equitable Estoppel — Action by Insurer or Employer a Prerequisite: The doctrine of equitable estoppel provides an exception to the Statute of Limitations provided for in this section and applies where an insurer has taken some positive action which either prevents the claimant from making a claim or leads a claimant to reasonably believe a claim need not be filed, and in this case there was no misleading by the insurer because it was established that there was never any communication between the claimant and anyone representing the insurer. Ricks v. Teslow Consol., 162 M 469, 512 P2d 1304 (1973).

Payment of Medical Bills: Medical benefits are separate from compensation and no claim for medical benefits need be made. The payment of medical bills does not dispense with the necessity of a claim for compensation by an injured worker. Ricks v. Teslow Consol., 162 M 469, 512 P2d 1304 (1973); Vetsch v. Helena Transfer & Storage Co., 154 M 106, 460 P2d 757 (1969).

Estoppel Allowed — Employer Statement That Claim Not Covered: Equitable estoppel was involved where injured worker was told by a company lawyer and the company personnel manager that his claim was not covered by workers' compensation. Levo v. General-Shea-Morrison, 128 M 570, 280 P2d 1086 (1955).

Estoppel Allowed — Employer Statement Employee Not Injured: Where injured worker was told by the company doctor that he had not been injured, the employee was entitled to compensation even though he had not submitted claim within 12-month period. McCoy v. Mike Horse Min. & Milling Co., 126 M 435, 252 P2d 1036 (1953).

Waiver of Defense: Where claimant for compensation did not file his claim within the time required by this section, defendant employer was not required to file an answer or state a defense orally before the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund), and claimant's assertion that by such failure the employer waived its right to make defense was without merit. Williams v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 96 M 204, 29 P2d 649 (1934).

Estoppel Allowed — Insurance Agent Delays: Doctrine applied where agent of insurance company led worker to believe his claim would be taken care of and settled. Lindblom v. Employers' Liab. Assurance Corp., 88 M 488, 295 P 1007 (1930), followed in Wassberg v. Anaconda Copper Co., 215 M 309, 697 P2d 909, 42 St. Rep. 388 (1985).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Employer Estopped From Claiming Employee's Notice Not Given Within Thirty Days: Spring Creek argued that Kuzara had not filed a claim with the State Fund within the required 30-day notice period. The Supreme Court held that the evidence indicated that Spring Creek had acted in a manner that caused Kuzara to rely on the company's representations to her detriment and that she had not filed in time because of her reliance on those representations. Therefore, the company was estopped from claiming that she had given insufficient notice. However, the Supreme Court remanded the case to give Spring Creek the opportunity to present evidence to rebut the issue of estoppel. Kuzara v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 279 M 223, 928 P2d 136, 53 St. Rep. 1125 (1996).

Informing Supervisor That Another Employee Has Knowledge of Accident — Sufficient Notice of Injury: Kuzara called her supervisor and informed him that she had to have back surgery due to a job-related injury. She also told the supervisor that she was ill and could not continue talking but that he could get the details of the accident from another employee with whom she had discussed the incident. The Supreme Court concluded that during the hearing, Kuzara had presented sufficient evidence that her supervisor could have learned the details of her injury by contacting the other employee and therefore the Workers' Compensation Court erred in dismissing the claim on the basis that Kuzara had given her employer insufficient notice. The Supreme Court remanded the issue to the Workers' Compensation Court to give the employer an opportunity to rebut Kuzara's claim that she gave it sufficient notice of her injury. Kuzara v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 279 M 223, 928 P2d 136, 53 St. Rep. 1125 (1996).

Employee's Knowledge of Claims Process — Filing After Thirty Days as Bar to Recovery: Larson did not comply with the mandatory 30-day notice requirement of this section. Based on past experience, Larson understood how and when to notify the employer of injury and the procedure for filing a workers' compensation claim. Larson was aware that he had suffered an injury and sought medical treatment shortly after the accident. These facts constituted sufficient evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that Larson was not entitled to benefits. Larson v. Barry Smith Logging, Inc., 267 M 444, 884 P2d 786, 51 St. Rep. 1114 (1994).

Failure to Report Injury Within Thirty Days as Rendering Claim Noncompensable: Because Buckentin did not follow the proper 30-day notification requirements mandated by this section, even though he knew the necessary procedure from prior experience, his injury claim was not compensable. There was no evidence that his employer prevented him from reporting the injury or that he was misinformed by medical personnel as to his condition. Buckentin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 265 M 518, 878 P2d 262, 51 St. Rep. 656 (1994), distinguishing Bodily v. John Jump Trucking, Inc., 250 M 274, 819 P2d 1262 (1991), with regard to a slowly developing injury, and followed in Strickland v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 273 M 254, 901 P2d 1391, 52 St. Rep. 962 (1995).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Insufficient Notice of Injury: The following information in the record supported the contention that Rose did not give notice within the 30-day time limit established in this section: (1) Rose contended that he was injured at work on July 24, 1992; (2) State Fund received the physician's initial report of the injury on October 16, 1992; (3) Rose's compensation claim was received October 20, 1992; and (4) the employer's first report was received October 29, 1992. Rose v. Burdick's Locksmith, 265 M 178, 875 P2d 337, 51 St. Rep. 447 (1994).

Failure to Make Knowledge of Injury Available to Employer — Denial of Claim Proper: The Workers' Compensation Court properly denied Bogle's request for benefits because Bogle did not make knowledge of the claimed industrial accident available to the employer, the employer's managing agent, or superintendent within 30 days of the claimed injury, as required by this section. Bogle v. Ownerrent Rent to Own, 264 M 515, 872 P2d 800, 51 St. Rep. 380 (1994), distinguishing Killebrew v. Larson Cattle Co., 254 M 513, 839 P2d 1260 (1992).

Worker Reporting Accident Within Thirty Days but Not Aware of Injury Until Later Not Barred From Recovery: Killebrew reported to his employer an accident that occurred while he was operating a tractor. At the time, he did not believe that he had been injured. After the expiration of the 30-day reporting period required by statute, Killebrew learned that he had suffered an injury described as a rotator cuff tear. The Supreme Court held that he had reported the accident within the 30-day period and would not be barred from recovery because he had a good faith belief at the time of the accident that he had not been injured. Killebrew v. Uninsured Employers Fund, 254 M 513, 839 P2d 1260, 49 St. Rep. 783 (1992).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Claimant Liable for Restitution for Benefits Paid Under Order Reversed on Appeal: Reil was granted about $13,750 in benefits by the Workers' Compensation Court, of which $3,000 was retained by Reil's counsel for costs and fees. On appeal, the Supreme Court in Reil v. Billings Processors, Inc., 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617 (1987), reversed the award after finding that Reil failed to provide his employer with timely notice of his injury. In a subsequent declaratory action, the Workers' Compensation Court ruled that restitution was proper, denied Reil's joinder of counsel as a third-party defendant, and ordered Reil to reimburse State Fund for all compensation benefits and medical expenses received. Although there is nothing in the Workers' Compensation Act that specifically refers to restitution, neither do the exclusivity provisions of the Act preclude restitution. Therefore, Reil was properly ordered to reimburse State Fund for compensation and benefits paid pursuant to the lower court judgment that was subsequently reversed on appeal. Reil v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 274, 837 P2d 1334, 49 St. Rep. 734 (1992).

Actual Knowledge:

The Supreme Court distinguished Reil v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617 (1987), because in this case, there was a slowly developing injury that did not lend itself to precise notification and the employee provided his employer with all the information he had regarding the nature of his injury and its relationship to his employment. The notice requirement of this section was satisfied by giving the employer sufficient information to lead a reasonably conscientious person to conclude that there may be a connection between the worker's condition and his job. Bodily v. John Jump Trucking, Inc., 250 M 274, 819 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 929 (1991).

Where employer knew that claimant suffered pain from congenital problems but was not informed by claimant that the pain resulted from claimant's work, the Supreme Court held that constructive knowledge imputed to the employer on the basis of facts taken cumulatively is insufficient to meet requirement of actual knowledge of injury under this section. Reil v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617, 44 St. Rep. 1985 (1987), followed in Lee v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 234 M 197, 761 P2d 835, 45 St. Rep. 1839 (1988).

In order for the "actual knowledge" test to be met, there need not be an actual witnessing of the accident; a conveyance of the information to the agents specified in the statute is adequate. Hartl v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 176 M 540, 579 P2d 1239 (1978).

Mere knowledge on the part of the employer that an employee became sick while at work will not, in the absence of some knowledge on the part of the employer that some accidental injury was sustained by the employee, amount to actual knowledge of an injury under this section. Dean v. The Anaconda Co., 135 M 13, 335 P2d 854 (1959); State ex rel. Magelo v. Indus. Accident Bd., 102 M 455, 59 P2d 785 (1936).

Provision Mandatory: The provisions of this section are mandatory and compliance with its requirements is indispensable to maintain a claim for compensation. Reil v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617, 44 St. Rep. 1985 (1987); Masters v. Davis Logging, 228 M 441, 743 P2d 104, 44 St. Rep. 1664 (1987); Bender v. Roundup Min. Co., 138 M 306, 356 P2d 469 (1960); Dean v. The Anaconda Co., 135 M 13, 335 P2d 854 (1959); State ex rel. Magelo v. Indus. Accident Bd., 102 M 455, 59 P2d 785 (1936); Maki v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 87 M 314, 287 P2d 170 (1930). See also Turjan v. Valley View Estates, 272 M 386, 901 P2d 76, 52 St. Rep. 740 (1995).

Injury Not Timely Reported to Employer or Physicians — Claim Denied: The Workers' Compensation Court properly denied coverage of claimant when he did not give notice of the time and place of injury to his employer until over 1 year after the alleged injury and when he failed to mention to any of his three physicians that his injury might be job-related. Although claimant contended the claim period did not begin to run until he had reason to recognize the serious nature of his problem, the Supreme Court found that he had ample opportunity to notify his employer and his physicians and that his alleged injury appeared to be the product of inspiration, not recognition. Nelson v. Asarco, Inc., 227 M 272, 739 P2d 943, 44 St. Rep. 1074 (1987).

Sufficient Notice — Notice to Company Nurse: Claimant injured his back at work. He reported to the company nurse who referred him to a doctor. The doctor's report turned out to be a misdiagnosis. Because the reported condition was not work-related, the nurse did not process a compensation form. Claimant went to another doctor, and a back injury was diagnosed. The nurse then prepared and processed the claim. The employer contested liability on the ground that it had not been notified within 60 days of the accident. The trial court found that claimant had notified the nurse but that she was not an authorized agent. The trial court held that the employer had not received actual knowledge within the time requirement. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that notice to the nurse was proper. The court stated that there is no more important area to apply liberal construction than whether sufficient notice was given of such an accident. The court concluded that the nurse was in effect the managing agent insofar as the receipt of notice of injuries is concerned. Ackerman v. Intermountain Ins. Co., 206 M 508, 672 P2d 267, 40 St. Rep. 1813 (1983).

Notice of Every Subsequent Disability From Prior Accident Not Required — Liberal Construction of Notice Requirement: Where the employee was injured in an industrial accident in 1978 and gave notice to his employer of an injury to his right knee and leg, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in holding the employer's insurance company liable for back injuries from the same accident that were not manifested until 1980. Under the rationale of Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981), the notice requirement is to be liberally construed as not requiring a separate notice for every ache, pain, or discomfort an employee experiences as a result of a compensable accident. The purpose of the notice statute is to allow an employer to promptly investigate the claim and treat the injured worker; that purpose was fulfilled by the notice given in this case. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Immediate Notice Not Required: An employee had severe back pain at work and went home at the end of his shift. He later called his supervisor and stated he had hurt his back and was going to see a doctor and would not be at work for his next shift. Evidence that he failed to notify his employer at that time that he had been injured in an accident on the job was evidence that employee may not have believed he had suffered an on-the-job injury but was not evidence that employee did not suffer an on-the-job injury. Employee had 60 days to give employer notice of an on-the-job injury; that requirement was met by employee's written notice less than 3 weeks after the alleged injury, and there was no requirement that he notify employer of an accident or injury within hours or days of its occurrence. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981).

Notice of Each Separate Injury Not Required: This section's requirement that an injured employee give, within 60 days after the occurrence of an accident which is claimed to have caused injury, notice of the time and place where the accident occurred and the "nature of the injury" was complied with as to a back injury where the employee only indicated injuries to ribs and chest. There was no requirement that employee give notice of each separate injury, particularly where employee was functionally illiterate, having completed school only through the third grade. The employee complied with this section when he notified the insurer of the accident and the fact that he had been injured. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Purpose: The purpose of this section's notice requirement is to enable the employer to protect himself by prompt investigation of the claimed accident and prompt treatment of the injury involved with a view toward minimizing the effects of the injury by proper medical care. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981); Reil v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 305, 746 P2d 617, 44 St. Rep. 1985 (1987).

Injury of Managing Agent — Actual Knowledge of Self-Injury Held Insufficient: Where the claimant, a local manager of a paint store, alleged on-the-job injuries but failed to give written or oral notice to his employer or its insurance carrier until 11 months after the injuries, the trial court did not err in holding that the claimant failed to give the required notice of his injuries. The claimant's argument that his own knowledge of his injuries should be held sufficient under this section because he was the store's managing agent ignores the purpose of the notice requirements of the statute. As neither the claimant's employing company nor its insurer had knowledge of the injuries, they could not protect themselves by prompt investigation. The claimant's own knowledge is therefore insufficient knowledge by a managing agent and insufficient notice under the statute. Hunt v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 191 M 348, 624 P2d 489, 38 St. Rep. 358 (1981).

Notice of On-Job Injury Through Employer's Agent, a Physician: Employer, a hospital, in a suit to recover workers' compensation benefits may be considered to have actual notice within the meaning of this section when claimant, a nurse in the hospital, sought and was given treatment by a physician in the emergency room. The physician is an agent under 28-10-103, and the hospital may be considered to have notice under 28-10-604. The purpose of the notice requirement is to enable the employer to protect himself by prompt investigation of the claimed accident and prompt treatment of the injury involved with a view toward minimizing its effects by proper medical care. Where, as here, within 2 hours of the accident, the employer had notice and a diagnosis and had prescribed treatment for the injury, the purpose of this section is fulfilled. Harmon v. Deaconess Hosp., 191 M 285, 623 P2d 1372, 38 St. Rep. 65 (1981).

Mental Incompetency: The provisions of 39-71-602 relating to excepting certain time requirements for mental incompetents and minors under 18 apply to this section. Maki v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 87 M 314, 287 P2d 170 (1930).

Doctor-Patient Privilege as Precluding Physician Private Interviews in Workers' Compensation Case: The doctor-patient privilege set out in 26-1-805 prevents the defendant from conducting private interviews with a claimant's physician. Linton v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 122, 749 P2d 55, 45 St. Rep. 68 (1988), citing Japp v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Claimant's Duty to File Information Needed to Determine Compensability: Under this section, a claimant has a duty to file with the insurer and with the Workers' Compensation Court all reasonable information needed by the insurer and the court to determine compensability. Claimant has a duty therefore, through the use of depositions or medical reports obtained from health care providers, to carry his burden of compensability. Examination reports relating to compensability as are in claimant's or his attorney's possession are to be freely exchanged with the insurer and his counsel under Rule 2.52.317 of the Procedural Rules of the Workers' Compensation Court. Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987).

Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege by Workers' Compensation Claimant — Discovery: Although there is no direct statement in the Workers' Compensation Act or in the Procedural Rules of the Workers' Compensation Court regarding waiver of the physician-patient privilege, this section and 39-71-605 imply that an injured employee, to sustain a right to workers' compensation benefits, must waive any privilege or claim of confidentiality as to medical information relating to compensability of his claim. If a claimant exercises his right under 26-1-805 or 50-16-525 to prevent any medical witness from disclosing confidential health information, and subsequently application is made by the adverse party to the Workers' Compensation Court for an order authorizing discovery, the court should authorize such discovery as is relevant to the subject involved in the pending action. The information obtained must be reasonably necessary to determine compensability. Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987).

1945 Amendment Unconstitutional: Chapter 213, L. 1945, is unconstitutional since the Legislature failed to follow the constitutional mandate of having the bill printed for use of the members and that fact shows affirmatively on the journals. O'Bannon v. Gustafson, 130 M 402, 303 P2d 938 (1956).

Chapter 377 in (3) inserted "practitioner having substantial experience in the field of medicine concerned with the matters presented by the dispute and whose licensure would qualify the practitioner to act as a". Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 276 throughout section, after "physician", inserted "psychologist"; in two places in (1) and three places in (2), after "panel", deleted "of physicians"; at end of (1)(a) inserted "or as ordered by the workers' compensation judge"; in (1)(b) inserted second sentence authorizing an examination conducted by a physician, psychologist, or panel licensed in another state; in first sentence in (2), after "department", inserted "or the workers' compensation judge"; inserted (3) providing that a panel includes a treating physician and may include a psychologist; inserted (4) requiring claimant upon request to submit to evaluation conducted by licensed physical therapist; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 16, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 33(1), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 6(35)(f) and 10 [39-71-605]] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring prior to [the effective date of sections 6(35)(f) and 10]." Effective April 16, 1997.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 619 in (1)(b), at end of third sentence after "suspended", inserted "and is subject to the provisions of 39-71-607"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: In (1)(b), at end of first sentence, provided that place of examination be "as close to the employee's residence as is practical"; in (2), in second to last sentence, substituted "claimant and insurer" for "department" and in last sentence, at beginning, substituted "requesting party" for "department" and at end deleted "and shall be reimbursed by the party who requested it"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 1991.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In four places in (1) and (2), before "insurer", deleted references to employer; at end of (1) deleted "or any member or examiner or referee thereof"; inserted (3) providing that the section does not apply to impairment evaluations under 39-71-711; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1985 Amendment: In six places, after "physician", inserted reference to panel of physicians, the first such reference in (2) being accomplished by substituting "physician or panel of physicians" for "physician or physicians"; and in (1)(b) in second sentence, after "physician", deleted "provided and paid for by himself".

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Equal Protection Violation Under Workers' Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act Requirements for Medical Examination: Grooms filed a workers' compensation claim with her insurer, the State Fund, alleging that she suffered from a skin allergy condition. The State Fund denied liability and requested that the Department of Labor and Industry process her claim under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana by scheduling a medical examination for her by a member of a panel of physicians. Grooms argued before the Supreme Court that her rights to equal protection were infringed by the requirement that if she requested a second medical examination, she would have to pay for it, whereas if her claim had been processed under the Workers' Compensation Act, then this section requires the insurer or the Department to pay for the cost of the examination. The Supreme Court held that Grooms misinterpreted the statutes because this section does not allow a workers' compensation claimant to request and obtain an examination at the insurer's expense but, rather, provides that an insurer or the Department may require the claimant to submit to physical examinations from time to time and provides that the entity requesting the examination must pay for it. As a result, the Supreme Court held that there was no disparate treatment between the two Acts. In response to Grooms' argument that the Occupational Disease Act violates the state constitutional equal protection clause by requiring a mandatory physical examination without providing for a waiver of the costs of the examination for an indigent claimant, the Supreme Court again held that Grooms misapprehended the statutes because 39-72-602 and 39-72-608 do not mandate an examination at the claimant's expense but provide that it is mandatory for a claimant to submit to a medical examination and require the claimant to pay for an examination only if the claimant is dissatisfied with the results of the first examination and requests a second examination. Because a second examination is not mandatory but optional at the choice of the claimant, the Supreme Court held that Grooms' right of equal protection was not violated. Grooms v. Ponderosa Inn, 283 M 459, 942 P2d 699, 54 St. Rep. 725 (1997).

Independent Medical Examination — Qualifications of Examining Physician — Determination of Applicable Law: In 1989, Blythe was stuck by a needle that had previously been used on an AIDS patient, and after that time, Blythe alleged that he was suffering from depression and hallucinations that prevented him from working. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that Blythe was malingering. The insurer required an independent medical examination (IME), and the Workers' Compensation Court allowed testimony on the issue of malingering from two Ph.D. clinical psychologists, one of whom conducted the IME by the order of the Workers' Compensation Court. Citing St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Sky Country, Inc., 239 M 376, 780 P2d 1135 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the applicable substantive law is the law as it was at the time of injury and that the applicable law for procedural purposes is the law at the time of trial. The issue of who is qualified to conduct an IME is procedural rather than substantive, so the applicable law is the 1993 version of this section. The Supreme Court also held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it treated the listing of types of treating physicians in 39-71-116 to be exemplary rather than exclusive. The Supreme Court noted that even if the list of types of physicians included a clinical psychologist, which it did not, the law also required that the physicians be licensed in Montana. The psychologist who conducted the IME was not licensed as a physician. The testimony of one of the psychologists was therefore inadmissible, but because the Supreme Court could not determine whether the outcome of the trial would have been different without the inadmissible testimony, it remanded the case to the Workers' Compensation Court for that determination. EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 281 M 50, 931 P2d 38, 54 St. Rep. 54 (1997).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Physician's Standard of Care Toward Examinee Sent to Physician by Examinee's Employer or Insurer or by Some Other Third Party: At the request of the workers' compensation insurer of an injured worker's employer, a physician examined the worker. He reported his findings to, and his fee was paid by, the insurer. He wrote the worker a letter telling her that she had a back sprain, that no treatment was needed, and that she had an impairment rating of 2% of the whole person. She went back to work, suffered a severely herniated disc in her back, and has significant physical limitations as a result. She sued the doctor for negligence. He claimed that he did not have a physician-patient relationship with her and therefore had no duty of care toward her. The Supreme Court held that based on 27-1-701, a physician who performs an examination of an employee, insured, or other person at the request of a third party has a duty to exercise the level of care required by the physician's professional training and experience and the duty to exercise ordinary care to: (1) discover those conditions that pose imminent danger to the examinee's physical and mental well-being; (2) take reasonable steps to communicate any such condition to the examinee; and (3) ensure that when the physician advises an examinee about a condition, the advice comports with the standard of care for the profession. The court stated that it was not thereby concluding that the physician has the same duty of care as toward a patient. Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

Insurer's Right to Choose Physician or Panel: Claimant contended that she had the right to refuse to submit to an examination by an independent medical panel because her attorney was suing the panel chairman and the clinic for malpractice. However, under this section, the insurer clearly has the right to employ a physician or panel of its own choosing to perform a medical evaluation and bears responsibility for paying for the panel. A claimant's safeguards against bias or unfairness in the examination include the right to have a physician present at the examination and the right to cross-examine the panel doctors at trial. Young v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 248 M 46, 807 P2d 1369, 48 St. Rep. 316 (1991).

Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege by Workers' Compensation Claimant — Discovery: Although there is no direct statement in the Workers' Compensation Act or in the Procedural Rules of the Workers' Compensation Court regarding waiver of the physician-patient privilege, 39-71-604 and this section imply that an injured employee, to sustain a right to workers' compensation benefits, must waive any privilege or claim of confidentiality as to medical information relating to compensability of his claim. If a claimant exercises his right under 26-1-805 or 50-16-525 to prevent any medical witness from disclosing confidential health information, and subsequently application is made by the adverse party to the Workers' Compensation Court for an order authorizing discovery, the court should authorize such discovery as is relevant to the subject involved in the pending action. The information obtained must be reasonably necessary to determine compensability. Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987).

Temporary Total Disability Awarded During Period of Medical Testing: Where the Workers' Compensation Court ordered the claimant to undergo spinal nerve tests on the strength of medical testimony that the tests were needed in order to restore the claimant to his best physical condition, the court did not err in awarding the claimant temporary total disability payments during the period of testing. While he undergoes treatment, the claimant will of necessity experience a total loss of wages. Therefore the requirements of the statutory definition of "total temporary disability" were met and the award was proper. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Pain Insufficient to Establish Percentage Disability Rating: Plaintiff suffered a compensable work-related injury, which was later aggravated in a fight at work. Conflicting medical testimony was presented as to the amount of disability before and after the fight. The hearings examiner decided that a percentage of disability could only be arrived at by conjecture based on pain. The judge approved the finding of a 25% disability to the whole man. The Supreme Court held that evidence of pain was insufficient in and of itself to establish a percentage disability rating and remanded the case for determination of that issue. Penny v. The Anaconda Co., 194 M 409, 632 P2d 1114, 38 St. Rep. 1429 (1981).

Inapplicable to Workers' Compensation Court: This section is limited to the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) itself and cannot be construed to allow the use of written medical reports in Workers' Compensation Court in violation of the right to cross-examination. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11, 35 St. Rep. 1345 (1978), clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Admissibility of Medical Reports: It is well settled that it is not an abuse of discretion for the Workers' Compensation Court to consider the contents of medical reports contained in the case file before the court in spite of their alleged hearsay nature when counsel for defendant fails to object. Hayes v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 513, 579 P2d 1225 (1978).

Medical Reports Considered: The Workers' Compensation Court properly considered unsworn written medical reports without violating Montana Rules of Evidence regarding hearsay, since the court is not bound by common law and statutory rules of evidence, and without violating claimant's right to cross-examination because she had the opportunity at the hearing to present rebutting medical evidence. Stevens v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 176 M 61, 575 P2d 1326, 35 St. Rep. 278 (1978).

Absent Witness: It was improper for workers' compensation hearing examiner, when confronted with conflicting medical testimony, to seek the opinion of an independent physician who was not a witness at the hearing without granting claimant an opportunity to cross-examine and rebut his findings. Rumsey v. Cardinal Petroleum, 166 M 17, 530 P2d 433 (1975).

Penalties Not Self-Executing: The statute is mandatory, but it is not self-executing, and the mere assertion by the insurer that an injured worker had refused to submit to an examination would not automatically invoke the penalties provided for use only in case of a refusal; the administrative agency or a court must decide if there has been a refusal. Burns v. Aetna Life Ins., Co., 95 M 186, 26 P2d 175 (1933).

Unreasonable Demand: The demand regarding the type of physical examination must be reasonable, and a claimant who had submitted to previous physical examinations but who refused to enter the hospital for 4 to 6 days for extended tests on her injured hand was within her rights to refuse such an examination procedure. Burns v. Aetna Life Ins., Co., 95 M 186, 26 P2d 175 (1933).

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 33(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Section 11] [39-71-606] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims filed on or after March 27, 1973."

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 619 inserted (2) requiring distribution of a document describing current benefits and entitlements; and inserted (3) requiring plan No. 2 and plan No. 3 insurers to notify employer of claim reopening. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Chapter 630 inserted (2) requiring distribution of a document describing current benefits and entitlements. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Subsection (2) was identical in the two chapters with a slight change in style. The codifier chose the more appropriate of the two.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Section 15, Ch. 630, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 16, Ch. 630, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1981 Amendment: Added (2) requiring notice to employer of ongoing claims against his account if he requests.

Case Notes

Automatic Acceptance of Claim — Error to Deny Benefits With No Finding of Maximum Healing or Intervening Event: Chaney claimed that he was injured in 1983 when he slipped and fell at his employing sawmill, which was then insured by USF&G. Chaney also consulted several physicians between 1989 and 1992 concerning numbness in his hands. In 1992, Chaney had surgery to correct carpal tunnel syndrome. State Fund paid benefits while reserving its rights against Chaney and USF&G, but the Workers' Compensation Court held that Chaney was not entitled to benefits. The Supreme Court held that USF&G automatically accepted the claim when it failed to deny it (see 1997 amendment) and that by accepting the claim in this fashion, Chaney had satisfied his initial burden to prove that he sustained a compensable injury and that there was a causal connection between his injury and his current condition. Citing Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113 (1993), and Haag v. Mont. School Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693 (1995), the Supreme Court held that without any proof of maximum healing or an intervening event, it was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to deny benefits. Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996).

Failure to Accept or Deny Claim Within Thirty Days Is Acceptance as Matter of Law — Solheim Reversed — Options for Insurer: After Haag injured his shoulder while working for a school district, he filed a timely claim with the district's workers' compensation insurer. More than 2 months later, the claims adjuster for the district's insurer denied the claim. The Workers' Compensation Court, relying upon Solheim v. Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034 (1984), held that the insurer's failure to respond within the 30-day time period provided in subsection (1) of this section was not an automatic acceptance of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Solheim. The Supreme Court held that in deciding Solheim, it had exceeded its proper role as a court, that 39-71-608 provides an insurer with an alternative to admitting liability, and that 39-71-609 and 39-71-610 provide an insurer with a means to subsequently deny liability after accepting liability under this section or beginning payments with a reservation of rights under 39-71-608. (See 1997 amendment.) The Supreme Court also noted that in this case, the insurer could not later contest the claim on the basis of fraud because the issue of fraud was not properly before the Workers' Compensation Court. Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Liability for Failure to Notify of Claim Denial Subject to Existence of Employer/Employee Relationship: The plaintiff owner of a semitrailer truck who was injured while unloading the defendant's hay brought an action in the Workers' Compensation Court for payment for his injuries. On appeal of that court's judgment, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's argument that the insurer was liable for benefits because of its failure to deny benefits within 30 days ignored the fact that there was no employer/employee relationship between the parties. The 20% penalty provided in 39-71-2907 for paying unreasonably delayed claims applies to delays in denial longer than the 30 days specified in 39-71-606 and provides sufficient protection for persons in the position of the plaintiff. That section is therefore inapplicable in the absence of the requisite employee relationship. Solheim v. Tom Davis Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034, 41 St. Rep. 326 (1984), overruled in Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Failure to Give Notice: Failure of an employer to give an employee written notice of denial of his claim does not remove the employer from coverage under this chapter or subject him to a common-law tort action. Jacques v. Nelson, 180 M 415, 591 P2d 181, 36 St. Rep. 287 (1979).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 619 near beginning of first sentence, after "department", deleted "and in the discretion of the department", after "payments" deleted "for not more than 30 days", and after "information" inserted "when an injured worker unreasonably fails to keep scheduled medical appointments" and inserted second sentence relating to forfeiture of suspended benefits. Unilateral Termination — Ineffective: An employee or his insurer may not unilaterally terminate workers' compensation benefits. Attempted termination is ineffective, and the employer remains liable until termination is properly accomplished. Clark v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co., 172 M 8, 560 P2d 515 (1977).

Insurer: The term "insurer" used in this section refers to every insurer under any one of the three plans for payment of benefits, and includes employers who are their own insurers under plan I. McMillen v. Arthur G. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975).

The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Solheim. Payment of Benefits for Five Years Not Waiver of Right to Deny Benefits: Five years after injuring his elbow, Grenz submitted a claim for his hospitalization for depression and psychotherapy. The insurer refused to pay on the grounds that the treatment was not related to the elbow injury. Grenz argued that the insurer had waived its right to deny benefits because it had paid benefits for 5 years. The Supreme Court held that the insurer, by making payments, did not waive its right to subsequently assert nonliability for the claimant's condition insofar as it was not causally related to the elbow injury. Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 250 M 373, 820 P2d 742, 48 St. Rep. 967 (1991).

No Waiver of Defenses: An insurer did not waive all defenses regarding the reopening of a claim when it accepted liability and made payments of benefits for the original industrial accident. Stangler v. Home Ins. Co., 229 M 251, 746 P2d 99, 44 St. Rep. 1944 (1987).

Violations Technical — No Bad Faith: The insurer's violation of this section was technical in nature and does not constitute bad faith. Much of the claimed delay in paying claimant's claim was due to her own calculated and fraudulent conduct. Summary judgment in favor of the insurer was proper because claimant failed to show any disputed material fact. Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105, 44 St. Rep. 1221 (1987).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 174 inserted second sentence in (2); and inserted (2)(a) through (2)(d) outlining criteria insurer is required to determine prior to converting temporary total or temporary partial disability benefits to permanent partial disability benefits; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 30, 2001.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; and inserted (2) allowing termination of benefits. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1989 Amendment: Chapter 333 in middle of first sentence, before "biweekly compensation benefits", inserted "all"; and inserted second sentence providing that for injuries occurring prior to July 1, 1987, insurer must give 14 days' written notice to claimant before reducing benefits from total to partial. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Case Notes

Fourteen-Day Notice Requirement Inapplicable to Reduction in Benefits: Wallace, injured while delivering a grain bin, appealed a Workers' Compensation Court decision denying retroactive reinstatement of total disability benefits, alleging that state law required State Fund to give him 14 days' notice before reducing benefits from total to partial. In affirming the Workers' Compensation Court decision, the Supreme Court held that the 14-day notice requirement does not apply to the reduction of benefits because Wallace's benefits were reduced after he realized income from subsequent employment as a real estate agent. Wallace v. Professional Farm Sys., 2000 MT 310, 302 M 442, 14 P3d 1234, 57 St. Rep. 1315 (2000).

No Duty of Employer to Renotify Claimant of Intent to Reduce Benefits Once Coles Test Fulfilled: The test set out in Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048, 42 St. Rep. 1238 (1985), ensures that an insurer provide a claimant with the minimum information necessary to discharge its duty to investigate the extent of a claimant's disability before a benefit reduction or termination may occur and includes a requirement of notice to the claimant of receipt of the report attached to a copy of the report. Until the physician's report is made and the claimant notified of it, benefits may not be reduced. In addition, the insurer is required by this section to provide the claimant with at least 14 days' notice of its intent to terminate benefits. This section contains no expiration provision that would render the notice ineffective by passage of time. There is nothing in law that prohibits the statutory notice from being given until after the Coles test is completed or that, once properly given, causes the notice to somehow expire. In the present case, the employer had no duty to renotify claimant of its intention to reduce benefits once the Coles test was fulfilled. Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 279 M 472, 929 P2d 205, 53 St. Rep. 1241 (1996).

"Coles" Criteria Inapplicable When Employee Returns to Work: Larson, a parts manager for a truck dealership, suffered a nonwork-related heart attack in 1980 but returned to work full-time in 1981. Then, in July 1981, Larson suffered a left inguinal hernia after lifting a heavy truck spring at his job. The Workers' Compensation Court refused to require Larson's insurer to comply with criteria used to determine the nature and extent of Larson's injuries, as those criteria were set forth in Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048 (1985), and as were further applied in Wood v. Consol. Freightways, 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502 (1991). The Supreme Court held that when an employee returns to work, the employee is no longer experiencing a wage loss and that the employer can therefore rightfully terminate temporary total disability benefits without proceeding with an investigation under this section because if the duty to investigate was statutorily discharged, the Coles criteria no longer apply. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), followed in Wallace v. Professional Farm Sys., 2000 MT 310, 302 M 442, 14 P3d 1234, 57 St. Rep. 1315 (2000).

Failure to Accept or Deny Claim Within Thirty Days Is Acceptance as Matter of Law — Solheim Reversed — Options for Insurer: After Haag injured his shoulder while working for a school district, he filed a timely claim with the district's workers' compensation insurer. More than 2 months later, the claims adjuster for the district's insurer denied the claim. The Workers' Compensation Court, relying upon Solheim v. Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034 (1984), held that the insurer's failure to respond within the 30-day time period provided in 39-71-606(1) was not an automatic acceptance of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Solheim. The Supreme Court held that in deciding Solheim, it had exceeded its proper role as a court, that 39-71-608 provides an insurer with an alternative to admitting liability, and that 39-71-610 and this section provide an insurer with a means to subsequently deny liability after accepting liability under 39-71-606 or beginning payments with a reservation of rights under 39-71-608. The Supreme Court also noted that in this case, the insurer could not later contest the claim on the basis of fraud because the issue of fraud was not properly before the Workers' Compensation

Court. Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Failure to Show Suitable Work Available: The claimant was injured resulting from his work in the logging industry. The insurer terminated payments to him upon receiving a report from his doctor stating that the claimant was physically able to perform janitorial duties. The Workers' Compensation Court applied the four-part test established in Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048 (1985), and affirmed the insurer's decision to terminate benefits. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the doctor's report stated only that the claimant could physically perform janitorial duties and did not show that he possessed the necessary experience to obtain work as a janitor. Wilhelm v. EBI/Orion Group, 242 M 285, 790 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 699 (1990).

Violations Technical — No Bad Faith: The insurer's violation of 39-71-608 was technical in nature and does not constitute bad faith. Much of the claimed delay in paying claimant's claim was due to her own calculated and fraudulent conduct. Summary judgment in favor of the insurer was proper because claimant failed to show any disputed material fact. Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105, 44 St. Rep. 1221 (1987).

Liability for Benefits Following Unilateral Termination: If the employer unilaterally terminates workers' compensation benefits, such attempted termination is ineffective, following Clark v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co., 172 M 8, 560 P2d 515 (1977). Once it has been determined that this section and Clark have been violated, the carrier remains liable for the payment of benefits until the termination is accomplished by following the statutory notice provision. Catteyson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979).

Statutory Requirement: An insurer remains liable for the payment of benefits until the termination is accomplished by following the statutory provisions. Clark v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co., 172 M 8, 560 P2d 515 (1977).

Liberal Construction Statute Applied: When no effort was made by claimant to comply with the statute, the claimant cannot turn to the liberal construction statute for relief. Klein v. Independent Wholesale Assoc. Grocers, 167 M 341, 538 P2d 1358 (1975).

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 377 in first sentence in two places after "hearing" inserted "or mediation" (first occurrence rendered void by Ch. 442 amendment) and near beginning of third sentence after "hearing" inserted "before the workers' compensation court"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1999.

Chapter 442 in first sentence after the first "hearing" inserted "before the workers' compensation court or prior to mediation" and at end inserted "or mediation"; inserted second sentence concerning appeal to workers' compensation court; in third sentence after "hearing" inserted "before the workers' compensation court"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(1), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Case Notes

Denial of Attorney Fees and Penalty Proper: Correspondence from a doctor created an issue with regard to petitioner's physical complaints. Therefore, it was not unreasonable for the insurer to rely on that information as a basis for termination of benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in its denial of attorney fees and a 20% penalty. Satterlee v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 280 M 85, 929 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 1310 (1996).

Employer Investigation of Injury — No Duty to Ignore Statements Employee Made While in Pain: A self-insured employer's duty to reasonably investigate and evaluate a claim would not be expanded by the court to require the employer to ignore the employee's initial statements to his supervisors and to doctors or to ignore the doctors' reports, on the basis that at the time of the employee's statements to the supervisors and doctors, he was, allegedly, in agonizing pain. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Employer Investigation of Injury — No Duty to Try to Uncover Facts Conflicting With Initial Statements of Employee: A self-insured employer's duty to reasonably investigate and evaluate a claim would not be expanded by the court to require the employer to ask the employee followup questions to attempt to uncover any facts additional to or different from those that the employee initially provided. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Leg Injury Occurring While Walking — Reasonableness of Denial of Claim: At the time that a torn leg muscle injury occurred, the employee told several supervisors and several examining doctors that it occurred while he was merely walking. The employer denied compensation on this basis and after obtaining legal advice. More than a month later, a letter from the employee's attorney, stating that the injury occurred when the employee turned sharply while walking quickly, caused the employer to reevaluate its denial. The employer again denied compensation, saying that a factual dispute requiring resolution by the Workers' Compensation Court had arisen as to the circumstances surrounding the injury and as to the employee's credibility. Substantial evidence supported that court's determination that the employer's denial of compensation based on the existence of a factual dispute was reasonable. That court's further decision, that the employer was not unreasonable in the employer's interpretation of the law as allowing the employer to claim that the injury was not compensable, was supported by the case law, a reading of which did not clearly show that there was no genuine doubt of compensability from a legal standpoint. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

No Duty to Accept Claim Merely Because One Doctor for Employee Says Injury Is Work-Related When Substantial Prior Evidence Shows It Is Not: The employer did not have a legal duty to accept a claim and pay compensation as of the time that the employer received from one of the employee's doctors an indication that the injury was work-related. Prior to that, the employer had received numerous indications from the employee and his doctors that the injury was not compensable, raising a genuine doubt over liability. Marcott v. La. Pac. Corp., 275 M 197, 911 P2d 1129, 53 St. Rep. 106 (1996).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees Proper: When the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding that the employee was entitled to benefits, substantial credible evidence supported the conclusion that denial of benefits was unreasonable and that the employee was entitled to costs and attorney fees. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Section Not Applicable to Uninsured Employer: Plaintiff filed a claim for on-the-job injuries, and defendant was determined to be an uninsured employer. Plaintiff's claim benefits were paid by the uninsured employers' fund, and defendant was assessed a penalty. The court denied plaintiff's claim for attorney fees, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that this section applies only to insurers, and plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees under this statute. Clarke v. Massey, 271 M 412, 897 P2d 1085, 52 St. Rep. 538 (1995).

Lack of Minimal Review and Evaluation of Validity of Claim as Unreasonable Conduct — Award of Fees Warranted: The Workers' Compensation Court held that a claimant's benefits were improperly terminated, but declined to award penalty fees and attorney fees to claimant. Issues of penalty and attorney fees must be decided based upon a determination of whether the insurer was unreasonable in terminating benefits. An insurer has a duty to make at least a minimal investigation of a claim's validity. Absent an investigation, denial of a claim for benefits is unreasonable. The failure to provide even a minimal review and evaluation once investigations are completed rises to the level of unreasonable conduct by State Fund, and the award of penalty fees and attorney fees is warranted. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994). See also Gaumer v. Dept. of Highways, 243 M 414, 795 P2d 77 (1990), Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95 (1993), and Stordalen v. Ricci's Food Farm, 261 M 256, 862 P2d 393 (1993).

Finding of Not Unreasonable Not Amounting to Finding of Reasonable: Workers' compensation claimant who was successful in the Workers' Compensation Court and on appeal requested costs and attorney fees, claiming that State Fund was unreasonable in delaying and in the manner of handling the claim and benefits. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's finding that State Fund was not unreasonable but also stated that the finding was not the equivalent to a finding of reasonable conduct, quoting the Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that "the Court has been hindered throughout this case by the convenient forgetfulness of the parties, disappearance of key bits of evidence and the self-serving testimony by the parties. The Court reaches the conclusion that neither party is credible and both parties have been less than candid with the Court. The present case epitomizes Webster's definition of a dog-and-pony show". Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Reasonableness to Include Delay or Refusal of Payment and Manner of Conducting Defense, but Not Difference Between Requested and Granted Amounts: A State Fund defense to a claim is not reasonable merely because State Fund believes it is necessary to defend the claim. Reasonableness also refers to the manner in which the defense is conducted and delay in or refusal to make payments. In addition, reasonableness had nothing to do with the amount of benefits claimant requested, the amount awarded by the Workers' Compensation Court, or whether claimant requested more than was awarded. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Case Remanded for Consideration Pursuant to Statute and for Clarification: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that Lovell had been incorrectly denied benefits and awarded him attorney fees and costs for that reason. The Supreme Court found that the Workers' Compensation Court had not analyzed the question of attorney fees under this section and applicable case law. The Supreme Court also found that the record was unclear as to whether Lovell had been reimbursed by the State Fund for amounts improperly withheld. Because the case was to be remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court on another issue, the Supreme Court directed the Workers' Compensation Court to readdress the issue of attorney fees. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993).

Insurer Not Unreasonable in Denying Benefits to Widow of Tavern Operator: Loos was killed during the robbery of a bar that he was operating. The insurer argued that Loos was the owner of the bar and because he was a sole proprietor and not an employee, his widow was not entitled to workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that although Loos ran the bar, a sale of the bar had never been completed and that because the liquor license was still in Waldo's name, that constituted sufficient control by Waldo over Loos to make Loos an employee and not a sole proprietor. The Supreme Court also held that the insurer had not acted unreasonably in denying benefits because a workers' compensation mediator and a hearings examiner had determined that Loos was not an employee. Loos v. Waldo, 257 M 266, 849 P2d 166, 50 St. Rep. 262 (1993).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Attorney Fees Owing Based on Difference Between Amount of Settlement and Amount of Compensable Benefits Previously Paid: Galetti suffered a compensable back injury in 1983 while employed by Montana Power Company (MPC), and MPC accepted liability for the injury. Following a snowmobile outing in 1994, Galetti suffered a flareup of the back injury. Galetti's medical costs were paid by his health insurance, and Galetti then sought recovery of expenses, including attorney fees, through workers' compensation. MPC offered Galetti a cash amount to settle without accepting liability, but Galetti declined and later filed this action. At a Workers' Compensation Court hearing, MPC accepted liability. The court denied Galetti's request for fees pursuant to this section (1983) because liability was conceded at the commencement of the hearing, so adjudication of the claim was unnecessary. Galetti appealed, asserting error in denial of attorney fees. Pursuant to Allen v. Employers Commercial Union, 246 M 105, 803 P2d 644 (1990), MPC's refusal to pay benefits on grounds that a subsequent injury relieved it of further liability for Galetti's back condition was tantamount to a termination of compensation benefits, so the court correctly concluded that MPC was not liable for attorney fees under this section because the concession of liability at the commencement of the hearing did not amount to an adjudication of compensability. However, that conclusion did not preclude MPC's liability for attorney fees under 39-71-612 (1983). That statute had three elements: (1) an employer or insurer must pay or tender payment of compensation under ch. 71 or 72 of Title 39; (2) there must be a controversy that relates to the amount of compensation due; and (3) the settlement or award must be greater than the amount paid or tendered by the employer or insurer. All three elements were met in this case; thus, the court erred by concluding that Galetti was not entitled to attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that Galetti was entitled to attorney fees based on the difference between the settlement amount and the amount of compensable benefits arising from his back injury that MPC had previously paid, which was equal to the amount of compensable benefits for which MPC conceded liability at the beginning of the workers' compensation hearing. Galetti v. Mont. Power Co., 2000 MT 234, 301 M 314, 8 P3d 812, 57 St. Rep. 971 (2000).

Causation Disputable at Time of Trial — Case Remanded to Workers' Compensation Court for Determination of Statutory Penalty — Fees and Costs Awarded: Briney injured his back in 1981 in a work-related accident but was allowed by his physician to return to work the same year. In the years following the injury, Briney had good days and bad days, was treated by several physicians, and sometimes missed work. In 1993, he underwent unrelated surgery and, because he was inactive for a period of time following surgery, was not able to continue his exercise regimen to strengthen his back. Consequently, his back condition deteriorated and he was unable to return to work after the surgery. After his employer's workers' compensation insurer agreed to pay temporary total disability, Briney sought compensation for a permanent partial disability, but the Workers' Compensation Court Judge denied the claim, holding that Briney's current condition was not caused by the 1981 work-related injury but was caused by multiple injuries or aggravations over the years since 1981. The Supreme Court reversed, pointing to testimony linking Briney's current physical condition to his 1981 injury and relying upon its holding in Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113 (1993), in which the Supreme Court held that once a worker has proved a work-related injury and produces evidence that the injury is the cause of the worker's present condition, the burden shifts to the insurer to prove that the worker's present condition is due to other injuries. Because the Supreme Court found that no such evidence had been presented by the insurer, it held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred in denying benefits. However, the Supreme Court refused to hold that, as a matter of law, causation was indisputable at the time that the trial before the Workers' Compensation Court began and that a penalty should therefore be awarded pursuant to Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10 (1981). The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case to the Workers' Compensation Court to determine whether Briney was entitled to the statutory penalty. However, the Supreme Court did award costs and attorney fees because the insurer denied that Briney's disability was related to his 1981 injury. Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Insurer Liable for Fees and Costs When Claim Accepted by Virtue of Statute: Chaney claimed that he was injured in 1983 when he slipped and fell at his employing sawmill, which was then insured by USF&G. Chaney also consulted several physicians between 1989 and 1992 concerning numbness in his hands. In 1992, Chaney had surgery to correct carpal tunnel syndrome. State Fund paid benefits while reserving its rights against Chaney and USF&G, but the Workers' Compensation Court held that Chaney was not entitled to benefits. The Supreme Court reversed and held that Chaney was entitled to benefits because USF&G had not denied the claim within 30 days and had not met its burden of proving maximum healing of the old injury and subsequent reinjury while working for a different employer. The Supreme Court also held that Chaney was entitled to costs and fees under this section because benefits were previously denied but had now been granted on appeal. Chaney v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty, 276 M 513, 917 P2d 912, 53 St. Rep. 499 (1996).

Proper Termination of Benefits — Plaintiff Not Entitled to Attorney Fees, Costs, or Penalty: After Beery was injured in a fall from an oil rig in 1984, he was evaluated by a medical panel that concluded that he did not need domiciliary care. CNA Insurance Company, Beery's workers' compensation insurer, reviewed the findings of the panel and terminated coverage for domiciliary care in August of 1991. The Supreme Court found that because CNA had properly terminated domiciliary care benefits, Beery was not entitled to attorney fees, costs, or a penalty. Beery v. Grace Drilling, 260 M 157, 859 P2d 429, 50 St. Rep. 980 (1993).

Medical Benefits Found Payable — Fees and Costs for Medical Benefits Payable: Claimant's medical benefits were found payable, but she was found not to be entitled to disability benefits; therefore, attorney fees and costs associated with litigating the issue of medical benefits, but not the issue of disability benefits, were payable. Weaver v. Buttrey Food & Drug, 255 M 90, 841 P2d 476, 49 St. Rep. 897 (1992).

Claimant Unsuccessful on Appeal — Not Entitled to Costs and Fees: A claimant who is unsuccessful in claims before the Workers' Compensation Court and on appeal before the Supreme Court is not entitled to costs and attorney fees. Kelly v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 200, 835 P2d 774, 49 St. Rep. 699 (1992).

Reopening of Claim and Receipt of Further Benefits — Attorney Fees Allowed: A Supreme Court finding that claimant was entitled to reopen his claim and receive further benefits after a final settlement agreement was signed by mutual mistake also entitled claimant to an award of reasonable costs and attorney fees. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

Insurers Not Entitled to Costs and Attorney Fees: The insurer sought reimbursement for costs and attorney fees incurred at a hearing on the basis that the claimant had offered to pay them. The Supreme Court held that insurers are not entitled to costs and attorney fees under the Workers' Compensation Act. Jaenish v. EBI/Orion Group, 248 M 383, 812 P2d 1241, 48 St. Rep. 474 (1991).

Refusal of Employer to Pay Benefits After Date of Second Injury Tantamount to Termination of Benefits: Employer maintained it did not deny the claim for benefits or terminate compensation benefits but merely contested the extent of its obligation to claimant following his second injury. However, the employer paid medical costs and disability benefits up until the date of the second injury, refusing to pay any benefits due after that date, which was tantamount to a termination of compensation benefits sufficient to trigger the award of attorney fees and costs under this section as it read in 1974 when claimant was initially injured. Allen v. Employers Commercial Union, 246 M 105, 803 P2d 644, 47 St. Rep. 2280 (1990).

Attorney Fees Due Claimant When Insurer Withdraws Settlement Offer Prior to Hearing and Argues That Claimant Should Receive Nothing: Prior to the hearing, the insurer offered the claimant approximately $30,000 to settle his claim. The insurer withdrew the offer when the claimant did not accept it within 15 days. At the hearing, the insurer argued that the claimant was entitled to no recovery. The claimant was awarded less than $30,000, and the insurer contended that the claimant was therefore entitled to no attorney fees. The Supreme Court disagreed, stating that when the insurer refuses to acknowledge that the claimant is entitled to anything at the trial, it is irrelevant if the award is less than the original settlement offer and the claimant is entitled to receive attorney fees if he is successful in obtaining a recovery. Carroll v. CNA Ins. Co., 240 M 151, 783 P2d 387, 46 St. Rep. 2014 (1989).

Return of Contingent Attorney Fees Based on Overpayment — Failure of Claimant to Comply With Terms of Award: When an attorney's fees were based solely on a percentage of benefits paid to his client and an order granting benefits specifically stated that the insurer would be credited any overpayment if claimant failed to comply with the order, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in ordering repayment of attorney fees upon claimant's failure to meet the conditions of the benefits award. Champion Int'l Corp. v. McChesney, 239 M 287, 779 P2d 527, 46 St. Rep. 1689 (1989). See also Reil v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 274, 837 P2d 1334, 49 St. Rep. 734 (1992).

Failure to Request Evidentiary Hearing or Raise Timely Objection — Issue of Attorney Fees Not Preserved for Appeal: The Supreme Court was precluded from reviewing the correctness of the computation of an award of attorney fees in a workers' compensation case because the defendant failed to either timely object or request an evidentiary hearing contesting the proposed order granting the fees. Defendant contended that there was no bar on appeal because: (1) the lower court abused its discretion; and (2) the plain error doctrine applied. However, the abuse of discretion standard is applied only when the usual requirements of preserving the issue at trial are met. Furthermore, the plain error exception will not be applied when failure or refusal to raise an issue in trial court is conscious and intentional on the part of trial counsel. Martinez v. Mont. Power Co., 239 M 281, 779 P2d 917, 46 St. Rep. 1684 (1989).

Attorney Fees Based on Award in Excess of Those Offered: The claimant argued that he should have received attorney fees based on a finding that benefits had been denied him. The Supreme Court stated that the claimant had asked for permanent disability payments for an alleged new injury and was awarded instead continued partial disability payments for a prior injury. Since he had been receiving some benefits, the attorney fees and costs were properly awarded pursuant to 39-71-612. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Claimant to Be Compensable — Success Not Issue: A claimant need only be adjudged compensable by the Workers' Compensation Judge or on appeal in order to recover reasonable costs and attorney fees. Counsel for the insurance company was in error with the novel argument that because the claimant was not compensated the $73,250 he requested but was only awarded $36,625, he ended up receiving an amount that was mathematically closer to the $5,000 made as a settlement offer by the insurer than the $73,250 originally requested, and therefore he was not successful and was not entitled to attorney fees. Hartman v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins., 236 M 141, 768 P2d 1380, 46 St. Rep. 248 (1989), followed in Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 257 M 335, 849 P2d 1021, 50 St. Rep. 296 (1993).

Fees Not Granted to Insurance Companies: Liberty Mutual Insurance Company (Liberty) and the State Compensation Insurance Fund (State Fund) were named as defendants in an action involving an injured worker. State Fund was found to be liable for benefits to the worker, and Liberty moved for payment of its attorney fees by State Fund, alleging that its costs went to defending allegations by State Fund that Liberty was the insurer at risk. Although this section has undergone numerous revisions since passage in 1973, the purpose of the section remains intact. Attorney fees were meant to be provided to the claimant only (to ensure that the worker receives the full amount of available benefits), not to the defending insurance companies. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Evans Transfer & Storage, 234 M 209, 766 P2d 220, 45 St. Rep. 1848 (1988), distinguishing Belton v. Carlson Transp., 202 M 384, 658 P2d 405 (1983), and overruling Guild v. Rockwood Ins.

Co., 229 M 466, 747 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 2139 (1987), with respect to payment of attorney fees to a losing insurance company in a dispute between insurers.

Award of Attorney Fees on Subsequent Disability Hearing When Claimant Prevails: Claimant was awarded temporary total disability benefits plus attorney fees pursuant to this section. He later went to hearing again to determine his entitlement to increased partial disability payments and domiciliary care payments, both of which were disputed by the insurer. Claimant was found to be entitled to both payments, but an amount could not be determined. He later settled for an increase based on a court-suggested formula, and sought attorney fees. The new round of litigation did not fall under this section because the insurer did not deny liability but rather disputed the amount owed; therefore, 39-71-612 applied. Employer settled for more than the amount being paid prior to the hearing, so attorney fees were proper. Lamb v. Universal Ins. Co., 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965, 45 St. Rep 127 (1988).

Claim Adjudged Compensable — Attorney Fees Proper: The state fund denied a claim for benefits that was later adjudged compensable by the Workers' Compensation Court and the Supreme Court. This fit the statutory prerequisite providing for reasonable attorney fees. Milender v. Carpenter, 230 M 1, 748 P2d 932, 44 St. Rep. 2204 (1987).

Discounting Costs Unrelated to Issues of Insurer's Liability: Claimant hired an economist to discount attorney fees to present value. However, the Workers' Compensation Court decided to deny a lump-sum request, negating the need for the present value calculations, and the discounted fee was neither presented nor considered. Thus, in assessing insurer's liability, the court properly concluded that the discounting costs were unrelated to the issues. Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987).

Refusal of Award of Lump-Sum Attorney Fees Based on Projected Benefits — No Abuse of Discretion: The lower court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to award lump-sum attorney fees where claimant's counsel sought immediate contingent fees for benefits that would possibly be paid for 44 years since benefits would cease if claimant died or remarried and since a contingency fee agreement limited attorney fees to 33% of benefits received, benefits being paid on a biweekly rather than lump-sum basis. Swan v. Sletten Constr. Co., 223 M 477, 726 P2d 1170, 43 St. Rep. 1926 (1986), followed in Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987). See also Wood v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 353, 769 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 419 (1989).

Insurer Denial of Liability or Benefit Termination Required: A claimant is not entitled to attorney fees and costs under this section unless the insurer has denied liability for a claim or terminated benefits. Lasar v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 222 M 251, 721 P2d 352, 43 St. Rep. 1239 (1986), followed in Leikam v. Edson Express, 228 M 66, 740 P2d 1130, 44 St. Rep. 1347 (1987).

When Attorney Fees Denied: Attorney fees in workers' compensation cases are recoverable under this section when an insurer denies liability for a claim for compensation or terminates compensation benefits and the claimant is later adjudged compensable by the Workers' Compensation Judge or on appeal. In this case, the employer accepted liability for the claim, and the claimant was paid $41,269 temporary disability, $198 a week permanent disability, and $4,639 medical. Since liability was not denied, compensation benefits were not terminated, and attorney fees incurred in the claim against the third-party insurer were included in the computations in that judgment, the denial of attorney fees in this appeal was proper. Elwell v. Am. Smelting & Ref., Inc., 219 M 248, 711 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 1992 (1985).

Reasonable Attorney Fees — Sufficient Evidence to Support Award: Workers' Compensation Court did not err in awarding lump-sum attorney fees when claimant received periodic disability payments. The Workers' Compensation Court's authority to set a "reasonable" fee includes the power to set the kind of fee awarded. The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in relying on claimant's expert's calculations of the present value of the award even though the calculations lacked a proper foundation under strict evidence law. Conway v. Blackfeet Indian Dev., Inc., 217 M 54, 702 P2d 970, 42 St. Rep. 1020 (1985).

Hearing on Request for Attorney Fees: The Workers' Compensation Court determined claimant's award and ordered his counsel to submit a request for costs and attorney fees. After the submission, the employer objected to any attorney fee award in excess of the contingent fee agreement, and the objection was successful. It was not reversible error to enter the attorney fee order without giving claimant at least 5 days to respond to the objection. There was no rule requirement on the matter, and under Sorenson v. Drilcon, Inc., 204 M 258, 664 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 829 (1983), claimant could have requested an evidentiary hearing on the matter, even after the order granting the attorney fee. However, the case was remanded for a hearing on what the fee should be, taking into account the factors in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), with claimant having the primary obligation to present evidence from which the court could set the fee. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985).

Refusal to Hold Hearing on Attorney Fees as Abuse of Discretion — Questions of Fact Presented: Where the claimant brought a successful claim for compensation, requesting $3,491.52 in costs and $11,372 in attorney fees, and the Workers' Compensation Court awarded $2,951.53 in costs and $5,750 for attorney fees without holding a hearing and denied a hearing on or reconsideration of the order, the Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court abused its discretion to deny a hearing on the issue of costs and attorney fees. The record showed that a factual dispute existed as to whether opposing counsel had agreed to the fees sought by the claimant. While the court has discretion under Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011 (1980), to deny a hearing, the factual issues presented by this case could be resolved only by an evidentiary hearing. Thus, the hearing should not have been denied. Sorenson v. Drilcon, Inc., 204 M 258, 664 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 829 (1983).

Basis for Reasonable Attorney Fees — Factors: Plaintiff entered into a 25% contingent fee arrangement with his attorney in a workers' compensation case. After successful appeal to the Supreme Court, the plaintiff and attorney entered a 40% contingent fee agreement. On remand to consider proper fees, the Workers' Compensation Judge asked for a detailed statement and number of hours from the attorney. The attorney said he did not keep such records in contingent fee cases. The judge awarded a much lower percentage fee, and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court. The court restated its "net recovery" rule from Myers v. 4-B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977), saying attorney fees are to be above and beyond the compensation awarded to a successful claimant. The court noted that the Workers' Compensation Judge may set reasonable attorney fees and that administrative rules adopted specifically approve such arrangements. A reason for this is the "risk factor" that attorneys face whereby they may not receive any compensation. The factors to be considered are: (1) anticipated time and labor; (2) novelty and difficulty of the issues; (3) fee customarily charged; (4) possible total recovery; (5) time limitations; (6) nature and length of attorney-client relationship; (7) experience, skill, and reputation of the attorney; (8) client's ability to pay; and (9) market value of the lawyer's services. The court remanded for consideration of those factors. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), partially overruling Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011, 37 St. Rep. 1244 (1980), followed, as to the factors to be considered in determining the fee, in McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985), Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987), and in Worts v. Hardy Constr. Co., 249 M 477, 817 P2d 231, 48 St. Rep. 800 (1991).

Proper Section Where Claim Denied in Part: Where insurer did not dispute a claim for compensation but did dispute amount of compensation due, arguing initially that claimant's condition was temporary rather than permanent, attorney's fees and costs to the successful claimant are properly awarded under 39-71-612 rather than this section. Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982), distinguished in Komeotis v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153, 45 St. Rep. 1098 (1988).

Benefits Improperly Terminated — Penalty and Fees Awarded: Plaintiff was injured when a refrigerator he was lifting fell and smashed his hand and wrist. Plaintiff received temporary total benefits from December 7, 1976, until terminated on May 2, 1979. Plaintiff had heart surgery in 1977. In 1979 defendant terminated plaintiff's benefits claiming that he had no permanent disability from the accident and that his medical problems were nonindustrially related. The Workers' Compensation Court found that plaintiff's benefits were improperly terminated. The letter to plaintiff terminating his benefits was not supported by medical evidence. The Workers' Compensation Court properly awarded plaintiff a penalty amount of 20% and attorney fees because his benefits were improperly terminated. Novak v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 195 M 219, 638 P2d 390, 38 St. Rep. 1803 (1981).

Denial of Subsequent Claim After Grant of Initial Claim: Where an injured employee claimed benefits and the insurer paid them, stopping the benefits when employee returned to work, and some 2 years later the employee claimed he had been totally and permanently disabled as a result of the accident, and the insurer disputed the claim, refused to pay benefits, and went to hearing on the matter and lost, the insurer had denied liability for a claim later adjudged compensable, within the meaning of this section, and the award of attorney fees to claimant was proper. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Attorneys' Fees a Matter of Discretion: The failure of a Workers' Compensation Judge to provide a hearing on a determination of attorneys' fees pursuant to this section is not per se an abuse of discretion. This section, as amended, does not require an evidentiary hearing to determine attorneys' fees in workers' compensation cases. Rather, the method used to fix attorneys' fees is discretionary with the Workers' Compensation Judge, and the matter of allowing a hearing concerning attorneys' fees is also discretionary. Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011, 37 St. Rep. 1244 (1980).

Suspension of Compensation — Attorney Fees: An award of attorney fees pursuant to this section was proper since appellant was not justified in suspending compensation to obtain medical testimony, such suspension being applicable only when the insurer is having difficulty receiving medical information and after following procedural prerequisites. Furthermore, it is unnecessary to introduce evidence per se of attorney fees in a workers' compensation case, as the procedure entails submission of a verified petition to the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), setting forth the number of hours spent and services performed. Smith v. Pac. Ins. Co., 177 M 267, 581 P2d 834 (1978).

Penalty: This section is meant to penalize an insurer which cavalierly terminates a claimant's benefits without prior approval of the Workers' Compensation Court. However, an insurer is entitled to rely on the opinion of the Workers' Compensation Court, and need not bear the costs of an appeal when the court found the claimant was no longer entitled to benefits and the finding was reversed on appeal. Schumacher v. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 175 M 411, 574 P2d 987 (1977).

When Adjudged Total Rather Than Partial Disability: When the Workers' Compensation Court adjudges that total disability benefits are due rather than the partial benefits being paid by the insurer, this section authorizes an award of attorney fees against the insurer. Myers v. 4 B's Restaurants, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977).

Adjudication Required: Under this section there must be an adjudication of the claim as compensable before attorney fees will be assessed against the insurer. Cosgrove v. Indus. Indem. Co., 170 M 249, 552 P2d 622 (1976), followed in McNeel v. Holy Rosary Hosp., 228 M 424, 742 P2d 1020, 44 St. Rep. 1649 (1987), and in Leikam v. Edson Express, 228 M 66, 740 P2d 1130, 44 St. Rep. 1347 (1987), where the parties settled their compensation dispute before the trial date, vacating the trial. This is true even though the insurer would not have accepted liability but for the efforts of the worker's attorney, and liability was not accepted until the commencement of the trial. This section is clear on its face, and the equitable arguments in the worker's favor must be presented to the Legislature. Yearout v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 222 M 65, 719 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1063 (1986).

Constitutionality: This section does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the United States and Montana Constitutions by allowing costs and attorneys' fees to successful claimants but not to successful insurers because the classification adopted by the Legislature is reasonable. McMillen v. Arthur G. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975).

Insurer: The term "insurer" used in this section refers to every insurer under any one of the three plans for payment of benefits, and includes employers who are their own insurers under plan I. McMillen v. Arthur G. McKee & Co., 166 M 400, 533 P2d 1095 (1975).

1987 Amendment: In (1), in two places before "insurer", deleted references to employer, near beginning substituted "submits a written offer of" for "tenders", near middle substituted "offered" for "tendered", and after "attorney's fee" inserted "and costs"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) When an attorney's fee is awarded against an employer or insurer under this section there may be further assessed against the employer or insurer reasonable costs, fees, and mileage for necessary witnesses attending a hearing on the claimant's behalf. Both the necessity for the witness and the reasonableness of the fees must be approved by the workers' compensation judge"; inserted (2) allowing attorneys' fees only if insurer's actions were unreasonable and providing that written payment offer made 30 days or more before hearing is considered a valid offer; and inserted (3) providing that a finding of unreasonableness does not constitute bad faith or violation of unfair trade practices provisions.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Denial of Payment for Medicine for Stress Based on Doctor's Statement That Stress Was Caused by Injury and by Proceedings in Case: A State Fund claims examiner's investigation into a doctor's prescription of medicine for exacerbated gastroesophageal reflux consisted solely of her reading of the doctor's notes, which stated that the exacerbation was caused by stress connected to her injury, subsequent problems, trial of the case, rehabilitation, and other matters connected to the case. She then denied payment for the medication. At least a minimal investigation of a claim's validity is necessary for denial to be reasonable. The payment was properly denied because there was evidence in the doctor's notes to support a reasonably debatable argument that the need for the medicine arose from the trial and matters associated with it, not from the injury itself. Therefore, the worker was not entitled to penalties or attorney fees for denial of the payment. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Insurer That Settles on Courthouse Steps Need Not Pay Worker's Attorney Fees: Because the Legislature amended this section in 1987 by deleting language that allowed an award for attorney fees when an insurer settles "on the courthouse steps", the court declined to rule, that as a matter of policy, an insurer who settles on the courthouse steps can be ordered to pay a worker's attorney fees. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Penalty, Award of Attorney Fees, or Sanction for Settling on Courthouse Steps: State Fund, without investigating and with no factual or legal basis, claimed a $50,000 subrogation right during a 6-month period, taking the position that it was the worker's burden to prove that there was no subrogation right. A week before trial, State Fund conceded the issue. The lower court's holding that a claim for subrogation as to benefits already paid does not constitute benefits due and cannot give rise to penalties or attorney fees under 39-71-2907 or this section was proper. "Benefits" and "compensation" do not include subrogation, and a judge awards no benefits or compensation in deciding a subrogation claim. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's opinion that State Fund's actions were worthy of sanctions. Section 39-71-2914 allows imposition of a sanction in a case such as this, and although the worker did not request a sanction, the lower court should have imposed one on its own initiative. However, because the worker did not raise the issue on appeal, the Supreme Court did not remand for imposition of a sanction. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Statute Not Applicable to Workers' Compensation Cases: Kloepfer appealed the Workers' Compensation Court's denial of her claim for $750 as cost for an expert medical witness. The Supreme Court held that 25-10-201 does not apply to workers' compensation cases and that Kloepfer was entitled to recover her costs. Kloepfer v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 272 M 78, 899 P2d 1081, 52 St. Rep. 663 (1995), overruling, as to the applicability of 25-10-201 to workers' compensation cases, Baeta v. Don Tripp Trucking, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566 (1992), and Stevens v. St. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962 (1994).

Loss of Part of Toe, Fracture of Another, and Resultant Sensitivity to Cold as Permanent Partial Disability — Justifiable Dispute as to Benefits: The insurer did not act unreasonably in denying permanent partial disability benefits. Therefore, the court properly denied claimant legal fees and a 20% penalty. There was a valid factual dispute and a valid question of legal interpretation of the pertinent statute. Claimant lost part of his fifth toe and had a fracture of his largest toe. Cold temperatures caused the foot and toes to ache. He was given an impairment rating of 1% of the whole man. The treating doctor's treatment notes did not indicate impairment of work, and the doctor's deposition was not clear on the issue. Claimant and the insurer disagreed on whether there was work impairment, and the Workers' Compensation Court found impairment. The pertinent statute had been amended in 1991 to provide that a claimant was not entitled to permanent partial disability benefits unless the medically determined physical restriction impaired the claimant's ability to work. Claimant's interpretation of the statute was justifiably disputed by the insurer, and there was no case law to aid in interpretation. Williams v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 270 M 209, 891 P2d 502, 52 St. Rep. 148 (1995).

Court Agreement With Amount Awarded by State Fund — Attorney Fees Improper: When the Workers' Compensation Court agrees with the award calculated by State Fund, an award of attorney fees is inappropriate. David v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 435, 884 P2d 778, 51 St. Rep. 1105 (1994).

Finding of Not Unreasonable Not Amounting to Finding of Reasonable: Workers' compensation claimant who was successful in the Workers' Compensation Court and on appeal requested costs and attorney fees, claiming that State Fund was unreasonable in delaying and in the manner of handling the claim and benefits. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court's finding that State Fund was not unreasonable but also stated that the finding was not the equivalent to a finding of reasonable conduct, quoting the Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that "the Court has been hindered throughout this case by the convenient forgetfulness of the parties, disappearance of key bits of evidence and the self-serving testimony by the parties. The Court reaches the conclusion that neither party is credible and both parties have been less than candid with the Court. The present case epitomizes Webster's definition of a dog-and-pony show". Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Reasonableness to Include Delay or Refusal of Payment and Manner of Conducting Defense, but Not Difference Between Requested and Granted Amounts: A State Fund defense to a claim is not reasonable merely because State Fund believes it is necessary to defend the claim. Reasonableness also refers to the manner in which the defense is conducted and delay in or refusal to make payments. In addition, reasonableness had nothing to do with the amount of benefits claimant requested, the amount awarded by the Workers' Compensation Court, or whether claimant requested more than was awarded. Simons v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 262 M 438, 865 P2d 1118, 50 St. Rep. 1628 (1993).

Attorney Fees and Penalty to Be Imposed if State Fund Acted Unreasonably: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the State Fund acted unreasonably in denying Stordalen's request for a consultive examination but determined that Stordalen was not entitled to receive a penalty or attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court should make an award when it determines that the State Fund acted unreasonably. Stordalen v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 261 M 256, 862 P2d 393, 50 St. Rep. 1311 (1993), followed in Robertson v. Aero Power-Vac, Inc., 272 M 85, 899 P2d 1078, 52 St. Rep. 673 (1995).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Attorney Fees Owing Based on Difference Between Amount of Settlement and Amount of Compensable Benefits Previously Paid: Galetti suffered a compensable back injury in 1983 while employed by Montana Power Company (MPC), and MPC accepted liability for the injury. Following a snowmobile outing in 1994, Galetti suffered a flareup of the back injury. Galetti's medical costs were paid by his health insurance, and Galetti then sought recovery of expenses, including attorney fees, through workers' compensation. MPC offered Galetti a cash amount to settle without accepting liability, but Galetti declined and later filed this action. At a Workers' Compensation Court hearing, MPC accepted liability. The court denied Galetti's request for fees pursuant to 39-71-611 (1983) because liability was conceded at the commencement of the hearing, so adjudication of the claim was unnecessary. Galetti appealed, asserting error in denial of attorney fees. Pursuant to Allen v. Employers Commercial Union, 246 M 105, 803 P2d 644 (1990), MPC's refusal to pay benefits on grounds that a subsequent injury relieved it of further liability for Galetti's back condition was tantamount to a termination of compensation benefits, so the court correctly concluded that MPC was not liable for attorney fees under 39-71-611 because the concession of liability at the commencement of the hearing did not amount to an adjudication of compensability. However, that conclusion did not preclude MPC's liability for attorney fees under this section (1983). That statute had three elements: (1) an employer or insurer must pay or tender payment of compensation under ch. 71 or 72 of Title 39; (2) there must be a controversy that relates to the amount of compensation due; and (3) the settlement or award must be greater than the amount paid or tendered by the employer or insurer. All three elements were met in this case; thus, the court erred by concluding that Galetti was not entitled to attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that Galetti was entitled to attorney fees based on the difference between the settlement amount and the amount of compensable benefits arising from his back injury that MPC had previously paid, which was equal to the amount of compensable benefits for which MPC conceded liability at the beginning of the workers' compensation hearing. Galetti v. Mont. Power Co., 2000 MT 234, 301 M 314, 8 P3d 812, 57 St. Rep. 971 (2000).

Entitlement to Attorney Fees After Settlement — Field, Komeotis, and Lasar Overruled — Existence of "Controversy" — Mandatory Payment of Fees: Madill was injured when he slipped at a construction site in 1979. Madill sought benefits from the State Fund for a permanent total disability, which Madill eventually received, and payment of his costs and attorney fees. Applying the statute in effect on the date of Madill's injury, the Supreme Court overruled Lasar v. E.H. Oftedal & Sons, 222 M 251, 721 P2d 352 (1986), Komeotis v. Williamson Fencing, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153 (1988), and Field v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 257 M 81, 847 P2d 306 (1993), and held that the plain language of the 1979 version of the statute required that if the "settlement" of claims by the injured worker is greater than the amount paid or tendered by the employer's insurer, the claimant is entitled to costs and fees and that the award of costs and fees is mandatory in that situation. The Supreme Court also held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it held, as a prerequisite for the award of costs and fees under the 1979 statute, that there was no "controversy" over the amount to be paid because the State Fund had insufficient information to make the determination. The Supreme Court noted that the parties resolved three separate controversies over the amount of benefits due Madill: the nature and duration of Madill's total disability, whether Madill was entitled to a lump-sum advance, and whether the benefits could be converted to a lump-sum discounted to present value. The Supreme Court also noted that the State Fund had no more information once it did award benefits for permanent total disability than when it claimed it had insufficient information. Further, the Supreme Court overruled the Workers' Compensation Court when that court concluded that Madill was not entitled to costs and fees because he eventually settled for less than his original demand. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously held in McKinley v. Am. Dental Mfg. Co., 232 M 92, 754 P2d 831 (1988), that under the statute, payment of fees is not conditioned upon the amount demanded by the claimant but upon recovery of an amount by settlement greater than an amount originally paid or tendered by the insurer. Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Attorney Fees for Litigating Fees Issue Not Governed by This Section: Baeta injured his shoulder and was eventually compensated $46,825 from the State Fund. His attorney, Palmer, claimed fees in the amount of $20,566 (205.66 hours at $100 per hour) and $4033.23 for costs. The State Fund offered to settle the matter of fees and costs for $16,500, which Baeta refused. The Workers' Compensation Court awarded fees in the amount of $12,500 and $3,805.59, respectively. The Supreme Court held that the award of fees for litigating the fees and costs issue was not governed by the terms "tender" and "offer", as discussed in Hilbig v. Cent. Glass Co., 249 M 396, 816 P2d 1037 (1991), because that language applies to the tender of compensation due and not to fees. The award of fees and costs incurred in litigating the fees and costs issue is determined by whether the claimant prevailed, as discussed in Worts v. Hardy Constr. Co., 249 M 477, 817 P2d 231 (1991). In this case, Palmer did not prevail on the issue of fees because he was eventually awarded by the court less in fees than was originally offered by the State Fund. Baeta v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566, 49 St. Rep. 824 (1992).

Specific Costs to Be Awarded Determined by Other Statute: The Supreme Court held that only those costs allowed by 25-10-201 may be charged to an opposing party, unless other costs are allowed by another "express provision of law". The Supreme Court said that this section is not such an "express provision of law" because it grants the Workers' Compensation Judge discretion only to award the claimant fees and costs. It does not address the issue of what those costs are. The Supreme Court also held that the "net recovery" theory addressed in Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303 (1983), did not alter its view that recovery of costs is governed by 25-10-201. Baeta v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566, 49 St. Rep. 824 (1992), overruled, as to the applicability of 25-10-201 to workers' compensation cases, by Kloepfer v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 272 M 78, 899 P2d 1081, 52 St. Rep. 663 (1995).

Claimant Unsuccessful on Appeal — Not Entitled to Costs and Fees: A claimant who is unsuccessful in claims before the Workers' Compensation Court and on appeal before the Supreme Court is not entitled to costs and attorney fees. Kelly v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 200, 835 P2d 774, 49 St. Rep. 699 (1992).

Firm Offer Required: A proposal offering "the sum of $47,000 over a period of time" leaves open the possibility of a lump-sum settlement of an undetermined amount and is not a firm offer. In order to be an offer contemplated by the statute, nothing must be left to negotiate. A grant of attorney fees on the full amount of the final award was affirmed. J&L Tire & Alignment Center v. Peak, 247 M 169, 805 P2d 571, 48 St. Rep. 148 (1991).

Credit for Alleged Permanent Partial Benefits Improper — Attorney Fees Granted: The Workers' Compensation Court denied claimant's attorney fees after deciding State Fund could take credit for disputed permanent partial benefits. The Supreme Court subsequently decided that the benefits were to be characterized as temporary total for which no credit was allowed and that as such, claimant was entitled to attorney fees and costs under the 1983 version of this section. Ryles v. Springhill Ranch Eggs, 247 M 276, 806 P2d 525, 48 St. Rep. 196 (1991).

Grant of Attorney Fees Following Waiver — Remand: The Supreme Court remanded for further consideration the award of limited attorney fees to a claimant after the trial court had previously noted that the claimant had elected to waive any claim to attorney fees and costs. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Attorney Fees Due Claimant When Insurer Withdraws Settlement Offer Prior to Hearing and Argues That Claimant Should Receive Nothing: Prior to the hearing, the insurer offered the claimant approximately $30,000 to settle his claim. The insurer withdrew the offer when the claimant did not accept it within 15 days. At the hearing, the insurer argued that the claimant was entitled to no recovery. The claimant was awarded less than $30,000, and the insurer contended that the claimant was therefore entitled to no attorney fees. The Supreme Court disagreed, stating that when the insurer refuses to acknowledge that the claimant is entitled to anything at the trial, it is irrelevant if the award is less than the original settlement offer and the claimant is entitled to receive attorney fees if he is successful in obtaining a recovery. Carroll v. CNA Ins. Co., 240 M 151, 783 P2d 387, 46 St. Rep. 2014 (1989).

Evidentiary Hearing Not Always Necessary to Determine Attorney Fees and Costs: The claimant's attorney represented her on a contingent fee basis. The Supreme Court held that in view of the particular facts of the case before it, the lower court had not erred in awarding fees and costs without holding an evidentiary hearing. Beck v. Flathead County, 240 M 128, 783 P2d 383, 46 St. Rep. 1996 (1989).

Attorney Fees Awarded Based on Contingency Agreement: After considering evidence on the issue, the Workers' Compensation Court properly awarded attorney fees based on the contingency fee agreement, stating that claimant had not convinced the court that any greater fee should be awarded. This case may be distinguished from the holding in Honey v. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 236 M 86, 769 P2d 42, 46 St. Rep. 202 (1989), in which the Supreme Court concluded that the claimant's attorney was not required to request an evidentiary hearing before the court could consider the evidence under the guidelines in Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 46 St. Rep. 1275 (1983). Hedegaard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 290, 776 P2d 1225, 46 St. Rep. 1275 (1989), followed in Worts v. Hardy Constr. Co., 249 M 477, 817 P2d 231, 48 St. Rep. 800 (1991).

No Error in Denying Lump-Sum Award of Attorney Fees for Future Benefits: The claimant was awarded disability benefits for a period of 4 years during which time he was to be enrolled in a computer science course. The Supreme Court upheld the Workers' Compensation Court refusal to award a lump-sum award of attorney fees for the 4-year period because the judge felt there was a good chance that the claimant would not complete the course work. Sciuchetti v. Hurt Constr., 238 M 170, 777 P2d 308, 46 St. Rep. 1177 (1989).

Attorney Fees Based on Award in Excess of Those Offered: The claimant argued that he should have received attorney fees based on a finding that benefits had been denied him. The Supreme Court stated that the claimant had asked for permanent disability payments for an alleged new injury and was awarded instead continued partial disability payments for a prior injury. Since he had been receiving some benefits, the attorney fees and costs were properly awarded pursuant to this section. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989).

Fees Allowable on Prevailing Issues: The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding that a claimant's attorney should not receive attorney fees for issues upon which he did not prevail. A claimant is entitled to attorney fees and costs in relation only to his proof on prevailing issues. Buckman v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 516, 776 P2d 1210, 46 St. Rep. 1036 (1989), followed in Worts v. Hardy Constr. Co., 249 M 477, 817 P2d 231, 48 St. Rep. 800 (1991).

Attorney Fees on Appeal: The claimant prevailed in the Workers' Compensation Court, receiving an amount greater than the insurer had paid, and was awarded attorney fees. On appeal, the claimant successfully defended the rate of compensation and was awarded reasonable costs and attorney fees for the appeal in order to preserve intact his disability benefit. Stuber v. John Deere Ins. Co., 236 M 189, 769 P2d 1205, 46 St. Rep. 287 (1989).

Evidentiary Hearing to Consider Factors in Determining Fee: It was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to limit a claimant's attorney fees to the contingent fee agreement without considering the time records and affidavit of this counsel. The facts demonstrate a need for an evidentiary hearing on the factors necessary to determine reasonable attorney fees. Honey v. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 236 M 86, 769 P2d 42, 46 St. Rep. 202 (1989).

Attorney Fees Based on Amount Awarded and Amount Offered: The Workers' Compensation Court, applying this section as it read in 1983, properly computed "a reasonable attorney fee" using the difference between the amount awarded and the amount offered preceding the filing of the petition. (Language allowing this form of computation was eliminated from the statute in 1985.) McKinley v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 92, 754 P2d 831, 45 St. Rep. 892 (1988), followed in Hilbig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 249 M 396, 816 P2d 1037, 48 St. Rep. 703 (1991).

Award Predicated on Success in Obtaining Greater Benefits Than Previously Paid: An award of attorney fees from the insurer is predicated on the plaintiff being successful in obtaining benefits greater than the amount previously paid or tendered by the insurer or employer. Phelps v. Hillhaven Corp., 231 M 245, 752 P2d 737, 45 St. Rep. 582 (1988).

Award of Attorney Fees on Subsequent Disability Hearing When Claimant Prevails: Claimant was awarded temporary total disability benefits plus attorney fees pursuant to 39-71-611. He later went to hearing again to determine his entitlement to increased partial disability payments and domiciliary care payments, both of which were disputed by the insurer. Claimant was found to be entitled to both payments, but an amount could not be determined. He later settled for an increase based on a court-suggested formula, and sought attorney fees. The new round of litigation did not fall under 39-71-611 because the insurer did not deny liability but rather disputed the amount owed; therefore, this section applied. Employer settled for more than the amount being paid prior to the hearing, so attorney fees were proper. Lamb v. Universal Ins. Co., 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965, 45 St. Rep 127 (1988), followed in Chagnon v. Tilleman Motor Co., 259 M 21, 855 P2d 1002, 50 St. Rep. 198 (1993).

Authority for Determination of Attorney Fees: A contingent fee agreement provided for 40% of benefits as attorney fees, but following a first appeal, claimant sought to increase the percentage for good cause under ARM 24.29.3801. The Workers' Compensation Court (WCC) refused to vary from the original 40% figure, citing the holding in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), but claimant contended Wight did not apply where an administrative good cause variance was requested. The Supreme Court cited Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987), holding that the rules adopted by the Department, in this case the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), had no application to proceedings before the WCC. Thus, the WCC properly analyzed the issue under Wight. Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987).

Controversy Over Lump Sum: Attorney fees may be awarded under this section if a dispute over a lump-sum advance is resolved in the claimant's favor. Johnson v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 227 M 464, 740 P2d 665, 44 St. Rep. 1236 (1987).

Size of Attorney Fee — Date of Injury: The size of an attorney fee award in a workers' compensation case is determined by the statute in effect on the date of injury. Cuellar v. Royal Ins. Co., 226 M 428, 736 P2d 130, 44 St. Rep. 778 (1987).

Workers' Compensation Denied — Claimant Receiving Unemployment Benefits: The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court denying claimant disability benefits will not be disturbed on appeal as it is supported by substantial credible evidence. Claimant was receiving unemployment benefits during the period he claims he was disabled, asserting on his application for unemployment benefits that he was able and available to work and had no medical condition that prevented him from accepting immediate employment in his field. Eveleigh v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, 225 M 53, 730 P2d 1176, 44 St. Rep. 36 (1987).

Award No Greater Than Benefits Paid Prior to Hearing — No Attorney Fees Awarded: When the award granted by the Workers' Compensation Judge was no greater than the weekly benefits paid to the claimant by the employer's insurer prior to the hearing, there was no basis for an award of attorney fees to claimant under this section. Burkland v. COP Constr., 224 M 173, 728 P2d 806, 43 St. Rep. 2109 (1986).

Attorney Fees and Costs Denied — No Compensation Controversy at Time of Hearing: An insurer conceded the claimant was permanently totally disabled shortly after claimant petitioned therefor, 3 weeks prior to a hearing. The Workers' Compensation Court was correct in not awarding him attorney fees and costs under this section. Such an award may be made only if, first, the amount of compensation is in controversy, and second, the amount awarded exceeds that paid or tendered. Neither condition was satisfied in this claim. Lasar v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 222 M 251, 721 P2d 352, 43 St. Rep. 1239 (1986), cited in McKinley v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 92, 754 P2d 831, 45 St. Rep. 892 (1988), and followed in Komeotis v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153, 45 St. Rep. 1098 (1988). See also Field v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 257 M 81, 847 P2d 306, 50 St. Rep. 166 (1993). Lasar, Komeotis, and Field were overruled, to the extent limited in the opinion, by Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Hearing on Request for Attorney Fees: The Workers' Compensation Court determined claimant's award and ordered his counsel to submit a request for costs and attorney fees. After the submission, the employer objected to any attorney fee award in excess of the contingent fee agreement, and the objection was successful. It was not reversible error to enter the attorney fee order without giving claimant at least 5 days to respond to the objection. There was no rule requirement on the matter, and under Sorenson v. Drilcon, Inc., 204 M 258, 664 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 829 (1983), claimant could have requested an evidentiary hearing on the matter, even after the order granting the attorney fee. However, the case was remanded for a hearing on what the fee should be, taking into account the factors in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), with claimant having the primary obligation to present evidence from which the court could set the fee. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985).

Basis for Reasonable Attorney Fees — Factors: Plaintiff entered into a 25% contingent fee arrangement with his attorney in a workers' compensation case. After successful appeal to the Supreme Court, the plaintiff and attorney entered a 40% contingent fee agreement. On remand to consider proper fees, the Workers' Compensation Judge asked for a detailed statement and number of hours from the attorney. The attorney said he did not keep such records in contingent fee cases. The judge awarded a much lower percentage fee, and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court. The court restated its "net recovery" rule from Myers v. 4-B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977), saying attorney fees are to be above and beyond the compensation awarded to a successful claimant. The court noted that the Workers' Compensation Judge may set reasonable attorney fees and that administrative rules adopted specifically approve such arrangements. A reason for this is the "risk factor" that attorneys face whereby they may not receive any compensation. The factors to be considered are: (1) anticipated time and labor; (2) novelty and difficulty of the issues; (3) fee customarily charged; (4) possible total recovery; (5) time limitations; (6) nature and length of attorney-client relationship; (7) experience, skill, and reputation of the attorney; (8) client's ability to pay; and (9) market value of the lawyer's services. The court remanded for consideration of those factors. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), partially overruling Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011, 37 St. Rep. 1244 (1980), followed, as to the factors to be considered in determining the fee, in McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985), Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987), Miller v. W. Guar. Fund Serv., 248 M 132, 809 P2d 1257, 48 St. Rep. 348 (1991), and in Plooster v. Pierce Packing Co., 256 M 287, 846 P2d 287, 50 St. Rep. 59 (1993).

Proper Section Where Claim Denied in Part: Where insurer did not dispute a claim for compensation but did dispute amount of compensation due, arguing initially that claimant's condition was temporary rather than permanent, attorney's fees and costs to the successful claimant are properly awarded under this section rather than 39-71-611. Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982), distinguished in Lasar v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 222 M 251, 721 P2d 352, 43 St. Rep. 1239 (1986), and in Komeotis v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153, 45 St. Rep. 1098 (1988).

Successful Claimant Not to Pay Attorney Fees From His Award: Claimant was awarded a 40% disability to the whole man. The Workers' Compensation Judge directed claimant to pay his attorney fees from his lump-sum award. The Supreme Court held that, while the Workers' Compensation Judge may determine which attorney fees are reasonable, the clear meaning of this section is to provide attorney fees above and beyond the compensation awarded to a successful claimant. Assessing a successful claimant for attorney fees clearly reduces his net compensation and thus cannot be allowed. Holton v. F. H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10, 38 St. Rep. 1835 (1981).

Effect of Compliance or Noncompliance With Chapter: Insurance carrier's compliance or noncompliance with this chapter was not relevant to the issue of whether claimant, who prevailed on petition for a lump-sum settlement in lieu of future periodic payments, was entitled to attorney fees and costs. Award of attorney fees and costs was governed by this section, and where claimant prevailed in a hearing wherein the sole controversy was the difference between amount tendered and amount awarded, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Forum for Determination of Awards: It is a function of the Workers' Compensation Court to determine the amount of awards, attorney fees, and costs. Where petitioner for a lump-sum settlement in lieu of future periodic payments prevailed in that court and on appeal, was found on appeal to be entitled to attorney fees and costs, and the court below had not determined the amounts of the settlement, attorney fees, and costs, the Supreme Court remanded for such determination (but see 1985 amendment note). Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Triggering of Attorney's Fee: The finding that a claimant is entitled to benefits under 39-71-703 triggers this section, entitling a claimant to a reasonable attorney's fee as established by the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) or Workers' Compensation Judge (but see 1985 amendment note). Catteyson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979), following Walker v. H. F. Johnson, Inc., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181 (1978).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 inserted (5) concerning original jurisdiction of attorney fees dispute; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(1), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 235 inserted (4) requiring return of fees and costs paid by insurer for fraudulent claim; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in this section the Code Commissioner is directed to change the term "administrator" or "his" to "department", meaning the Department of Labor and Industry.

1987 Amendment: In (1), near end, inserted "on a form provided by the division"; inserted (2)(a) requiring administrator to consider the benefits to claimant from attorney's efforts; and made minor change in grammar.

ARM 24.29.3802 Attorney fee regulation.

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Constitutionality of Statute Regulating Fees of Workers' Compensation Attorneys — No Due Process Violation: An attorney whose fee arrangements were disallowed by the Employment Relations Division claimed that this section, which allows regulation of fees of workers' compensation attorneys, was a violation of constitutional due process. However, he was given a hearing on the subject by the Department of Labor and Industry, the Workers' Compensation Court, and finally the Supreme Court, so his due process argument could not stand. He further contended that this section violated his equal protection rights because the Department regulates the fees of only claimants' attorneys and not defense attorneys, which impaired his right to contract. However, there is neither a suspect class nor a fundamental right involved. The Department's application of the statute to a claimant's attorney fee is rationally related to the government's legitimate interest in protecting the claimant's net benefits in workers' compensation cases, and protection from impaired fee agreements is rationally related to that interest and is therefore not a constitutional violation. Burris v. Employment Relations Div., 252 M 376, 829 P2d 639, 49 St. Rep. 326 (1992).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Violation of Statute Requires Total Forfeiture of Fees: Attorney, who attempted to overcharge claimant by charging for benefit advances she received prior to retaining him and charging her twice for other amounts she received, violated the rule limiting attorney fees and therefore, under this statute, must totally forfeit all attorney fees. Hartford v. Young, 239 M 527, 782 P2d 365, 46 St. Rep. 1886 (1989), distinguished in Miller v. W. Guar. Fund Serv., 248 M 132, 809 P2d 1257, 48 St. Rep. 348 (1991), in which a total forfeiture was unwarranted because attorney was not attempting to charge the claimant for recovery received pursuant to the claimant's own efforts.

Authority for Determination of Attorney Fees: A contingent fee agreement provided for 40% of benefits as attorney fees, but following a first appeal, claimant sought to increase the percentage for good cause under ARM 24.29.3801. The Workers' Compensation Court (WCC) refused to vary from the original 40% figure, citing the holding in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), but claimant contended Wight did not apply where an administrative good cause variance was requested. The Supreme Court cited Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987), holding that the rules adopted by the Department, in this case the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), had no application to proceedings before the WCC. Thus, the WCC properly analyzed the issue under Wight. Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987).

Failure to Adopt Claimant's Theory of Law — Jurisdiction Not Exceeded: The Workers' Compensation Court failed to base its decision on claimant's allegation that there was good cause to vary from the maximum fee schedule as allowed under ARM 24.29.3801, holding instead that "the Division [now Department of Labor and Industry] rules governing attorney fees on cases before this Court and the Supreme Court are a nullity". The fact that the lower court refused to apply the law as presented by claimant did not mean it exceeded its jurisdiction. Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987).

Hearing on Request for Attorney Fees: The Workers' Compensation Court determined claimant's award and ordered his counsel to submit a request for costs and attorney fees. After the submission, the employer objected to any attorney fee award in excess of the contingent fee agreement, and the objection was successful. It was not reversible error to enter the attorney fee order without giving claimant at least 5 days to respond to the objection. There was no rule requirement on the matter, and under Sorenson v. Drilcon, Inc., 204 M 258, 664 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 829 (1983), claimant could have requested an evidentiary hearing on the matter, even after the order granting the attorney fee. However, the case was remanded for a hearing on what the fee should be, taking into account the factors in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), with claimant having the primary obligation to present evidence from which the court could set the fee. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985).

Basis for Reasonable Attorney Fees: Plaintiff entered into a 25% contingent fee arrangement with his attorney in a workers' compensation case. After successful appeal to the Supreme Court, the plaintiff and attorney entered a 40% contingent fee agreement. On remand to consider proper fees, the Workers' Compensation Judge asked for a detailed statement and number of hours from the attorney. The attorney said he did not keep such records in contingent fee cases. The judge awarded a much lower percentage fee, and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court. The court restated its "net recovery" rule from Myers v. 4-B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977), saying attorney fees are to be above and beyond the compensation awarded to a successful claimant. The court noted that the Workers' Compensation Judge may set reasonable attorney fees and that administrative rules adopted specifically approve such arrangements. A reason for this is the "risk factor" that attorneys face whereby they may not receive any compensation. The factors to be considered are: (1) anticipated time and labor; (2) novelty and difficulty of the issues; (3) fee customarily charged; (4) possible total recovery; (5) time limitations; (6) nature and length of attorney-client relationship; (7) experience, skill, and reputation of the attorney; (8) client's ability to pay; and (9) market value of the lawyer's services. The court remanded for consideration of those factors. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co. Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), partially overruling Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011, 37 St. Rep. 1244 (1980), followed, as to the factors to be considered in determining the fee, in McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 216 M 447, 701 P2d 1001, 42 St. Rep. 940 (1985), and followed, as to Department of Labor and Industry's authority to regulate attorney fees, in Burris v. Employment Relations Div., 252 M 376, 829 P2d 639, 49 St. Rep. 326 (1992).

Fees Disallowed on Good Faith Appeal: Where the State Compensation Insurance Fund, in good faith, raised significant issues on appeal of a decision of the Workers' Compensation Court, attorney fees for the appellate proceedings would not be awarded to the claimant, who prevailed. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Filing of Fee Agreement: Failure of attorney for workers' compensation lump-sum advance payment petitioner to file attorney-petitioner fee agreement prior to the hearing in Workers' Compensation Court did not work a forefeiture of claim for attorney's fees. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Disease Covered by Other Act: When it is found that claimant suffered some disease under the Occupational Disease Act of Montana, he is not entitled to attorney fees under this section. Greger v. St. Ins. Fund, 180 M 348, 590 P2d 1121, 36 St. Rep. 268 (1979).

Public Censure for Charging Excessive Fees: Attorney who charged fees in excess of amount ordered by Industrial Accident Board (now Department of Labor and Industry) pursuant to this section was properly subject to discipline by public censure. In re Porter, 156 M 190, 478 P2d 866 (1970).

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In (1), in first sentence, and (3), in second sentence, before "insurer", deleted reference to employer; in (1), at end of first sentence, substituted "brought to hearing" for "brought before the workers' compensation judge" and in second sentence, after "time spent", substituted "but the judge is not bound by the documentation submitted" for "and give the documentation to the judge"; and in (2) deleted former second sentence that read: "He is not bound by the documentation submitted to him" and substituted remainder of subsection (see 1987 Session Law for text) for "The hourly fee the judge applies to the time spent must be based on the attorney's customary and current hourly fee for legal work performed in this state."

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Duty of Court in Determining Fees Not Simple Mathematical Calculation: Baeta injured his shoulder and was eventually compensated $46,825 from the State Fund. His attorney, Palmer, claimed fees in the amount of $20,566 (205.66 hours at $100 per hour) and $4,033.23 for costs. Following an evidentiary hearing, the Workers' Compensation Court awarded Palmer $12,500 in fees (125 hours at $100 per hour) and $3,805.59 in costs. Palmer contended on appeal that the only duty of the Workers' Compensation Court was to multiply the attorney's hourly rate times the hours spent. The Supreme Court held that the court's duty under the statute was to determine a reasonable fee in light of the facts. Here, the evidentiary hearing showed that there were no extraordinary issues or work involved. The Supreme Court held that under these circumstances, the Workers' Compensation Court did not abuse its discretion. Baeta v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566, 49 St. Rep. 824 (1992).

Fees Allowable on Prevailing Issues: The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding that a claimant's attorney should not receive attorney fees for issues upon which he did not prevail. A claimant is entitled to attorney fees and costs in relation only to his proof on prevailing issues. Buckman v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 516, 776 P2d 1210, 46 St. Rep. 1036 (1989).

Reduction in Attorney Fees Absent Evidence of Customary Hourly Fee: An attorney who sought to recover fees in a workers' compensation case and who normally worked on a contingent fee basis rather than an hourly basis presented a claim for $225 an hour as a rate that would be necessary to support the cost of business if he charged an hourly rate. Without a customary and current hourly fee, the judge could not wholly rely on the attorney's testimony as to what the fee should be. Rather, he looked to evidence submitted by both parties to determine a reasonable rate. An attorney who charges an hourly fee does not take the same risk or expect the same high compensation as in a contingent fee arrangement. The court took this into consideration and did not abuse its broad discretion in reducing the fee to $80 an hour. Buckman v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 516, 776 P2d 1210, 46 St. Rep. 1036 (1989).

Authority for Determination of Attorney Fees: A contingent fee agreement provided for 40% of benefits as attorney fees, but following a first appeal, claimant sought to increase the percentage for good cause under ARM 24.29.3801. The Workers' Compensation Court (WCC) refused to vary from the original 40% figure, citing the holding in Wight v. Hughes Livestock, Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), but claimant contended Wight did not apply where an administrative good cause variance was requested. The Supreme Court cited Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987), holding that the rules adopted by the Department, in this case the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), had no application to proceedings before the WCC. Thus, the WCC properly analyzed the issue under Wight. Davis v. Jones, 229 M 158, 745 P2d 362, 44 St. Rep. 1859 (1987).

Fees — Section Applicability — Retroactivity: A statute should not be retroactively applied unless the Legislature clearly expressed an intention to so apply it. There was no indication the Legislature intended this section, changing the method of determining attorney fees in workers' compensation cases, to apply retroactively, and the court would not make the section retroactive. The section, effective April 19, 1985, does not apply to cases in which the injury occurred prior to that date. The law in effect on the date of the injury applies in determining the attorney fees. Cadwell v. Bechtel Power Corp., 225 M 423, 732 P2d 1352, 44 St. Rep. 370 (1987).

Size of Attorney Fee — Date of Injury: The size of an attorney fee award in a workers' compensation case is determined by the statute in effect on the date of injury. Cuellar v. Royal Ins. Co., 226 M 428, 736 P2d 130, 44 St. Rep. 778 (1987).

Basis for Calculation of Fees — Customary Hourly Rate: Appellant insurance division filed a motion opposing the proposed calculation of attorney fees under this section, contending that the calculation of 150.8 hours was unreasonably high for the nature of the case, that $125 an hour was an unreasonably high hourly fee, and that the calculation was engineered to garner an award roughly equal to what counsel would have received if the court could have awarded fees based on the contingency contract. The Supreme Court, in affirming the award, noted that the time spent was documented and on file and that the fee should be based on the rate the attorney commands in the open market rather than the average rate of Montana attorneys. Gullett v. Aetna Commercial Ins. Div., 222 M 365, 722 P2d 619, 43 St. Rep. 1335 (1986). See also Paulsen v. Bonanza Steak House, 225 M 191, 733 P2d 335, 44 St. Rep. 159 (1987).

Basis for Reasonable Attorney Fees — Factors: Plaintiff entered into a 25% contingent fee arrangement with his attorney in a workers' compensation case. After successful appeal to the Supreme Court, the plaintiff and attorney entered a 40% contingent fee agreement. On remand to consider proper fees, the Workers' Compensation Judge asked for a detailed statement and number of hours from the attorney. The attorney said he did not keep such records in contingent fee cases. The judge awarded a much lower percentage fee, and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court. The court (in a pre-1985 amendment case) restated its "net recovery" rule from Myers v. 4-B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977), saying attorney fees are to be above and beyond the compensation awarded to a successful claimant. The court noted that the Workers' Compensation Judge may set reasonable attorney fees and that administrative rules adopted specifically approve such arrangements. A reason for this is the "risk factor" that attorneys face whereby they may not receive any compensation. The factors to be considered are: (1) anticipated time and labor; (2) novelty and difficulty of the issues; (3) fee customarily charged; (4) possible total recovery; (5) time limitations; (6) nature and length of attorney-client relationship; (7) experience, skill, and reputation of the attorney; (8) client's ability to pay; and (9) market value of the lawyer's services. The court remanded for consideration of those factors. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), partially overruling Cont. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 188 M 341, 613 P2d 1011, 37 St. Rep. 1244 (1980), followed, as to the factors to be considered in determining the fee, in McDanold v. B.N. INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Finding of Malingering Affirmed Notwithstanding Expert Testimony: Blythe was accidentally stuck with an AIDS-contaminated needle while working in 1989. Evidence was uncontroverted that if Blythe had been infected with the virus, he would have tested positive within 3 to 6 months after the needle stick. However, Blythe has consistently tested negative. Nevertheless, Blythe contended that he suffered anxiety attacks and depression, that his educational efforts were adversely affected, and that his mental condition had deteriorated. Despite conflicting expert testimony as to the extent of Blythe's injuries, sufficient findings existed to affirm the Workers' Compensation Court's decision that Blythe was malingering, that he was not disabled, and that he was not entitled to compensation or benefits for the accident. EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 1998 MT 90, 288 M 356, 957 P2d 1134, 55 St. Rep. 359 (1998).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Limited Knowledge of Claimant's Disability Status Not Grounds to Have Payment Agreement Modified on Basis of Mutual Mistake: State Fund argued that it was entitled to off set against temporary disability benefits lump-sum payments made to the claimant rather than against future permanent disability benefits. State Fund based its arguments on the theory that the petitions for lump-sum payments submitted by the claimant and approved by State Fund were ambiguous, resulting in no meeting of the minds, and that the parties committed a mutual mistake because they entered into the agreement believing that the claimant was then permanently disabled. The Supreme Court held that the petitions submitted by the claimant and approved by State Fund were clear on their face and indicated that the claimant was requesting that any offset against the lump-sum payments be made against future permanent disability benefits. The Supreme Court stated that since the agreement was unambiguous, no extrinsic evidence could be submitted to show that there had not been a meeting of the minds between the parties. The Supreme Court also held that State Fund could not seek modification based on mistake because it bore the risk of mistake in this case. State Fund knew that it had limited knowledge of the claimant's disability status at the time that it approved the lump-sum advances. Wray v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 266 M 219, 879 P2d 725, 51 St. Rep. 735 (1994).

Withdrawal of Election After Court Award of Benefits: Section 39-71-709 (as it read in 1986, the time of the injury, but now repealed), allowing a worker to elect either permanent partial disability benefits under 39-71-703 or indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 and allowing a worker to withdraw an election pursuant to 39-71-703 "at any time" and to instead receive indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708, allowed a worker to withdraw an election under 39-71-703 after a Workers' Compensation Court award of those benefits and to elect benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708. State Fund's claim that a withdrawal is subject to time limits based either on the procedural status of the case or on the extent to which originally elected benefits have been received and its further claim that res judicata or collateral estoppel applies are unwarranted in view of the clear wording of the statutory right. In addition, 39-71-709 (now repealed) does not, as claimed by State Fund, prohibit the worker from receiving a greater benefit as a result of the withdrawal and change. It provides that the sum of the benefits received under 39-71-703 before the withdrawal and under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 after the withdrawal cannot exceed what the worker would have received had the worker originally claimed benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708. Lund v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 263 M 346, 868 P2d 611, 51 St. Rep. 83 (1994).

Discretionary Award Not Granted: Under section 92-702, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), a claimant was eligible, in the former Industrial Accident Board's discretion, to compensation beyond the 500-week maximum in cases of hardship due to permanent loss of or loss of use of both hands, arms, feet, legs, or eyes. Absent those circumstances, the lower court properly denied the discretionary award. Larson v. Crissmore, 228 M 9, 741 P2d 401, 44 St. Rep. 1299 (1987).

Total Benefits Available — Temporary and Permanent Disability: Where a claimant was entitled to some temporary and some permanent disability benefits but the actual duration of the healing period was not determined, the Supreme Court reconciled several inconsistent statutes in the 1971 workers' compensation law to determine that claimant was entitled to a maximum of 300 weeks of temporary total disability benefits and, totaling temporary total disability benefits and permanent partial or permanent total benefits, 500 weeks of total compensation benefits. Larson v. Crissmore, 228 M 9, 741 P2d 401, 44 St. Rep. 1299 (1987), distinguishing McDanold v. B.N. Transport, Inc., 194 M 300, 634 P2d 175, 38 St. Rep. 1466 (1981).

Tip Income Not Included in Original Calculation of Benefit Rate — Remand: Ten years after his injury, claimant contended that money he received in tips but never reported should have been included in his wage base. The Supreme Court found that the passage of more than 10 years, combined with the inability of claimant or his employer to submit proof of the alleged tips, indicated that the doctrine of equitable estoppel applied. The court remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court for reconsideration of the tip income issue in light of the elements constituting equitable estoppel described in Sweet v. Colborn School Supply, 196 M 367, 639 P2d 521 (1982). Sampson v. Broadway Yellow Cab Co., 226 M 273, 735 P2d 298, 44 St. Rep. 649 (1987), distinguished in Miller v. W. Guar. Fund Serv., 248 M 132, 809 P2d 1257, 48 St. Rep. 348 (1991), in which neither equitable estoppel nor laches applied because: (1) claimant was induced by the employer as to how tips should be reported; (2) the claim for benefits specifically stated that tips were not included in wages listed; and (3) there was only a 2-year delay in asserting the claim for increased wages, during which time the insurer had constant access to claimant's employment records.

Law at Time of Injury to Govern: Benefits payable for injury sustained on January 8, 1974, are governed by section 92-704.2, R.C.M. 1947. The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding the Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) liable for benefits when the injury occurred within the time frame of that section although the resulting death occurred outside the time frame. The statutes in effect on the date of the injury are controlling. There is no merit to the Division's (now State Fund's) argument that it was denied due process as to the effect of section 92-704.2, R.C.M. 1947. Young Motor Co. v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 219 M 1, 710 P2d 58, 42 St. Rep. 1796 (1985).

Successive Injuries to Same Knee — No Deduction of First Settlement From Second: Worker's left knee was injured when a cow butted the knee. He was paid temporary total disability benefits until a full and final compromise settlement was made. A portion of the settlement was for permanent partial disability benefits. One and a half years later, the left knee was injured when worker was working for a logging company and fell off a log. Temporary total disability benefits were commenced. Worker then requested a lump-sum advance of his future permanent partial disability benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court held that worker was entitled to the advance without a deduction equal to that portion of the settlement for the prior injury that was for permanent partial disability benefits. The court said that each new compensable injury begins a new benefit consideration beginning at zero, and the Supreme Court agreed. The Supreme Court held that Pietz v. Indus. Accident Bd., 127 M 316, 264 P2d 709 (1953), is controlling in the application of 39-71-738 (now repealed) and is the enlightened approach. In order to give effect both to the rule of liberal construction of this act and the rule that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's physical condition at the time of employment, 39-71-738 (now repealed) can only apply to a particular injury from a particular accident and not to separate injuries in separate accidents. Tiedeman v. Cooper Logging, Inc., 218 M 312, 708 P2d 255, 42 St. Rep. 1610 (1985).

Concurrent Payment of Disability and Rehabilitation Benefits Allowed: Plaintiff injured his back during the scope and course of his employment. Defendant accepted liability and began paying total disability benefits. Plaintiff entered a rehabilitation program, for which he began receiving rehabilitation benefits under Title 39, ch. 71, part 10. During his training, defendant wrote plaintiff that since his condition had stabilized, his benefits would be reduced to permanent partial benefits based on his impairment rate. Plaintiff appealed to the Workers' Compensation Court, which ruled claimant was entitled to receive benefits based on his impairment rating while concurrently receiving permanent total disability benefits during his retraining. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the term "classes" of disability referred to in 39-71-737 refers to all of the various benefits provided by the Workers' Compensation Act that are not otherwise specifically excepted. The rehabilitation benefits are distinguishable from all other benefits pursuant to 39-71-1003. The court held that the concurrent payment of two classes of benefits provided under Title 39, ch. 71, part 7, is prohibited (but see 1985 amendment notes under 39-71-737) and that the benefits provided by part 10 are not affected. (See 1985 amendment note under 39-71-1003.) Plaintiff was entitled to total disability benefits and rehabilitation benefits during his rehabilitation program. Rehabilitation benefits are totally separate from and not counted against benefits provided in Title 39, ch. 71, part 7. When plaintiff has completed his rehabilitation program, he will be entitled to his partial disability benefits. Grimshaw v. L. Peter Larson Co., 213 M 290, 691 P2d 805, 41 St. Rep. 2123 (1984).

Workers' Compensation Benefits as Marital Assets — Error to Preclude as Matter of Law: The District Court found as a matter of law that workers' compensation benefits of the husband were not marital assets. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, ordering an evidentiary hearing because it was unable to make an informed opinion from the record. At the hearing, findings should address the terms and purpose of the workers' compensation award. Blankenship v. Blankenship, 210 M 31, 682 P2d 1354, 41 St. Rep. 901 (1984).

Offset of Overpayment and Social Security Benefits Required: Where the claimant in a workers' compensation proceeding conceded that he was overpaid by a lump sum of $1,500 and also conceded that he had received social security benefits in the amount of $4,704.97, the Supreme Court held that these amounts must be offset against any award to the claimant. The Supreme Court ordered that the adjustment in any award be made by the Workers' Compensation Court, which had maintained jurisdiction over the case. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Determination of Indemnity Award Arbitrary: After suffering an industrial accident the claimant returned to school to complete his engineering degree. The court, finding that residual effects of claimant's injury limited his employment as an engineer, made an "indemnity award" of 100 weeks' partial disability. Because the court made no finding of percent of disability of the whole man, did not specify the statutory basis for the award, and did not specify its basis for a 100-week award, the determination was arbitrary. Van Daveer v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 200 M 218, 657 P2d 1142, 39 St. Rep. 1698 (1982).

Diminished Earning Capacity Benefits Applicable to Lost Ability to Compete — Limiting Factors Inapplicable: Claimant fractured his elbow in an industrial accident. As a result of the injury it was necessary for a surgeon to implant a prosthesis in the elbow. Claimant brought an action under 39-71-703 seeking workers' compensation benefits for lost earning capacity in lieu of indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed). The Workers' Compensation Court found that although claimant was earning more at the time he filed his claim than at the time of his injury, he could proceed under 39-71-703 because his ability to compete in the open labor market was impaired. The court then applied the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) to its award. Claimant appealed, contending the limiting factors were inapplicable. The Supreme Court held that claimant had established sufficient factual basis to elect compensation under 39-71-703 for loss of earning capacity even though he was performing the same job and earning more. The Supreme Court also held that under 39-71-709 (now repealed), the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) should be applied only if a claimant has withdrawn his election to proceed under 39-71-703 and claims indemnity benefits. The case was remanded for proper computation of compensation. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 198 M 105, 643 P2d 1192, 39 St. Rep. 796 (1982).

Computation of Award Based on Concurrent Employment: Earnings from concurrent employments may be combined in computing workers' compensation award if the employments are sufficiently similar so that a disabling injury at one employment would necessarily disable the employee in respect to the other employment. However, where appellant had terminated the concurrent employment prior to his injury and was merely receiving a 2-month continuation of salary because of length of service in the concurrent employment, such earnings from that former employment should not be included in computing temporary total disability award. Gee v. St. Compensation Ins. Fund, 197 M 335, 642 P2d 1070, 39 St. Rep. 597 (1982), followed in Milender v. Carpenter, 230 M 1, 748 P2d 932, 44 St. Rep. 2204 (1987).

Death Arising Out of and in Course of Lull in Work Period: Department store manager's death arose out of and in the course of his employment where he reported for work, mentioning that the motorcycle he rode to work was not running properly and might be "carboned up", rode the motorcycle to a shop where he left a department store shoe to be repaired, left the store, giving the impression that he would be back in the 15 to 20 minutes he had been told it would take to repair the shoe, rode the motorcycle onto a highway, and lost control of the motorcycle while traveling more than 70 miles per hour and was killed, and where his district manager knew he used his motorcycle in the course of his work and it was reasonable to conclude that he was cleaning the carbon out of the motorcycle at the time of his death, an activity that would be to the benefit of his employer as well as himself as he used the motorcycle in the course of his work and it would run better without the carbon. Green v. C. R. Anthony Co., 194 M 102, 634 P2d 629, 38 St. Rep. 1638 (1981).

Finding of Aggravation of Preexisting Disease Sustained: Where the Workers' Compensation Court finding that preexisting spinal disease was aggravated or accelerated by the accident was based on conflicting evidence, the Supreme Court's function on review was confined to determining whether there was substantial evidence on the whole record supporting the finding. The finding was supported and was upheld where the evidence consisted of claimant's testimony that he received a back injury and production of shirt showing holes where tines of a front-end loader pinned him between the loader and the steering wheel of tractor he was operating, nurse's notes and charts indicating claimant had complained about his back following the accident, and the depositions of the attending physician and another physician stating they found no aggravation by the accident of the preexisting spinal disease. Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 194 M 109, 634 P2d 1189, 38 St. Rep. 1632 (1981).

Periodic Payments Preferred — Purpose: The purpose behind usually paying workers' compensation in periodic rather than lump-sum payments is to preclude an employee or his dependent from imprudently wasting his means of support and thereby becoming a burden upon society. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Liability for First Injury: Section 39-71-738, now repealed, does not affect the liability of an insurer which is liable to a claimant for compensation due him under a first accident but not for compensation due as a result of a second accident. Infelt v. Horen, 136 M 217, 346 P2d 556 (1959).

Construction: The fact that a man has once received compensation, as for example where he has previously received 250 weeks or half the statutory amount, does not mean that forever after he is in the eyes of the compensation laws but half a man, so that he can never again receive a compensation award going beyond the other 50% of total. After having received his prior payments, he may in future years be physically able to and does resume full gainful employment for several years, and if he does there is no reason or logic why a disability from an unscheduled industrial accidental injury, which would bring anyone else total permanent disability benefits, should yield him only half as much. Peitz v. Indus. Accident Bd., 127 M 316, 264 P2d 709 (1953).

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 121 near end of (3) inserted "except for the worker's incarceration as provided for in 39-71-744, resignation, or termination for disciplinary reasons caused by a violation of the employer's policies that provide for termination of employment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 22, 2001.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 inserted (1)(b) concerning release to employment; in (2) substituted "objective medical findings" for "medical evidence"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 296 inserted (7) establishing a penalty for receipt of both wages and temporary total disability benefits; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Chapter 619 deleted former (6) that read: "(6) Notwithstanding subsection (3), beginning July 1, 1987, through June 30, 1991, weekly compensation benefits for temporary total disability may not exceed the state's average weekly wage of $299 established July 1, 1986"; inserted (6) authorizing insurer to suspend biweekly compensation benefits for claimant awarded Social Security benefits and providing that suspension does not prevent repayment plan; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

A style change in (4) was slightly different in the two chapters. The codifier chose the more appropriate of the two.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: In introductory clause of (1) inserted reference to subsection (4); and inserted (4) denying benefits to a worker who is released to return to an equivalent position and wage with the same employer prior to maximum healing and providing a system for requalification for benefits. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 52, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to claims for injuries that occur after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Special Session Amendment: In (5) reimposed benefit freeze that ended June 30, 1989, to continue through June 30, 1991; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 17, 1989.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 9, Sp. L. June 1989, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1) allowing temporary total benefits when a worker suffers a total wage loss until he reaches maximum healing; inserted (2) requiring a finding of temporary total disability to be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence; in (3), in second sentence, substituted "the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury" for "$110 beginning July 1, 1973. Beginning July 1, 1974, the maximum weekly compensation benefits shall not exceed the state's average weekly wage" and inserted fourth sentence concerning no cost-of-living adjustments; inserted (5) setting a cap on benefits for 1987 biennium; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "disability" before "benefits" near beginning of (2) and at end added phrase providing for calculation from date of disability entitlement.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Permanent Total Disability and Regular Employment Construed — Part-Time Work Not Substantial and Significant: After McFerran was injured at his job, his employer, Consolidated Freightways, hired Addy, a vocational consultant, to assess McFerran's employability. Addy found five job possibilities for McFerran. The Workers' Compensation Court found that one of those five, a job as a pharmacy delivery driver, constituted "regular employment" for the purposes of determining whether McFerran suffered from a permanent total disability. The Supreme Court, although agreeing with the analysis used by the Workers' Compensation Court to determine whether a worker is permanently and totally disabled, disagreed that the work as a pharmacy delivery driver was substantial and significant and that the work constituted regular employment. The Supreme Court pointed out that Addy's written report found that the period of work could vary between 1 to 4 hours a day, 6 days a week. The Supreme Court held that a job offering no assurance of more than 1 hour of work each day was not "substantial and significant" enough to be considered regular employment. The court therefore held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred when it concluded that McFerran was not totally and permanently disabled. McFerran v. Consol. Freightways, 2000 MT 365, 303 M 393, 15 P3d 935, 57 St. Rep. 1558 (2000).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Maximum Healing Prior to Nonwork-Related Injury — Claim Denied: Paterson sought temporary total disability benefits, claiming that a nonwork-related injury had exacerbated a prior work-related injury and was thus compensable. To determine whether maximum healing of the work-related injury had occurred, the insurer presented a hypothetical scenario to Paterson's physician, consisting of three components that the insurer intended to establish through its witnesses in subsequent testimony. Based on the hypothetical, the doctor agreed that Paterson did reach maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson then paraphrased his version of events based on his witnesses' testimony, and the doctor opined that Paterson had not reached maximum healing. The Workers' Compensation Court found more credible the evidence presented in proving the hypothetical, including findings regarding Paterson's work history and back symptomology, his lack of fear of losing current employment or not obtaining future employment, and the affordability and availability of medical care. The court did not err in holding that Paterson had reached maximum healing prior to the nonwork-related injury. Paterson v. Mont. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

Job "No Longer Available": When the employer worked the employee beyond the employee's medical restrictions and caused the episode that triggered the employee's discharge, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in determining that the employee's job was "no longer available" and therefore did not err in ruling that the employee was entitled to temporary total disability benefits. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Jurisdiction of Court — Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act Not Applicable: When the claimant was discharged for sleeping on the job, the Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant's discharge was a pretext by the employer to rid itself of a disabled employee. The court did not exceed its jurisdiction in reaching its decision and was not required to apply the provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Ingbretson v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 272 M 294, 900 P2d 912, 52 St. Rep. 764 (1995).

Cap on Benefits Payments as Temporary — Statutory Rate at Time of Injury Following Termination of Cap: The 1987 Legislature placed an arbitrary cap on the benefits payable to injured workers, as an exception to the regular benefit rate provided in subsection (3) of this section (1987). The Supreme Court construed the cap according to standard rules of statutory construction and held that according to the plain meaning of the words used, this section was clear and unambiguous in establishing a temporary rather than permanent cap on benefit payments. Following expiration of the benefit cap on June 30, 1991, the maximum benefit rate for workers is set at the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 516, 885 P2d 428, 51 St. Rep. 1145 (1994) (Murer II), clarified in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III), that the 1987 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 1, 1987, and June 30, 1989, and expired on June 30, 1989; that the 1989 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 17, 1989, and June 30, 1991, and expired on June 30, 1991; and that the 1989 temporary cap cannot be applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to July 17, 1989.

Higher Hourly Wage at Time of Injury Overrides Wage Earned in Four Previous Pay Periods: Although the claimant was earning $7.25 an hour at the time of injury, the Workers' Compensation Court awarded an amount of total temporary disability compensation based on the $6-an-hour salary that the claimant had earned in the four pay periods preceding the injury. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that because 39-71-123(3)(b) (1991) allows use of additional pay periods if a claimant can show good cause why use of the four pay periods does not accurately reflect the claimant's employment history, the Workers' Compensation Court should have used the $7.25-an-hour pay period because it bore a more reasonable relationship to actual wages lost due to injury than did the $6-an-hour rate. Deshner v. Town & Country Foods, Inc., 266 M 352, 880 P2d 1300, 51 St. Rep. 787 (1994).

Duty of State Fund to Investigate Receipt of Collateral Benefits — Penalty for Unreasonable Termination of Benefits: Lovell, who was a painter, roofer, and lawn mower, stopped by the Oak Room Bar for a drink after work and was asked by the owner to help unload a truck. In the process, Lovell injured his knee and was found by the State Fund to be temporarily totally disabled. The State Fund paid disability benefits of $8.26 per week based upon the bar owner's testimony that he intended to pay Lovell $4.75 per hour for a 2-hour job. After receiving a computer printout showing that Lovell was receiving social security payments, the State Fund computed an offset against Lovell's benefits, reduced his payments to zero, and also erroneously reduced mileage payments to Lovell. The Workers' Compensation Court imposed a 20% penalty against the State Fund for these calculations and reductions. The Supreme Court found that the State Fund had a duty under this section to investigate the reason for the social security payments and that had it done so, the State Fund would have discovered the payments were for alcoholism and not the knee injury. Thus, the action of the State Fund in miscalculating Lovell's benefits was unreasonable and the penalty applied was proper. Action by the State Fund to settle the disputed amounts "on the courthouse steps" does not negate liability for the penalty. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993), followed in Mintyala v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 276 M 521, 917 P2d 442, 53 St. Rep. 503 (1996).

Benefit Calculation — Sporadic, Seasonal Job: Claimant worked at a seasonal, sporadic job during 31 of a total of 59 weeks, for a total of 967 hours. It was proper under the provisions of 39-71-123(3)(b) for the Workers' Compensation Court to consider additional pay periods and to exclude 18 weeks of idleness forced by weather, then divide the total number of actual hours by the actual number of weeks worked to arrive at a fair approximation of claimant's average weekly salary rather than to strictly consider only the four pay periods immediately preceding the injury, which would have provided an average monthly amount higher than the total amount earned in any of the 4 preceding months except 1. It was not error for the court to take into account the seasonal nature of the employment by including time off in its calculations. Gregory v. Michael Bailey & Sons Logging, 255 M 190, 841 P2d 525, 49 St. Rep. 966 (1992).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Cost-of-Living Increases Included in Initial Award of Social Security Benefits Excluded in Determining Workers' Compensation Offset: Broeker was injured in the course of his employment when a soft drink machine fell on him. In determining Social Security benefits to be offset against Broeker's workers' compensation benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court excluded cost-of-living increases that had been given to Social Security recipients between the time that Broeker became eligible for Social Security benefits and when he received them over 4 years later. Citing Colorado case law, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that at the time of Broeker's injury, the Montana workers' compensation statutes did not include a cost-of-living provision and that Broeker was therefore not receiving an increased benefit or a double award. Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Social Security Benefits Offset Indexed to Date of Eligibility — Statute Not Ambiguous — Rule of Liberal Construction Inapplicable: Broeker was injured in the course of his employment when a soft drink machine fell on him. In determining Social Security benefits to be offset against Broeker's workers' compensation benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court held that the state payments were to be indexed to the date on which Broeker became eligible for those payments. The Supreme Court held that Broeker was incorrect when he argued that the words "for such week" in statute were ambiguous. The Supreme Court held that the language clearly referred to the week in which benefits are paid and that a rule of liberal construction in effect at the time of Broeker's injury was inapplicable because statute was unambiguous. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that indexing the offset to the date on which Broeker became eligible for benefits was correct. Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Ability to Perform Odd Jobs but Not Regular Employment — Availability of Temporary Total Benefits: Consistent with the holding in Jensen v. Zook Bros. Constr. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191 (1978), claimant's ability to perform intermittent odd jobs does not preclude a finding that a temporary total injury exists, especially when the work is performed with a substantial degree of pain. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

Claimant's Work Performed by Wife but Wages Paid to Claimant — Benefits Not Payable: As a result of an arrangement among McIntyre, his wife, and the employer, McIntyre continued to receive his regular wage during the 3-month period following his industrial accident, although his wife performed the work under his supervision. McIntyre contended that because his wife performed the work, it was she who was paid and not him, and therefore a claim for temporary total disability benefits was payable. However, while the arrangement was questionable, McIntyre's condition did not precipitate a total loss of wages because wages were nevertheless paid to him; therefore, benefits were properly denied. McIntyre v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 249 M 63, 813 P2d 451, 48 St. Rep. 579 (1991).

Offset of Auxiliary Social Security Benefits Payable Directly to Minor Child: This section does not distinguish between primary and auxiliary benefits for purposes of establishing an offset, but rather it applies to all benefits payable because of the injury. Therefore, State Fund is entitled to offset auxiliary social security benefits paid to a claimant's minor child even when the benefits are paid directly to the minor's mother who resides at a different address. Stahl v. State Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 246 M 271, 811 P2d 546, 48 St. Rep. 429 (1991).

Offset of Retroactive Social Security Benefits Paid to Attorney: Absent statutory or contractual authority to the contrary, State Fund is entitled to offset a portion of retroactive social security benefits paid directly to claimant's attorney as an authorized fee for legal services rendered in obtaining those benefits. While arguably unfair to claimant, State Fund is not required to bear an equal share of costs and attorney fees despite the fact that State Fund was benefited by the right to offset, resulting in claimant bearing the entire burden of costs and attorney fees for the social security claim. Stahl v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 248 M 271, 811 P2d 546, 48 St. Rep. 429 (1991).

No Physician Approval of Job Options — Temporary Total Benefits Improperly Terminated: Absent a physician's determination that claimant could return to work in one of the jobs listed by a vocational rehabilitation counselor, there was no substantial credible evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court's finding that claimant could return to work in one of those jobs. Because the employer failed to meet the burden under Coles v. Seven Eleven Stores, 217 M 343, 704 P2d 1048 (1985), that claimant could return to work at his former or an equivalent job, as determined by a physician based on knowledge of claimant's former employment duties, termination of temporary total benefits was improper. Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502, 48 St. Rep. 306 (1991), distinguished in Garcia v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 253 M 196, 832 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 440 (1992), and followed in Ness v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 257 M 335, 849 P2d 1021, 50 St. Rep. 296 (1993), and Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996).

Permanent Partial Disability and Loss of Earning Capacity Properly Determined — Conflicting Conclusions Regarding Temporary Total Disability — Remand: Applying 1979 workers' compensation provisions, the trial court properly found that claimant suffered a loss of earning capacity and was eligible for permanent partial disability benefits based on the following medical and other evidence: (1) claimant's accident and injury were undisputedly employment-related; (2) prior to the accident, claimant was a strong person with no history of back problems; (3) after the accident, numerous physicians diagnosed soft tissue injury; (4) claimant had a number of vocational alternatives and could minimize pain by following a pain clinic's recommendations; and (5) claimant could return to work and earn essentially the same wage. However, after applying the factors set out in Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527 (1988), claimant had a 78% reduction in job market as a result of her 10% impairment rating, taking into account her chronic pain and inability to work long hours standing or in one position. Nevertheless, the case was remanded because of inconsistent and conflicting conclusions regarding whether claimant was eligible for temporary total disability benefits between the time employment ended and permanent partial disability was established. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Determining Benefits When Disablement Occurs After Time of Injury: Claimant continued to work for 2 ½ months after his injury. The insurance carrier argued that other jurisdictions have held that it is more appropriate to compute wages as of the time of the disablement rather than the time of the accident. The Supreme Court stated that the cases cited by the insurer were not pertinent because those cases referred to instances where the disablement occurred years after the accident rather than 2 ½ months later, as in the case before the court. Stuber v. John Deere Ins. Co., 236 M 189, 769 P2d 1205, 46 St. Rep. 287 (1989).

Social Security Disability Setoff Computation — Difference Between Disability Payment and Lower Early Retirement Payment Not Basis for Deduction Computation: Worker receiving workers' compensation applied for and received early retirement (at age 62) social security benefits. About 6 months later, he elected to exercise his option to receive social security disability benefits instead. Section 39-71-702 provides for an offset against the workers' compensation payment of half of the social security disability payment "payable because of the injury". The words "payable because of the injury" do not refer to the difference between the early retirement benefit amount and the (higher) disability benefit amount. The statute is clear and unambiguous in its plain language. Half the disability payment is to be deducted, not just half of the amount by which that payment exceeds what the early retirement payment would be. This interpretation does not violate the supremacy clause of the federal constitution. Watson v. Seekins, 234 M 309, 763 P2d 328, 45 St. Rep. 1931 (1988).

Rating of Impairments Restricted to Licensed Physicians: Under 39-71-122 (repealed 1987) and 39-71-701 through 39-71-703, the legislative intent was that the making of impairment ratings be restricted to licensed medical physicians. Therefore, the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) properly exercised its rulemaking authority by promulgating ARM 24.29.806, which imposes the restriction. Weis v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 232 M 218, 755 P2d 1385, 45 St. Rep. 1004 (1988).

Total Benefits Available — Temporary and Permanent Disability: Where a claimant was entitled to some temporary and some permanent disability benefits but the actual duration of the healing period was not determined, the Supreme Court reconciled several inconsistent statutes in the 1971 workers' compensation law to determine that claimant was entitled to a maximum of 300 weeks of temporary total disability benefits and, totaling temporary total disability benefits and permanent partial or permanent total benefits, 500 weeks of total compensation benefits. Larson v. Crissmore, 228 M 9, 741 P2d 401, 44 St. Rep. 1299 (1987), distinguishing McDanold v. B.N. Transport, Inc., 194 M 300, 634 P2d 175, 38 St. Rep. 1466 (1981).

Workers' Compensation Denied — Claimant Receiving Unemployment Benefits: The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court denying claimant disability benefits will not be disturbed on appeal as it is supported by substantial credible evidence. Claimant was receiving unemployment benefits during the period he claims he was disabled, asserting on his application for unemployment benefits that he was able and available to work and had no medical condition that prevented him from accepting immediate employment in his field. Eveleigh v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, 225 M 53, 730 P2d 1176, 44 St. Rep. 36 (1987).

Future Earning Capacity as Based on Estimated Payroll: Claimants established a partnership to buy and sell used furniture and purchased workers' compensation insurance through Rockwood Company (Rockwood). On their fourth day of business, both claimants were injured. Rockwood accepted liability and set the rates for temporary total disability benefits on the basis of annual wages of $12,000 per claimant, but claimants requested that the Workers' Compensation Court increase their benefits. Due to the brevity of employment, no evidence of actual earnings was available. The only documentary evidence presented was the business' application for insurance, which indicated the expectation of a total annual payroll of $30,000. The court increased the benefits based on the estimated annual income for each claimant of $15,000, or half the expected payroll shown on the application. In affirming the award, the Supreme Court concluded that, in the absence of better evidence, the Workers' Compensation Court arrived at a fair estimate of claimants' future earning capacity based on the estimated business payroll divided by the actual number of employees. Wilkerson v. Rockwood Co., 221 M 250, 718 P2d 338, 43 St. Rep. 787 (1986).

Temporary Total Disability Compensation — Based on Wages, Not Income: Appellant, Harmon, was injured while employed by his father as a ranch hand. He concurrently operated his own farm. The State Compensation Insurance Fund determined Harmon's temporary total disability rate based only on his salary as a ranch hand. Harmon maintained that earnings from his separate but identical self-employment on his own farm should have been combined with his earnings as a ranch hand to properly determine his disability rate. The Workers' Compensation Court found that Harmon failed to prove that he had additional wages beyond his monthly salary as a ranch hand which could be aggregated to increase his rate. Essentially, Harmon suggested on appeal that the gross income from his farm should be treated as wages; however, the Supreme Court found that under 39-71-116, the term "wages" is predicated on an employment relationship which generates income from employer to employee. The record was clear that no such relationship existed in Harmon's position as a self-employed farmer. As stated in Gee v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 197 M 335, 642 P2d 1070 (1982), in providing compensation for a temporary total disability, the Legislature chose to restrict the compensation to that based on loss of wages rather than loss of earnings. Although Harmon clearly suffered a loss of earnings on his farm from his disability, this loss of earnings was held to be noncompensable for purposes of his temporary total disability. Harmon v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 220 M 445, 716 P2d 605, 43 St. Rep. 514 (1986).

Social Security Offset: Montana law allows an offset against compensation when an injured worker is also receiving social security disability benefits. Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986).

Benefits Based on Forty Hours a Week Despite Intermittent Nature of Job: Claimant worked in a roofing business typified by 40-hour workweeks unless interrupted by inclement weather. The Workers' Compensation Court, in awarding temporary total disability benefits, found that claimant was hired on a full-time basis and that claimant's usual hours of employment were 40 hours a week. Defendants contended on appeal that the court should use an averaging formula to establish claimant's base workweek. The court rejected the contention and appellants' citation to 39-71-116(20) and 39-71-701 as authority, finding that the Workers' Compensation Court decision was based on substantial evidence. Denend v. Bradford Roofing & Insulation, 218 M 505, 710 P2d 61, 42 St. Rep. 1778 (1985).

Average Gross Earnings: Claimant's average gross earnings under this section's definition of "wages" are the amount he was earning at the time of his injury in October 1981, not the amount he was earning from a different employer at the time of an earlier injury in January 1981, even though he had not worked between January and October and the October employment was temporary. Where he was receiving compensation benefits as a result of the injury in January 1981, he was not entitled to include the amount of those benefits in the computation of his average gross earnings for the purpose of determining benefits due him for the second injury. Putnam v. Castle Mtn. Corp., 216 M 306, 702 P2d 333, 42 St. Rep. 833 (1985).

Claimant Need Not Undergo Surgery to Prove Permanent Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant was totally disabled, but that his disability was temporary because back surgery may improve his condition. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that there is sufficient evidence to establish that the claimant is permanently disabled; he is not required to undergo surgery to determine whether his condition would change. The matter was remanded for a determination of how the claimant's permanent disability may have affected his ability to function in the normal labor market. Moilanen v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 214 M 367, 694 P2d 485, 42 St. Rep. 25 (1985).

Total Disability — Ends When Restoration Ends:

A worker is temporarily totally disabled until such time as the worker is as far restored as the permanent character of his injuries will permit. When the claimant has reached this stage in his healing process, temporary total disability ceases and partial disability begins. In making this determination, the compensation court should not rely exclusively on medical opinion of restoration when other credible evidence clearly demonstrates the healing process is not yet complete. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 208 M 470, 679 P2d 1188, 41 St. Rep. 472 (1984).

There was sufficient evidence upon which to base the finding that claimant had not yet been "restored as far as the permanent character of his injuries will permit", thus supporting the conclusion that claimant continued to suffer temporary total disability. Smith v. Pac. Ins. Co., 177 M 267, 581 P2d 834 (1978).

Temporary Total Disability Awarded During Period of Medical Testing: Where the Workers' Compensation Court ordered the claimant to undergo spinal nerve tests on the strength of medical testimony that the tests were needed in order to restore the claimant to his best physical condition, the court did not err in awarding the claimant temporary total disability payments during the period of testing. While he undergoes treatment, the claimant will of necessity experience a total loss of wages. Therefore the requirements of the statutory definition of "total temporary disability" were met and the award was proper. Wilson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 206 M 63, 670 P2d 931, 40 St. Rep. 1509 (1983).

Temporary Total Disability Where Claimant Returns to School: The claimant underwent surgery and hospitalization after a September 1978 industrial accident. Claimant's doctor, knowing that claimant intended to return to school and not to his job, released him to resume "full, normal activities and duties" in January of 1979. In March of 1979 claimant's surgical incision herniated, thereby necessitating corrective surgery. Claimant's doctor again released him for full activity in May of 1979. Claimant received his degree in August of 1979. The court's determination of temporary total disability from the date of the accident until August of 1979 was supported by substantial evidence. Van Daveer v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 200 M 218, 657 P2d 1142, 39 St. Rep. 1698 (1982).

Computation of Temporary Total Disability Award Based on Concurrent Employment: Earnings from concurrent employments may be combined in computing workers' compensation award if the employments are sufficiently similar so that a disabling injury at one employment would necessarily disable the employee in respect to the other employment. However, where appellant had terminated the concurrent employment prior to his injury and was merely receiving a 2-month continuation of salary because of length of service in the concurrent employment, such earnings from that former employment were not properly included in computing temporary total disability award. Gee v. St. Compensation Ins. Fund, 197 M 335, 642 P2d 1070, 39 St. Rep. 597 (1982), followed in Milender v. Carpenter, 230 M 1, 748 P2d 932, 44 St. Rep. 2204 (1987).

Aggregate Earnings: The Workers' Compensation Court can aggregate earnings from two separate and unrelated employments for the purpose of determining benefits payable. Catteyson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979), following Walker v. H. F. Johnson, Inc., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181 (1978).

Computing Average Daily Wage: Under section 92-703, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), as amended by sec. 3, Ch. 207, L. 1967, the first step in the formula for computing compensation is to determine the average daily wage. Average daily wage is computed by dividing a person's earnings over a reasonable period of time by the total number of days he worked, excluding overtime. What is a reasonable period of time depends on the circumstances of each case. The period must be sufficiently long to take into account seasonal fluctuations for hours, wage rates, vacations, and any other factors that may materially affect the average daily wage. Walter v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 181 M 109, 592 P2d 497, 36 St. Rep. 553 (1979).

Intent of Former Section: The intent of section 92-703, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), with respect to partial disability, was to compensate the injured employee by a percentage of the difference between the wages received at the time of the injury and the wages that such injured employee is able to earn thereafter. Walter v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 181 M 109, 592 P2d 497, 36 St. Rep. 553 (1979).

Computing Temporary Total Disability: In determining the amount of temporary total disability under former law, weekly wages (average wages earned for the usual hours of employment in a day multiplied by 5 working days) must first be determined. Once that is done the wage figure is applied to the factor contained in section 92-701, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), to arrive at the actual amount of weekly compensation to which one is entitled. Hutchison v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 178 M 81, 582 P2d 1203, 35 St. Rep. 1126 (1978).

Evidence Must Sustain Classification: Workers' Compensation Court finding of "temporary total disability" was overruled, and reclassification was mandated as "permanent". Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278, 33 St. Rep. 1191 (1976).

Retirement Age Does Not Stop Benefits: No statutory provision is made for early cessation of benefits due to claimant reaching retirement age. Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278, 33 St. Rep. 1191 (1976).

Attorney General's Opinions

Supplementation of Workers' Compensation Benefits With Annual Leave Not Allowed: This section provides that a worker is eligible for temporary total disability benefits after suffering a total loss of wages. The term "wages" is defined in 39-71-123 to include remuneration at the regular hourly rate for vacations and sickness periods. If annual leave benefits are paid, then the employee is not suffering a total loss of wages and is not eligible for workers' compensation benefits. Therefore, a state agency may not supplement workers' compensation wage loss benefits with annual leave upon the request of an employee. 44 A.G. Op. 33 (1992).

Change in Average Weekly Wage — No Effect on Existing Benefits: The amount of an existing benefit award under 39-71-701, 39-71-702, or 39-71-703 is unaffected by increase in the state's average weekly wage. 40 A.G. Op. 38 (1984).

Salary Payments to Municipal Policemen After Disabling Injury: Section 7-32-4132 requires a municipality to pay an injured policeman's full salary during the period of disability or 1 year, whichever ends first. The Workers' Compensation Fund is not liable for any wage loss benefits during that period because the municipality pays the policeman in full and he has suffered no wage loss. 37 A.G. Op. 156 (1978).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (2), at end, substituted "objective medical findings" for "medical evidence"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 296 substituted (6) establishing a penalty for receipt of both wages and permanent total disability benefits for former language that read: "Notwithstanding subsection (3), beginning July 1, 1987, through June 30, 1991, the maximum weekly compensation benefits for permanent total disability may not exceed the state's average weekly wage of $299 established July 1, 1986"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Chapter 619 substituted (7) authorizing insurer to suspend biweekly compensation benefits for claimant awarded Social Security benefits and providing that suspension does not prevent repayment plan for former language that read: "Notwithstanding subsection (3), beginning July 1, 1987, through June 30, 1991, the maximum weekly compensation benefits for permanent total disability may not exceed the state's average weekly wage of $299 established July 1, 1986"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: In (1), near beginning after "disabled and is", substituted "permanently totally disabled, as defined in 39-71-116" for "unable to return to work due to injury", deleted former second sentence that read: "At an insurer's request, an evaluation of all options under 39-71-1012 must be made before permanent total disability status is determined", and at end of last sentence deleted "and 39-71-1026". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Special Session Amendment: In (6) reimposed benefit freeze that ended June 30, 1989, to continue through June 30, 1991. Amendment effective July 17, 1989.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 9, Sp. L. June 1989, was a severability clause.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1) stating requirements for permanent total disability benefits; inserted (2) requiring a finding of permanent total disability to be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence; in (3), near beginning of first sentence, substituted "an injury resulting in permanent total disability" for "injury producing total permanent disability", at end of second sentence inserted "at the time of injury", and deleted former third sentence that read: "Total permanent disability benefits shall be paid for the duration of the worker's total permanent disability"; inserted (5) concerning cost-of-living adjustments; and inserted (6) setting a cap on benefits for 1987 biennium.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "disability" before "benefits" near beginning of (2) and at end added phrase providing for calculation from date of disability entitlement.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Attorney Fee Lien Applicable to Medical Benefits Received in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Lockhart moved for an order directing the insurer to pay attorney fees out of the medical benefits owing to Lockhart under his successful workers' compensation claim. The Workers' Compensation Court denied the attorney fees on grounds that medical benefits are not benefits, but rather an imposition of liability imposed on the insurer, and that because an award of medical benefits does not entitle a claimant to receipt of money, there is no property against which an attorney fee lien can attach. The court held that when a claim has been denied and later found compensable by the court without a separate award of attorney fees, a contingent attorney fee may be computed based on medical benefits, but the amount may not be deducted from the compensation payable to the medical providers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Medical benefits are not the property of the medical providers simply because the medical providers are the actual recipients of the money, nor are medical benefits simply an obligation of the insurer. Instead, medical benefits are the property of the individual claimant, and, as such, the claimant should be allowed to pay attorney fees out of medical benefits. In the context of workers' compensation cases, attorney fee liens attach as a matter of law to all compensation, including medical benefits, upon the filing of an attorney retainer agreement with the Department of Labor and Industry. To require a claimant to pay a disproportionate amount of attorney fees from the claimant's personal resources would be unfair and contrary to the fundamental purpose of workers' compensation laws. Lockhart v. N.H. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 205, 295 M 467, 984 P2d 744, 56 St. Rep. 800 (1999), following Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Emotional and Physical Condition Preexisting Work-Related Injury — Employer Liable for Disability — No Substantial Evidence to Support Workers' Compensation Court's Findings to Contrary: In May 1990, petitioner's son was killed in an accident. As a result of that event, petitioner suffered severe depression and was diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder. In 1992, petitioner suffered an injury on the job that aggravated an underlying condition of degenerative arthritis or disc disease. Because of the injury, petitioner was unable to continue working. In 1993, petitioner's daughter died, her foster daughter and her children were killed in a house fire, and her sister was diagnosed with a terminal brain tumor. Lumbermen's contended that petitioner's physical disability was temporary, that the primary factor in petitioner's disability was the emotional disorder that developed subsequent to the work-related injury, and that Lumbermen's was not responsible for any disability caused by that disorder. The Workers' Compensation Court found that petitioner's emotional condition was caused by events that occurred subsequent to the work-related injury and that Lumbermen's was not liable. The Supreme Court held that there was no substantial evidence to support that finding. An employer takes its employees as it finds them. The evidence showed that the emotional condition arose from the son's death, which preceded the work-related injury, and that the work-related injury aggravated a preexisting physical condition. An employee who suffers from a preexisting condition is entitled to compensation if the condition was aggravated by an industrial injury. Satterlee v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 280 M 85, 929 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 1310 (1996).

Cap on Benefits Payments as Temporary — Statutory Rate at Time of Injury Following Termination of Cap: The 1987 Legislature placed an arbitrary cap on the benefits payable to injured workers, as an exception to the regular benefit rate provided in 39-71-701(3)(1987). The Supreme Court construed the cap according to standard rules of statutory construction and held that according to the plain meaning of the words used, 39-71-701 was clear and unambiguous in establishing a temporary rather than permanent cap on benefit payments. Following expiration of the benefit cap on June 30, 1991, the maximum benefit rate for workers is set at the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 516, 885 P2d 428, 51 St. Rep. 1145 (1994) (Murer II), clarified in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III), that the 1987 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 1, 1987, and June 30, 1989, and expired on June 30, 1989; that the 1989 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 17, 1989, and June 30, 1991, and expired on June 30, 1991; and that the 1989 temporary cap cannot be applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to July 17, 1989.

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Cost-of-Living Increases Included in Initial Award of Social Security Benefits Excluded in Determining Workers' Compensation Offset: Broeker was injured in the course of his employment when a soft drink machine fell on him. In determining Social Security benefits to be offset against Broeker's workers' compensation benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court excluded cost-of-living increases that had been given to Social Security recipients between the time that Broeker became eligible for Social Security benefits and when he received them over 4 years later. Citing Colorado case law, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that at the time of Broeker's injury, the Montana workers' compensation statutes did not include a cost-of-living provision and that Broeker was therefore not receiving an increased benefit or a double award. Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Social Security Benefits Offset Indexed to Date of Eligibility — Statute Not Ambiguous — Rule of Liberal Construction Inapplicable: Broeker was injured in the course of his employment when a soft drink machine fell on him. In determining Social Security benefits to be offset against Broeker's workers' compensation benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court held that the state payments were to be indexed to the date on which Broeker became eligible for those payments. The Supreme Court held that Broeker was incorrect when he argued that the words "for such week" in statute were ambiguous. The Supreme Court held that the language clearly referred to the week in which benefits are paid and that a rule of liberal construction in effect at the time of Broeker's injury was inapplicable because statute was unambiguous. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that indexing the offset to the date on which Broeker became eligible for benefits was correct. Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Independent Disabling Conditions — One Work-Related, Another Not: The Workers' Compensation Court held that Larson was ineligible to receive permanent total disability benefits for a work-related hernia because he first became totally disabled by a preexisting, nonwork-related and independent heart condition. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court, noting that the liberal construction provision in 39-71-104 (now repealed) favored the injured worker, relied on Bond v. St. Regis Paper Co., 174 M 417, 571 P2d 372 (1977), for the proposition that an employer takes an employee subject to the employee's physical condition at the time of employment and on Shea v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 529 P2d 1131 (Wash. Ct. App. 1974), and Estate of Ensley v. Anglo Alaska Constr., 773 P2d 955 (Alaska 1989), in holding that if evidence showed that Larson's hernia produced a permanent total disability, total disability benefits were payable regardless of the fact that the preexisting, nonwork-related heart condition also could be considered a cause of the permanent total disability. Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 271 M 98, 894 P2d 327, 52 St. Rep. 369 (1995).

Evidence Supports Permanent Disability Caused by Previous Accident: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant's current condition was not the result of a 1979 shoulder injury, but rather was aggravated by a 1984 accident. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that there was sufficient evidence to establish that the claimant's shoulder condition was caused by the 1979 accident and that the claimant had become permanently disabled because of the arthritic condition of his shoulder. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether the claimant's permanent disability is partial or total. Harmon v. Harmon, 249 M 387, 816 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 698 (1991).

Claimant Unable to Perform Work in Normal Labor Market: The District Court erred in holding that there was no evidence by which it could establish the claimant's disability and compensation rate for his second injury. The record established that he had only a high school education and that his employment experience was limited to physical labor jobs that he is no longer able to perform. The burden now shifts to his employer to show that claimant has reasonable prospects for employment. Varela v. Petroleum Cas. Co., 237 M 300, 773 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 819 (1989).

Social Security Disability Setoff Computation — Difference Between Disability Payment and Lower Early Retirement Payment Not Basis for Deduction Computation: Worker receiving workers' compensation applied for and received early retirement (at age 62) social security benefits. About 6 months later, he elected to exercise his option to receive social security disability benefits instead. This section provides for an offset against the workers' compensation payment of half of the social security disability payment "payable because of the injury". The words "payable because of the injury" do not refer to the difference between the early retirement benefit amount and the (higher) disability benefit amount. The statute is clear and unambiguous in its plain language. Half the disability payment is to be deducted, not just half of the amount by which that payment exceeds what the early retirement payment would be. This interpretation does not violate the supremacy clause of the federal constitution. Watson v. Seekins, 234 M 309, 763 P2d 328, 45 St. Rep. 1931 (1988).

Rating of Impairments Restricted to Licensed Physicians: Under 39-71-122 (repealed 1987) and 39-71-701 through 39-71-703, the legislative intent was that the making of impairment ratings be restricted to licensed medical physicians. Therefore, the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) properly exercised its rulemaking authority by promulgating ARM 24.29.806, which imposes the restriction. Weis v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 232 M 218, 755 P2d 1385, 45 St. Rep. 1004 (1988).

Tip Income Not Included in Original Calculation of Benefit Rate — Remand: Ten years after his injury, claimant contended that money he received in tips but never reported should have been included in his wage base. The Supreme Court found that the passage of more than 10 years, combined with the inability of claimant or his employer to submit proof of the alleged tips, indicated that the doctrine of equitable estoppel applied. The court remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court for reconsideration of the tip income issue in light of the elements constituting equitable estoppel described in Sweet v. Colborn School Supply, 196 M 367, 639 P2d 521 (1982). Sampson v. Broadway Yellow Cab Co., 226 M 273, 735 P2d 298, 44 St. Rep. 649 (1987), distinguished in Miller v. W. Guar. Fund Serv., 248 M 132, 809 P2d 1257, 48 St. Rep. 348 (1991), in which neither equitable estoppel nor laches applied because: (1) claimant was induced by the employer as to how tips should be reported; (2) the claim for benefits specifically stated that tips were not included in wages listed; and (3) there was only a 2-year delay in asserting the claim for increased wages, during which time the insurer had constant access to claimant's employment records.

Social Security Offset: Montana law allows an offset against compensation when an injured worker is also receiving social security disability benefits. Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986).

Permanent Total Disability Benefits — Not Based on Earning Capability: Claimant LaVe contended that the lower court erred in basing her permanent total disability benefits on her usual hours of employment rather than on her earning capability. At the time of injury, she was working 10 hours a week, but she asserted that since she had intended to get a job working 40 hours a week, her benefits should be based on her capability to work 40 hours a week. Notwithstanding the fact that 39-71-116 mentions earning capability in the definition of permanent total disability, under 39-71-702 benefits for such a disability are "66 ⅔% of the wages received at the time of the injury". Section 39-71-116 defines wages as "the average gross earnings received by the employee at the time of the injury for the usual hours of employment in a week". Therefore, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's computation of benefits based on 10 hours a week actual employment rather than on an earning capability based on 40 hours a week. LaVe v. School District, 220 M 52, 713 P2d 546, 43 St. Rep. 165 (1986).

Claimant Need Not Undergo Surgery to Prove Permanent Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court found that the claimant was totally disabled, but that his disability was temporary because back surgery may improve his condition. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that there is sufficient evidence to establish that the claimant is permanently disabled; he is not required to undergo surgery to determine whether his condition would change. The matter was remanded for a determination of how the claimant's permanent disability may have affected his ability to function in the normal labor market. Moilanen v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 214 M 367, 694 P2d 485, 42 St. Rep. 25 (1985).

No Offset Against Claimant of Social Security Benefits: At the time that claimant suffered the injury which rendered him totally permanently disabled, in May 1974, Montana law provided for a 100% offset of social security disability benefits. Shortly afterward, the Legislature reduced the offset to 50%. In 1980, in McClanathan v. Smith, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, the Supreme Court ruled that the 100% offset statute was constitutionally unenforceable. Therefore, application of a 50% offset to claimant was error. The statutes in effect at the time of injury set the standards by which the benefits for the claimant are computed, and since the offset statute in effect at the time of claimant's injury was void under the McClanathan decision, no offset can be made of claimant's benefits. Neither can the 50% offset statute be applied retroactively to claimant because this would be an impairment of his vested rights. Trusty v. Consol. Freightways, 210 M 148, 681 P2d 1085, 41 St. Rep. 973 (1984).

Social Security Auxiliary Benefits Includable in Offset Formula: Social security benefits received by auxiliaries of the disabled person are properly included in the formula for offsets against workers' compensation benefits under this section. Trusty v. Consol. Freightways, 210 M 148, 681 P2d 1085, 41 St. Rep. 973 (1984).

Refusal to Submit to Low-Risk Surgery With High Probability of Success — Effect on Disability: The Workers' Compensation Court found that claimant was permanently totally disabled despite the fact that claimant refused low-risk surgery with a 92% chance of restoring working ability. The claimant had a manic-depressive disorder that distorted his powers of perception, comprehension, and judgment and constricted his mind with the possibility of failure, reinjury, and pain. His mental disorder prevented him from evaluating rationally the benefits of the proposed surgery. From this perspective, the claimant's refusal to submit to knee surgery was not unreasonable. In so holding, the Supreme Court overruled Dosen v. E. Butte Copper Min. Co., 78 M 579, 254 P 880 (1927). Small v. Transp. Ins. Co., 209 M 387, 681 P2d 1081, 41 St. Rep. 776 (1984).

Offset Claim Motivated by Good Faith: At the time that defendants claimed offset against claimant's workers' compensation benefits, defendants' conduct was lawful and motivated by good faith, since the offset provision had not, at that time, been declared unconstitutional. Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488, 37 St. Rep. 474 (1980).

Offset Statute — Constitutionality Under Discrimination by "Social Condition": Appellant attacks the Offset Statute on the grounds that it discriminates against him on the basis of social condition, namely as a parent and totally disabled person. The words "social condition" were intended to include and refer to "discriminations based on status of income and standard of living". "Social condition" relates to one's economic status or rank in society, and the type of discrimination which is sought to be prohibited is, for example, that type of discrimination which results solely because one is poor. As such, appellant's status here does not fall within the protections of the provision. McClanathan v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, 37 St. Rep. 113 (1980).

Offset Statute — Constitutionality Under Equal Protection: Appellant attacked Montana's Offset Statute as being unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause of the United States Constitution in that it provides for different reductions in benefits for claimants with dependents. In applying the Equal Protection Clause to social and economic legislation, great latitude is given to state Legislatures in making classifications. Perfection in making classifications is neither possible nor necessary, neither is mathematical nicety or perfect quality. Rather, where the goals of a classification are legitimate and the classification is rationally related to the achievement of those goals, the Statute should be constitutionally upheld. Here, the avoidance of duplication or overlapping benefits is a reasonable and permissive legislative objective. Though there are results in inequality to some, the Statute is rationally related to the accomplishment of that objective. The Statute is applied to individuals uniformly and equally, the difference in treatment relating only to differences in factual situations between individuals. McClanathan v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, 37 St. Rep. 113 (1980).

Offset Statute Includes All of Social Security Provisions: In construing the Offset Statute of the Workers' Compensation Act, the court found that it was the intention of the Legislature to incorporate all of the relevant subchapters of the Social Security Act into the Statute and not merely section 301 (since repealed), which was the beginning subchapter of the Social Security Act. Limiting the Statute to just section 301 would defeat the Statute's meaning and purpose and would lead to an absurd result whereas a reasonable construction avoids it. The court therefore held that the Offset Statute is effective and that despite the repeal of section 301, federal disability insurance benefits are covered under the Statute. McClanathan v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, 37 St. Rep. 113 (1980).

Offset Statute Not Applicable to Cost-of-Living Increases: The State Offset Statute may not be used to reduce the benefits accruing to an individual under the cost-of-living increases provided in 42 U.S.C. §415, but his benefits may be reduced under 42 U.S.C. §424, relating to disability benefits under the Social Security program, and payments for such disability under the workers' compensation program. McClanathan v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, 37 St. Rep. 113 (1980), followed in Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Permanent Disability Award May Be Reviewed: The Workers' Compensation Court has continuing jurisdiction to review an award of permanent disability. Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarifying and denying rehearing of Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Extremity Injury: Claimant who suffered a crushing injury to the left hand, and was left-handed, testified that he could not endure the pain in his hand, and had only worked on a ranch or construction and could no longer do this type of work, could be considered permanently totally disabled even though he could do various odd jobs. Claimant was not limited to the specific injury statute. Jensen v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191 (1978).

Permanent Versus Partial Disability: The limitations on recovery under the specific injury statutes 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) apply only to permanent partial disability and do not apply to or limit the amount of recovery for permanent total disability under this section. Jensen v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191, 35 St. Rep. 1066 (1978).

Total Permanent Disability Determination: Evidence showing an aggravation from an industrial injury of a preexisting condition, and that claimant could not work because he could not take the pain, substantiated a finding that the claimant was permanently totally disabled. Robins v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 175 M 514, 575 P2d 67 (1978), followed in Larson v. Cigna Ins. Co., 276 M 283, 915 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 394 (1996), and Killoy v. Reliance Nat'l Indem., 278 M 88, 923 P2d 531, 53 St. Rep. 838 (1996).

Evidence Must Sustain Classification: Workers' Compensation Court finding of "temporary total disability" was overruled, and reclassification was mandated as "permanent". Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278, 33 St. Rep. 1191 (1976).

Retirement Age: Permanent total workers' compensation disability benefits are not tied to the conversion of federal social security disability benefits to retirement benefits and are not governed by retirement age. Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc. & Employees Commercial Union Ins. Co., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278 (1976).

OPINIONS PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Change in Average Weekly Wage — No Effect on Existing Benefits: The amount of an existing benefit award under 39-71-701, 39-71-702, or 39-71-703 is unaffected by increase in the state's average weekly wage. 40 A.G. Op. 38 (1984).

Salary Payments to Municipal Policemen After Disabling Injury: Section 7-32-4132 requires a municipality to pay an injured policeman's full salary during the period of disability or 1 year, whichever ends first. The Workers' Compensation Fund is not liable for any wage loss benefits during that period because the municipality pays the policeman in full and he has suffered no wage loss. 37 A.G. Op. 156 (1978).

1997 Amendments: Chapter 42 in (3) substituted "subsection (5)" for "subsection (4)". Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

Chapter 276 in (9)(c), defining light labor activity, substituted "20 pounds" for "25 pounds". Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 34(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 7, 12 [39-71-703] through 14 and 29] are effective July 1, 1997, and apply to claims for injuries occurring on or after [the effective dates of sections 7, 12 through 14 and 29]."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (1), at end, inserted "if that worker"; inserted (1)(a) and (1)(b) requiring a wage loss and an impairment rating; inserted (2) stating conditions for an impairment award only; at beginning of (4) inserted "A permanent partial disability" and deleted second sentence that read: "The criteria for the rating of disability must be calculated using the medical impairment rating as determined by the latest edition of the American medical association Guides to the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment"; in (5), after "adding", inserted "all of"; in two places in (5)(a) increased age from 30 years to 40 years, after second "years of age" deleted "but under 56 years of age", reduced award from 2% to 1%, and after "1%" deleted "and if the claimant is 56 years of age or older at the time of injury, 3%"; in (5)(b) increased education factor from "9 years" to "12 years", reduced award from 3% to 1%, substituted "12 years or more of education" for "9 through 12 years of education", reduced award from 2% to 0%, and after "0%" deleted "for a worker who has completed more than 12 years of education, 0%"; in (5)(c), near beginning before "wage loss", inserted "actual" and inserted second sentence concerning calculation of wage loss benefits; in (5)(d) reduced awards from 20% to 5%, 15% to 3%, and 10% to 2%; inserted (8) concerning calculation of permanent partial disability benefits under rehabilitation plan; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: Substituted present language regarding compensation for permanent partial disability (see 1991 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "(1) The benefits available for permanent partial disability are impairment awards and wage supplements. A worker who has reached maximum healing and is not eligible for permanent total disability benefits but who has a medically determined physical restriction as a result of a work-related injury may be eligible for an impairment award and wage supplement benefits as follows:

(a) The following procedure must be followed for an impairment award:

(i) Each percentage point of impairment is compensated in an amount equal to 5 weeks times 66 ⅔% of the wages received at the time of the injury, subject to a maximum compensation rate of one-half of the state's average weekly wage at the time of injury.

(ii) When a worker reaches maximum healing, an impairment rating is rendered by one or more physicians as provided for in 39-71-711. Impairment benefits are payable beginning the date of maximum healing.

(iii) An impairment award may be paid biweekly or in a lump sum, at the discretion of the worker. Lump sums paid for impairments are not subject to the requirements set forth in 39-71-741, except that lump-sum conversions for benefits not accrued may be reduced to present value at the rate set forth by the department in 39-71-741(5).

(iv) If a worker becomes eligible for permanent total disability benefits, the insurer may recover any lump-sum advance paid to a claimant for impairment, as set forth in 39-71-741(5). Such right of recovery does not apply to lump-sum benefits paid for the period prior to claimant's eligibility for permanent total disability benefits.

(v) If a worker suffers additional injury, an impairment award payable for the additional injury must be reduced by the amount of a previous award paid for impairment to the same site on the body.

(b) The following procedure must be followed for a wage supplement:

(i) A worker must be compensated in weekly benefits equal to 66 ⅔% of the difference between the worker's actual wages received at the time of the injury and the wages the worker is qualified to earn in the worker's job pool, subject to a maximum compensation rate of one-half the state's average weekly wage at the time of injury.

(ii) Eligibility for wage supplement benefits begins at maximum healing and terminates at the expiration of 500 weeks minus the number of weeks for which a worker's impairment award is payable, subject to 39-71-710. A worker's failure to sustain a wage loss compensable under subsection (1)(b)(i) does not extend the period of eligibility. However, if a worker becomes eligible for temporary total disability, permanent total disability, or total rehabilitation benefits after reaching maximum healing, the eligibility period for wage supplement benefits is extended by any period for which a worker is compensated by those benefits after reaching maximum healing.

(2) The determination of permanent partial disability must be supported by a preponderance of medical evidence.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), beginning July 1, 1987, through June 30, 1991, the maximum weekly compensation benefits for permanent partial disability may not exceed $149.50, which is one-half the state's average weekly wage established July 1, 1986". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Special Session Amendment: In (3) reimposed benefit freeze that ended June 30, 1989, to continue through June 30, 1991. Amendment effective July 17, 1989.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 9, Sp. L. June 1989, was a severability clause.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: Substituted section (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former section that read: "(1) Weekly compensation benefits for injury producing partial disability shall be 66 ⅔% of the actual diminution in the worker's earning capacity measured in dollars, subject to a maximum weekly compensation of one-half the state's average weekly wage.

(2) The compensation shall be paid during the period of disability, not exceeding, however, 500 weeks in cases of partial disability. However, compensation for partial disability resulting from the loss of or injury to any member shall not be payable for a greater number of weeks than is specified in 39-71-705 for the loss of the member."

One-Half the State's Average Weekly Wage: Maximum benefit under 39-71-703 for injuries occurring on July 1, 1975, through June 30, 1976, is $73.50 per week; for injuries occurring on July 1, 1976, through June 30, 1977, is $81 per week; for injuries occurring on July 1, 1977, through June 30, 1978, $87 per week; for injuries occurring on July 1, 1978, through June 30, 1979, is $94 per week; for injuries occurring on July 1, 1979, through June 30, 1980, is $99 per week; July 1, 1980, through June 30, 1981, is $109 per week; July 1, 1981, through June 30, 1982, is $120.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Medium Duty Female Bartending Job: The judge's finding that a female bartending job was medium duty was supported by the vocational consultant's testimony, based partly on the job description that the employer gave the consultant. The job description stated that S.L.H. occasionally stocked cases of beer that weighed 31 pounds, moved a keg of beer into a cooler about once a week, which required 35 to 37 pounds of exertion, and once in a while removed garbage that weighed 25 to 30 pounds. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

Loss of Part of Toe, Fracture of Another, and Resultant Sensitivity to Cold as Permanent Partial Disability — Justifiable Dispute as to Benefits: The insurer did not act unreasonably in denying permanent partial disability benefits. Therefore, the court properly denied claimant legal fees and a 20% penalty. There was a valid factual dispute and a valid question of legal interpretation of the pertinent statute. Claimant lost part of his fifth toe and had a fracture of his largest toe. Cold temperatures caused the foot and toes to ache. He was given an impairment rating of 1% of the whole man. The treating doctor's treatment notes did not indicate impairment of work, and the doctor's deposition was not clear on the issue. Claimant and the insurer disagreed on whether there was work impairment, and the Workers' Compensation Court found impairment. The pertinent statute had been amended in 1991 to provide that a claimant was not entitled to permanent partial disability benefits unless the medically determined physical restriction impaired the claimant's ability to work. Claimant's interpretation of the statute was justifiably disputed by the insurer, and there was no case law to aid in interpretation. Williams v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 270 M 209, 891 P2d 502, 52 St. Rep. 148 (1995).

Wage Supplement Claim — Use of Pay Period Average for Calculating Preinjury Wages: A wage supplement claim, like any other workers' compensation claim, is a claim for a type of compensation benefits. Therefore, 39-71-123 mandates the use of the four-pay period average for calculating preinjury wages unless one of the enumerated exceptions is met. Multiplying a worker's hourly rate by the number of scheduled working hours is permitted only when a worker has been employed at a job for less than four pay periods. Also, additional pay periods may be used if the four-pay period method does not accurately reflect the claimant's employment history. Further, under this section, the wages that a worker is qualified to earn, not what are actually earned, are used in calculating wage supplement benefits. In the case at hand, the Workers' Compensation Court found that because Perryman was capable of earning as much if not more than he was earning at the time of injury, he was not entitled to wage supplement benefits under this section. Perryman v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 269 M 140, 887 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 1523 (1994).

Cap on Benefits Payments as Temporary — Statutory Rate at Time of Injury Following Termination of Cap: The 1987 Legislature placed an arbitrary cap on the benefits payable to injured workers, as an exception to the regular benefit rate provided in 39-71-701(3)(1987). The Supreme Court construed the cap according to standard rules of statutory construction and held that according to the plain meaning of the words used, 39-71-701 was clear and unambiguous in establishing a temporary rather than permanent cap on benefit payments. Following expiration of the benefit cap on June 30, 1991, the maximum benefit rate for workers is set at the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 516, 885 P2d 428, 51 St. Rep. 1145 (1994) (Murer II), clarified in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III), that the 1987 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 1, 1987, and June 30, 1989, and expired on June 30, 1989; that the 1989 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 17, 1989, and June 30, 1991, and expired on June 30, 1991; and that the 1989 temporary cap cannot be applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to July 17, 1989.

Workers' Compensation Court Error in Amending Termination of Benefits Statute That Legislature Had Not Amended: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Legislature's failure to amend 39-71-710 to disallow retired claimants from receiving partial disability benefits, in light of the subsequent amendment of this section, was an obvious oversight. The court concluded, without any reference to legislative history, that it was not the Legislature's intent to allow such benefits. However, by its decision, the court amended the termination of benefits statute that the Legislature either failed or declined to amend and, in the process, erred by inserting into the statute what had been omitted. The Supreme Court strictly construed the statutory language, concluding that 39-71-710 (1987) did not provide for termination of benefits that were awarded pursuant to this section (1991) when claimant retired. The case was remanded for a determination of the duration over which claimant was entitled to permanent partial disability benefits. Russette v. Chippewa Cree Housing Authority, 265 M 90, 874 P2d 1217, 51 St. Rep. 414 (1994).

Appropriate Rehabilitation Option for Permanent Partial Disability: In order to qualify as permanently totally disabled, claimant was required to show that after exhausting all rehabilitation options in 39-71-1012 (now repealed), he remained unable to return to work in his job pool. Absent such a showing, claimant's classification as permanently partially disabled was proper, and his return to a related occupation suited to his education and marketable skills was the appropriate rehabilitation option. Kelly v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 200, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 699 (1992).

Earning Capacity Improperly Including Modified Position Not in Job Pool: After claimant suffered a back injury working as a grocery clerk, she received disability benefits until she returned to work in a camera bar clerk position, which had been modified by the defendant to allow claimant to avoid lifting requirements normally required for the position, at a higher wage than normally paid to a camera bar clerk. In calculating claimant's postinjury earning capacity, the Workers' Compensation Court included the modified camera bar clerk's position in claimant's job pool and concluded that she was not entitled to wage supplement benefits. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that because of the modification of the camera bar clerk position and the inflated wage paid, the position should not have been included in the claimant's job pool. Dilling v. Buttrey Foods, 251 M 286, 825 P2d 1193, 48 St. Rep. 1057 (1991).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Increase in Disability Over That Which Existed Prior to Injury — Benefits for Permanent Partial Disability Denied: Kuntz was injured numerous times during his employment history. In this proceeding, Kuntz asserted that his 1987 back injury was an aggravation of a previous injury and thus compensable. After hearing testimony from the examining physicians and failing to find wholly credible Kuntz's testimony concerning the nature and extent of his pain and disability, the Workers' Compensation Court properly found that the 1987 injury was not material or significant on a permanent basis and did not increase Kuntz's disability over that which existed prior to the injury. Because Kuntz failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the 1987 injury caused his current disability, the burden did not shift to the employer. Denial of permanent partial benefits was affirmed. Kuntz v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 1998 MT 5, 287 M 142, 952 P2d 422, 55 St. Rep. 12 (1998), following Kloepfer v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 276 M 495, 916 P2d 1310 (1996).

Work-Related Injury — Insurer Alleged Current Disability Caused by Intervening Events — Shifted Burden of Proof — Workers' Compensation Court Findings Reversed: Briney injured his back in 1981 in a work-related accident but was allowed by his physician to return to work the same year. In the years following the injury, Briney had good days and bad days, was treated by several physicians, and sometimes missed work. In 1993, he underwent unrelated surgery and, because he was inactive for a period of time following surgery, was not able to continue his exercise regimen to strengthen his back. Consequently, his back condition deteriorated and he was unable to return to work after the surgery. After his employer's workers' compensation insurer agreed to pay temporary total disability, Briney sought compensation for a permanent partial disability, but the Workers' Compensation Court Judge denied the claim, holding that Briney's current condition was not caused by the 1981 work-related injury but was caused by multiple injuries or aggravations over the years since 1981. The Supreme Court reversed, pointing to testimony linking Briney's current physical condition to his 1981 injury and relying upon its holding in Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 262 M 450, 865 P2d 1113 (1993), in which the Supreme Court held that once a worker has proved a work-related injury and produces evidence that the injury is the cause of the worker's present condition, the burden shifts to the insurer to prove that the worker's present condition is due to other injuries. Because the Supreme Court found that no such evidence had been presented by the insurer, it held that the Workers' Compensation Court erred in denying benefits. Briney v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 283 M 346, 942 P2d 81, 54 St. Rep. 608 (1997).

Claimant Not Entitled to Benefits: Burglund argued that the Workers' Compensation Court erred in concluding that he was not entitled to compensation under the 1983 version of this section. The Supreme Court held that there was ample evidence in the record to support the lower court's finding that Burglund did not have the physical restrictions that he claimed. Burglund v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 279 M 298, 927 P2d 1006, 53 St. Rep. 1158 (1996).

Increased Earnings After Injury Not Disqualification to Receive Benefits: Where claimant's earnings after injury were actually greater than before but evidence showed a diminished potential earning capacity because of continuing pain, restrictions on activities, and diminished qualification for jobs in the open labor market as a whole, claimant is not disqualified for permanent partial disability benefits under this section (decided on law prior to 1987 amendment). Reeverts v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 266 M 509, 881 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 894 (1994); Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527, 45 St. Rep. 215 (1988); Sedlack v. Church Mut. Ins., 230 M 273, 749 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 199 (1988).

Indemnity Benefits for Scheduled Injury Affirmed: The Supreme Court affirmed the award of 140 weeks for total blindness of one eye, as established in the schedule set out in 39-71-705 (now repealed) as that section read at the time of injury, despite claimant's contentions that 500 weeks was more appropriate because the Workers' Compensation Act should be broadly construed in favor of the worker and that an eye should not be considered a "member" under the compensation terms of this section. Raffety v. Kanta Prod., Inc., 250 M 268, 819 P2d 1272, 48 St. Rep. 926 (1991).

Temporary Total Benefits Improperly Characterized as Permanent Partial — Court Estopped From Denying Liability: State Fund characterized benefits as permanent partial disability payments deductible from claimant's eventual permanent disability award because of wages claimant received during the period in question. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the payments could not have been permanent partial disability payments because: (1) claimant had not reached maximum healing; and (2) as a proprietor or corporate officer, claimant's injury did not result in a total loss of wages. Given these circumstances, State Fund was properly estopped from denying liability for temporary total disability benefits. Ryles v. Springhill Ranch Eggs, 247 M 276, 806 P2d 525, 48 St. Rep. 196 (1991).

Right to Permanent Partial Disability Benefits Following Death of Claimant: Justice Sheehy offered a brief and clearly well-documented explanation of the legal liability for payment of permanent partial disability benefits of a worker now expired. Citing Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10 (1981), and Grimshaw v. L. Peterson Larson Co., 213 M 291, 691 P2d 805 (1984), it was held that a worker's impairment rating is a medical component of a permanent partial disability rating and constitutes an irreducible minimum of payments that the worker is entitled to and that accrued at the time of his maximum healing. Because the date of accrual in this case was before the worker's death, his right to permanent partial disability benefits was properly an asset in his estate. Monroy v. Cenex, 246 M 365, 805 P2d 1343, 47 St. Rep. 2283 (1990).

Permanent Partial Disability and Loss of Earning Capacity Properly Determined — Conflicting Conclusions Regarding Temporary Total Disability — Remand: Applying 1979 workers' compensation provisions, the trial court properly found that claimant suffered a loss of earning capacity and was eligible for permanent partial disability benefits based on the following medical and other evidence: (1) claimant's accident and injury were undisputedly employment-related; (2) prior to the accident, claimant was a strong person with no history of back problems; (3) after the accident, numerous physicians diagnosed soft tissue injury; (4) claimant had a number of vocational alternatives and could minimize pain by following a pain clinic's recommendations; and (5) claimant could return to work and earn essentially the same wage. However, after applying the factors set out in Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527 (1988), claimant had a 78% reduction in job market as a result of her 10% impairment rating, taking into account her chronic pain and inability to work long hours standing or in one position. Nevertheless, the case was remanded because of inconsistent and conflicting conclusions regarding whether claimant was eligible for temporary total disability benefits between the time employment ended and permanent partial disability was established. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Open Labor Market Defined: The insurer argued that under the statute, the claimant could only be compensated for actual loss, not for possible future loss of earning capacity. The Supreme Court held that the test was whether the claimant had an injury that caused a loss of the ability to earn in the open labor market. The court went on to say that this test could be met if the claimant continued to work for the same employer on a job that paid less or presented less chance for advancement. Taylor v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins., 243 M 464, 795 P2d 433, 47 St. Rep. 1325 (1990).

Difference Between Preinjury and Postinjury Wages — Only One of Factors in Determining Earning Capacity: The claimant was found to be permanently partially disabled. The insurer argued that the lower court erred in determining the loss of earning capacity in light of the range of wages he had earned subsequent to his injury. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's award, stating that preinjury and postinjury were only one of the factors to be considered by the court in determining the claimant's earning capacity. Quinn v. EBI/Orion Group, Inc., 240 M 221, 783 P2d 406, 46 St. Rep. 2071 (1989).

No Additional Evidentiary Hearing Required on Remand to Satisfy Defendants' Desire for More Specific Findings: In the first trial, the Workers' Compensation Court applied the wrong standard in determining the elements the claimant had to prove to establish permanent partial disability. The defendants alleged that the lower court had erred on remand by not making any additional findings or conclusions regarding the claimant's preinjury and postinjury earning capacity. The Supreme Court disagreed, stating that the lower court had only been instructed to determine if the claimant had a permanent partial disability and that the lower court was not obliged to conduct an evidentiary hearing to satisfy the defendants' desire for more specific findings and conclusions. Beck v. Flathead County, 240 M 128, 783 P2d 383, 46 St. Rep. 1996 (1989).

Inconsistent Findings — Remand to Determine Percentage of Disability and Number of Weeks Allowed: Throughout its findings of fact and conclusions of law, the lower court referred to claimant's 10% impairment rating of his upper left extremity. However, after considering claimant's age, education, work history, medical evaluations, and postinjury employment and earnings, the court, without explanation, found 20% disability of the upper left extremity. Although this section allows 280 weeks for such an injury, the lower court concluded that claimant was entitled to only 220 weeks. The Supreme Court remanded for further findings and conclusions to determine the percentage of disability and the number of weeks of permanent partial disability allowed. Allee v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 239 M 243, 779 P2d 929, 46 St. Rep. 1655 (1989).

Deposition Testimony — Insufficient Evidence to Support Claim: The Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court concerning credibility of witnesses or the weight to be given their testimony. However, when the evidence is entered by deposition, the Supreme Court is in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to judge the weight to be given to the testimony. When the medical evidence does not reveal abnormalities that support claimant's complaints, claimant has failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his problems were a result of the 1977 industrial injury. Schrapps v. Home Ins. Co., 238 M 355, 777 P2d 887, 46 St. Rep. 1330 (1989).

Earning Capacity Improperly Based on Short-Term Maximum Wage: Claimant worked at 15 different jobs over a 10-year period. The highest wage he received was $12.44 an hour for a job he held 1 or 2 weeks for an employer he could not name. Under the circumstances, it was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to calculate wage loss benefits based on $12.44 an hour in light of rehabilitation experts' assertions of a $4.50 to $6.00 an hour earning capacity; claimant's previous work history, age, education, remaining work years, and extent of injury; review of deposition evidence; and this section as it read prior to 1987 amendment. Hurley v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 233 M 242, 759 P2d 996, 45 St. Rep. 1457 (1988), followed in Combs v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 240 M 453, 784 P2d 928, 47 St. Rep. 23 (1990), and in Chagnon v. Tilleman Motor Co., 259 M 21, 855 P2d 1002, 50 St. Rep. 198 (1993).

Rating of Impairments Restricted to Licensed Physicians: Under 39-71-122 (repealed 1987) and 39-71-701 through 39-71-703, the legislative intent was that the making of impairment ratings be restricted to licensed medical physicians. Therefore, the Workers' Compensation Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) properly exercised its rulemaking authority by promulgating ARM 24.29.806, which imposes the restriction. Weis v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 232 M 218, 755 P2d 1385, 45 St. Rep. 1004 (1988).

Failure to Prove Actual Loss of Earning Capacity: In a decision based on this section as it read prior to 1987 amendment, the Supreme Court affirmed a denial of additional permanent partial disability benefits after finding that claimant failed to prove actual loss of earning capacity in the open labor market. Claimant continued to work at his ski patrol job with no income loss, medical restrictions, or job modification; had not lost any carpentry employment because of his injuries; and failed to avail himself of opportunities in the open labor market with regard to his skills as an emergency medical technician or to his extensive college education in photography and English literature. Kuenning v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 231 M 1, 750 P2d 1091, 45 St. Rep. 383 (1988), followed in Wunderlich v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 270 M 404, 892 P2d 563, 52 St. Rep. 251 (1995). See also Houtchens v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 99, 754 P2d 824, 45 St. Rep. 898 (1988).

Loss of Earning Capacity Sufficient for Award of Benefits: The lower court found that claimant unsuccessfully applied for several positions that would alleviate her physical problems because they involved less desk work; that retail sales positions paid between $3.35 and $3.50 an hour compared to $8.89 an hour that claimant earned at her former position, resulting in an actual loss in earning capacity of $216 a week; and that the rehabilitation counselor who testified for the State Fund was unable to find appropriate employment for which claimant was qualified. The court properly concluded that the State Fund failed to overcome claimant's showing that she could not return to her former or a comparable position and that an award of 500 weeks of permanent partial disability payments was proper. Lauderdale v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 188, 745 P2d 690, 44 St. Rep. 1883 (1987).

Injury to Finger and Back — Only Finger Injury Affecting Earning Capacity: A claimant elected to proceed under this section, which compensates a claimant for actual diminution in earning capacity. Evidence established that loss of earning capacity resulted from his finger injury and the resulting inability to effectively use his hand, but did not establish loss of earning capacity from his back injury. The lower court applied 39-71-705 in determining compensation for loss of or injury to one hand and properly limited benefits to 200 weeks. Sterns v. Dudley, 228 M 45, 741 P2d 407, 44 St. Rep. 1329 (1987).

Workers' Compensation Denied — Claimant Receiving Unemployment Benefits: The judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court denying claimant disability benefits will not be disturbed on appeal as it is supported by substantial credible evidence. Claimant was receiving unemployment benefits during the period he claims he was disabled, asserting on his application for unemployment benefits that he was able and available to work and had no medical condition that prevented him from accepting immediate employment in his field. Eveleigh v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, 225 M 53, 730 P2d 1176, 44 St. Rep. 36 (1987).

Actual Loss of Earning Capacity — Insufficient Evidence to Support Award: Respondent, a millworker, was awarded permanent partial disability benefits by the Workers' Compensation Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that there was not sufficient evidence to support the award when it was based solely on the testimony of a Job Service counselor, was based on a postinjury job list that did not include millworker positions, ignored the testimony of treating doctors and the employer's representative that respondent was capable, after her injury, of handling millwork positions, and ignored the fact that respondent was continuing to handle millwork positions. In determining the actual loss of earning capacity, it was improper for the Workers' Compensation Court to anticipate possible future lost income. Dunn v. Champion Int'l Corp., 222 M 142, 720 P2d 1186, 43 St. Rep. 1124 (1986), distinguished in Sedlack v. Church Mut. Ins., 230 M 273, 749 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 199 (1988), Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527, 45 St. Rep. 215 (1988), and Hale v. Royal Logging, 1999 MT 302, 297 M 165, 990 P2d 1245, 56 St. Rep. 1217 (1999).

Back Condition and Ulcerative Proctitis Not Causally Related to Compensable Knee Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court found that appellant failed to prove that his ulcerative proctitis and alleged back condition were caused or aggravated by his compensable knee injury. There was substantial evidence in the record to support this finding. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court finding that appellant was entitled to 200 weeks permanent partial disability pursuant to 39-71-705 (now repealed) and not 500 weeks under 39-71-703. Byrd v. Ramsey Eng'r, 217 M 18, 701 P2d 1385, 42 St. Rep. 991 (1985).

Test to Determine Compensation — Factors Other Than Earning Capacity Impairment: Factors other than earning capacity impairment are relevant only if the court is unable to determine independently the claimant's income earning ability impairment. Since the primary purpose of workers' compensation is to compensate a worker for reduced earning capabilities resulting from an industrial accident, the award should be based on that percentage reduction and not on the worker's percentage of physical impairment. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 211 M 345, 684 P2d 1114, 41 St. Rep. 1403 (1984), followed in Sedlack v. Church Mut. Ins., 230 M 273, 749 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 199 (1988), and in Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527, 45 St. Rep. 215 (1988).

Use of Postinjury Earnings: The disability rating is to be determined by comparing earning capacity absent injury with earning capacity given the injury. Postinjury earnings may be unreliable for purposes of comparison because of increases in general wage levels, the claimant's maturity or training, longer hours worked after the accident, and payments of wages disproportionate to capacity out of sympathy to claimant. The objective of the disability test is to determine the wages that would have been paid to claimant as injured, discounting by the various factors listed above, and to compare them to preinjury wages. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 208 M 470, 679 P2d 1188, 41 St. Rep. 472 (1984), followed in Sedlack v. Church Mut. Ins., 230 M 273, 749 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 199 (1988), Beck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 294, 749 P2d 527, 45 St. Rep. 215 (1988), and in Anderson v. Hammer, 252 M 73, 826 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 165 (1992).

Incorrect to Give Benefits For That Percentage of 500 Weeks That Equals Percentage of Disability: Disability benefits under 39-71-703 are to be paid for the duration of the disability, not exceeding 500 weeks and subject only to period limitations specifically listed in the indemnity schedule for loss of the member. The procedure used in Head v. Larson & Missoula Serv. Co., 181 M 129, 592 P2d 507 (1979), whereby worker was paid benefits for the same percentage of 500 weeks as the percentage of his disability (25% disability X 500 weeks, resulting in a 125 week award), is incorrect and is expressly overruled. McDanold v. B.N. Transp., Inc., 208 M 470, 679 P2d 1188, 41 St. Rep. 472 (1984).

Diminished Earning Capacity Benefits Applicable to Lost Ability to Compete — Limiting Factors Inapplicable: Claimant fractured his elbow in an industrial accident. As a result of the injury it was necessary for a surgeon to implant a prosthesis in the elbow. Claimant brought an action under 39-71-703 seeking workers' compensation benefits for lost earning capacity in lieu of indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed). The Workers' Compensation Court found that although claimant was earning more at the time he filed his claim than at the time of his injury, he could proceed under 39-71-703 because his ability to compete in the open labor market was impaired. The court then applied the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) to its award. Claimant appealed, contending the limiting factors were inapplicable. The Supreme Court held that claimant had established sufficient factual basis to elect compensation under 39-71-703 for loss of earning capacity even though he was performing the same job and earning more. The Supreme Court also held that under 39-71-709 (now repealed), the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) should be applied only if a claimant has withdrawn his election to proceed under 39-71-703 and claims indemnity benefits. The case was remanded for proper computation of compensation. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 198 M 105, 643 P2d 1192, 39 St. Rep. 796 (1982), followed in Reeverts v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 266 M 509, 881 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 894 (1994).

Disability Award — Factors Considered — Evidence to Support: Claimant injured his back while "pulling on the green chain" at the Stoltze sawmill on November 8, 1972. Medical testimony indicated that as of 1976 claimant had suffered 15% impairment of the whole body. In a May 7, 1980, decision, the Workers' Compensation Court awarded claimant a 40% disability of the whole man. In determining disability, the court is to consider claimant's age, education, work experience, pain and disability, actual wage loss, and loss of future earning capacity. In this case claimant must avoid strenuous work. His choice of careers was significantly limited by the injury he received at age 25. The injury affected his future earning capacity for which he has not been compensated. The Supreme Court found substantial evidence supporting the finding of 40% disability of the whole man. Holton v. F. H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10, 38 St. Rep. 1835 (1981).

Reclassification — Pleading Requirement — Best Interests: Plaintiff was injured when a refrigerator he was lifting fell and smashed his hand and wrist. Plaintiff received temporary total benefits from December 7, 1976, until terminated on May 2, 1979. Plaintiff had heart surgery in 1977. In 1979 defendant terminated plaintiff's benefits claiming that he had no permanent disability from the accident and that his medical problems were nonindustrially related. The Workers' Compensation Court found that plaintiff's benefits were improperly terminated. Defendant alleged that because plaintiff failed to specifically plead for reclassification from temporary total disability to permanent partial disability, the Workers' Compensation Court could not reclassify him and award a lump-sum payment. The Supreme Court held that it was in the best interest of the plaintiff and judicial economy to resolve the entire matter. The Supreme Court declined to second-guess the Workers' Compensation Court's ruling as to the effect to be given to medical impairment ratings. Novak v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 195 M 219, 638 P2d 390, 38 St. Rep. 1803 (1981). See also Nielsen v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 203 M 339, 661 P2d 47, 40 St. Rep. 489 (1983), and Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992).

Pain Insufficient to Establish Percentage Disability Rating: Plaintiff suffered a compensable work-related injury, which was later aggravated in a fight at work. Conflicting medical testimony was presented as to the amount of disability before and after the fight. The hearings examiner decided that a percentage of disability could only be arrived at by conjecture based on pain. The judge approved the finding of a 25% disability to the whole man. The Supreme Court held that evidence of pain was insufficient in and of itself to establish a percentage disability rating and remanded the case for determination of that issue. Penny v. The Anaconda Co., 194 M 409, 632 P2d 1114, 38 St. Rep. 1429 (1981).

Aggregate Earnings: The Workers' Compensation Court can aggregate earnings from two separate and unrelated employments for the purpose of determining benefits payable. Catteyson

v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979), following Walker v. H. F. Johnson, Inc., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181 (1978).

Triggering of Attorney's Fee: The finding that a claimant is entitled to benefits under this section triggers 39-71-612, entitling the claimant to a reasonable attorney's fee as established by the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry) or Workers' Compensation Judge. Catteyson v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 183 M 284, 599 P2d 341, 36 St. Rep. 1443 (1979), following Walker v. H. F. Johnson, Inc., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181 (1978).

Election Doctrine: The Supreme Court has adopted the election doctrine which allows for two distinct types of partial disability benefits that a claimant may seek. A claimant may elect disability benefits under this section, or indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 (now repealed). The distinction between these two benefits is that this section bases the benefits upon actual loss of earning capacity resulting from the injury, whereas 39-71-705 (now repealed) awards compensation regardless of earnings, to compensate for possible loss of earning capacity in the future. An injured worker suffering partial disability may elect either type of benefit, but an election under either section limits the total number of partial disability weeks a worker may receive in accordance with the schedule set forth in 39-71-705 (now repealed). Therefore, a worker who suffers a fracture to the lower leg which results in a continuing loss of actual earning capacity is eligible for benefits up to the 200-week period specified in 39-71-705 (now repealed) even though he has not actually lost the leg. The duration of his partial benefits could not exceed 200 weeks. For injuries occurring to a nonspecified member of the body, 39-71-706 (now repealed) provides a means to calculate the duration of benefits for less than total nonenumerated injuries, on a proportionate basis depending on the severity of the nonenumerated injury. Thus, a worker suffering a nonenumerated back injury resulting in a 15% disability would be eligible for indemnity benefits for a maximum period of 75 weeks (15% times 500 weeks maximum). Walker v. Truck Ins. Exch., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181 (1978).

Claimant Earning More After Injury: Claimant was awarded a body of the whole injury award for an extremity injury under this section, and the award was affirmed even though claimant was earning more money after the injury. There was evidence of loss of capacity to perform as well after the injury and to compete and earn in the open market. Fermo v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 175 M 345, 574 P2d 251 (1978), followed in Hale v. Royal Logging, 1999 MT 302, 297 M 165, 990 P2d 1245, 56 St. Rep. 1217 (1999), distinguishing Dunn v. Champion Int'l Corp., 222 M 142, 720 P2d 1186, 43 St. Rep. 1124 (1986).

Use of Physician's Impairment Rating: The Workers' Compensation Court was correct in basing claimant's award on a physician's impairment rating when it was shown claimant worked at least as many hours after the injury as before, and claimant was a part-time employee both before and after the injury. Flake v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 175 M 127, 572 P2d 907 (1977).

Election of Awards: A claimant may elect, depending upon the record established before the Workers' Compensation Court, a disability benefit paying the actual loss of earning capacity or an indemnity benefit paying all possible future economic loss. The court may, however, base its award upon the evidence when the claimant makes an incorrect election. McAlear v. McKee, 171 M 462, 558 P2d 1134 (1976).

Loss of Earnings: Employee who was able to return to his former employment only with the assistance and indulgence of his employer and fellow employees was not entitled to present compensation for loss of earning ability, but was protected by order of Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry) retaining jurisdiction if there should be a subsequent loss of earning capacity. Ronshaugen v. Ramsey Eng'r Co., 166 M 214, 531 P2d 1348 (1975).

OPINIONS PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Change in Average Weekly Wage — No Effect on Existing Benefits: The amount of an existing benefit award under 39-71-701, 39-71-702, or 39-71-703 is unaffected by increase in the state's average weekly wage. 40 A.G. Op. 38 (1984).

Salary Payments to Municipal Policemen After Disabling Injury: Section 7-32-4132 requires a municipality to pay an injured policeman's full salary during the period of disability or 1 year, whichever ends first. The Workers' Compensation Fund is not liable for any wage loss benefits during that period because the municipality pays the policeman in full and he has suffered no wage loss. 37 A.G. Op. 156 (1978).

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 138 in (1)(d)(i) in first sentence after "for reasonable travel" inserted "lodging, meals, and miscellaneous" and at end substituted "pursuant to rules adopted by the department" for "only if the travel is incurred at the request of the insurer" and in second sentence near end substituted "reimbursement for state employees" for "reimbursement of travel by state employees"; inserted (1)(d)(ii) regarding rules governing reimbursement; inserted (1)(d)(iii) regarding insurer's liability for certain injuries or conditions; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Chapter 192 in (3)(g) near beginning after "medical assistance facility" inserted "or a critical access hospital". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 138, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 2001, and applies to a claim for benefits for an injury occurring on or after July 1, 2001."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 442 at beginning of first sentence of (1)(f)(iii) substituted "when" for "If", after "that" deleted "palliative or maintenance", and at end deleted "the treating physician shall first request approval from the insurer for the treatment", deleted former second and third sentences that read: "If approval is not granted, the treating physician may request approval from the department for the treatment. The department shall appoint a panel of physicians, including at least one treating physician from the area of specialty in which the injured worker is being treated, pursuant to rules that the department may adopt, to review the proposed treatment and determine its appropriateness", and inserted second sentence concerning jurisdiction of dispute over palliative or maintenance care; in (3)(b) after "(3)(g)" deleted "for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1997"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's current employment statutes constitute a complex and often confusing body of law requiring specialized skills and knowledge to interpret; and

WHEREAS, most employers in the private sector employ 10 or fewer employees and function without the assistance of personnel officers or in-house legal staff; and

WHEREAS, employment-related disputes are currently heard in many different forums, including the Board of Personnel Appeals for wage and hour issues, the Board of Labor Appeals for unemployment insurance issues, the Workers' Compensation Court for workers' compensation issues, the Commission for Human Rights for discrimination issues, and District Courts for the resolution of wrongful discharge conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the 1997 Legislature enacted House Joint Resolution No. 10, which directed the Department of Labor and Industry to convene a group of interested parties to explore, investigate, and report to the 1999 Legislature optional approaches to an integrated dispute resolution process for employment-related issues; and

WHEREAS, members of the Legislature and interest groups, including employers and employees from the private and public sectors, formed the House Joint Resolution No. 10 work group, which convened in September 1997 to begin studying the issues related to the employment dispute resolution process; and

WHEREAS, after approximately 10 meetings during the 1997 interim, the work group issued its report in November 1998, recommending that legislation be prepared for consideration by the 1999 Legislature to revise the dispute resolution process for employment-related issues."

Severability: Section 28, Ch. 442, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 31(1), Ch. 442, L. 1999, provided that this section applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to claims for injuries occurring before April 23, 1999, unless a party elects, after notification by the department of labor and industry, to remain in the contested case process.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 308 in (3)(a), after first sentence, deleted the method for determining rates that read: "Beginning January 1, 1995, the rates may be based on per diem or diagnostic-related groups. The rates established by the department pursuant to this subsection may not be less than medicaid reimbursement rates. Approved rates must be in effect for a period of 12 months from the date of approval. The department may coordinate this ratesetting function with other public agencies that have similar responsibilities. For services available in Montana, insurers are not required to pay facilities located outside Montana rates that are greater than those allowed for services delivered in Montana"; the substituted method inserted as (3)(b) through (3)(g) provided that for the year beginning July 1, 1997, rates must be the greater of 69% of the hospital's January 1, 1997, usual charge or the discount factor established by the Department that was in effect for the hospital on June 30, 1997, provided that beginning July 1, 1998, the Department shall adjust the hospital discount factors so that the rate does not exceed the annual percentage increase in the state's average weekly wage, allowed the Department to establish a fee schedule for outpatient services rendered after July 1, 1998, provided that discount factors cannot be less than the Medicaid reimbursement rates, provided that for services available in Montana, an insurer need not pay facilities located outside Montana rates that are higher than those allowed for services in Montana, and provided that for a hospital licensed as a medical assistance facility, the rate for services is the hospital's usual rate; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 310 in (2), at end, deleted "The department shall establish utilization and treatment standards for all medical services provided for under this chapter in consultation with the standing medical advisory committees provided for in 39-71-1109." Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 308, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1997, and applies to services provided on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 310, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 628 substituted (1)(a) and (1)(b) regarding provision of medical services for compensable injury for former (1)(a) that read: "After the happening of the injury and subject to the provisions of subsection (1)(d), the insurer shall furnish, without limitation as to length of time or dollar amount, reasonable services by a physician or surgeon, reasonable hospital services and medicines when needed, and such other treatment as may be approved by the department for the injuries sustained, subject to the requirements of 39-71-727"; in first sentence of (1)(d), after "injury", substituted "only if the travel is incurred at the request of the insurer" for "pursuant to rules adopted by the department"; inserted (1)(f) regarding provision of palliative or maintenance care after a worker has achieved medical stability; inserted (1)(g) regarding approval of treatment; inserted (1)(h) providing for exclusion from compensability certain medical treatment; inserted second sentence of (2) requiring that charges be usual and customary and inserted fourth sentence requiring establishment of utilization and treatment standards; at beginning of first sentence of (3) deleted "Beginning January 1, 1988", inserted second and third sentences regarding rates, and inserted sixth sentence regarding payment of services to facilities located outside Montana; at beginning of (4) deleted "Notwithstanding subsection (2), beginning January 1, 1988, through December 31, 1991, the maximum fees payable by insurers must be limited to the fee schedule established in January 1987. Notwithstanding subsection (3), beginning January 1, 1988, through December 31, 1991, the hospital rates payable by insurers must be limited to those set in January 1988. After December 31, 1991"; inserted (5) relating to payment pursuant to reimbursement agreements; inserted (6) pertaining to dispute resolution; inserted (7) regarding worker responsibility for costs; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 16, Ch. 628, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 131 in (1), near end of introductory clause after "compensation", inserted "benefits actually provided"; at end of (1)(a) inserted reference to 39-71-727; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 558 in (2) substituted provision for annually established fee schedule for medical nonhospital services, with Department having authority to require insurers to submit information to be used in establishing the schedule, for provision requiring an annual relative value fee schedule for medical, chiropractic, and paramedical services, excluding hospital services, with medical fees based on median fees billed to the state in the prior year (see 1989 MCA for text); and in (4), in first sentence before "fee schedule", deleted "relative value" and inserted last sentence relating to percentage increase in medical costs. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 574 in (1)(a) inserted "and subject to the provisions of subsection (1)(d)"; inserted (1)(d) relating to termination of benefits; and in (4) inserted last sentence relating to percentage increase in medical costs. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act] [July 1, 1991]."

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Special Session Amendment: In (4) extended through December 31, 1991, freeze on maximum fee schedule for medical, hospital, and related services scheduled to end January 1, 1990. Amendment effective July 17, 1989.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 9, Sp. L. June 1989, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 333 inserted (1)(c) requiring insurer to reimburse worker for reasonable travel expenses relating to medical treatment under rules at rate allowed for state employee travel; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 613 in five places changed "division" and "workers' compensation division" to "department"; in (2), in middle of third sentence, changed "state compensation insurance fund" to "state fund" and inserted fourth sentence requiring state fund to report fees billed in form and at times required by Department; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund (now state compensation insurance fund) or January 1, 1990.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (3) requiring Division to establish hospital rates; and inserted (4) setting caps on fees and hospital rates for the 2 years beginning January 1988.

1985 Amendment: In (1)(a) and (1)(b) in first sentence, before "insurer", deleted "employer or"; and in (2) substituted text (see 1985 Session Law) for "Fees and charges for medical, chiropractic, and paramedical services provided for in this chapter, excluding hospital services, shall be established by the workers' compensation division based on the 90th percentile of usual and customary charges of the medical specialty involved based upon the most recent 6-months data as determined in January and July of each year."

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 422, L. 1985 (section 2 of which inserted the relative fee schedule provisions of this section), provided: "It is the intention of the legislature that the workers' compensation division publish an annual fee schedule which insurers must use to pay for medical, chiropractic, and paramedical services provided for in the Workers' Compensation and Occupational Disease Acts. The fee schedule is to be modeled on the 1974 revision of the 1969 California Relative Value Studies. The rules must establish the relative unit values, groups of specialties, and the payment procedures used in the California study unless the division has information and data that will allow a reliable adaptation of the California study to current Montana practice related to the care of occupationally injured or diseased workers. The rules should also define the method the division will use to annually determine the median of billed fees."

1981 Amendment: Renumbered subsections (1) and (2) as (1)(a) and (1)(b); added (2) (see 1985 amendment note for text).

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Attorney Fee Lien Applicable to Medical Benefits Received in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Lockhart moved for an order directing the insurer to pay attorney fees out of the medical benefits owing to Lockhart under his successful workers' compensation claim. The Workers' Compensation Court denied the attorney fees on grounds that medical benefits are not benefits, but rather an imposition of liability imposed on the insurer, and that because an award of medical benefits does not entitle a claimant to receipt of money, there is no property against which an attorney fee lien can attach. The court held that when a claim has been denied and later found compensable by the court without a separate award of attorney fees, a contingent attorney fee may be computed based on medical benefits, but the amount may not be deducted from the compensation payable to the medical providers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Medical benefits are not the property of the medical providers simply because the medical providers are the actual recipients of the money, nor are medical benefits simply an obligation of the insurer. Instead, medical benefits are the property of the individual claimant, and, as such, the claimant should be allowed to pay attorney fees out of medical benefits. In the context of workers' compensation cases, attorney fee liens attach as a matter of law to all compensation, including medical benefits, upon the filing of an attorney retainer agreement with the Department of Labor and Industry. To require a claimant to pay a disproportionate amount of attorney fees from the claimant's personal resources would be unfair and contrary to the fundamental purpose of workers' compensation laws. Lockhart v. N.H. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 205, 295 M 467, 984 P2d 744, 56 St. Rep. 800 (1999), following Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Rules Including Some Treatments and Excluding Others Not Inherently Arbitrary: Synek argued that State Fund incorrectly determined that her chiropractic treatment was noncompensable maintenance rather than compensable therapeutic treatment. She also argued that in adopting rules that included payment for some treatments and excluded others, State Fund was acting in a capricious and arbitrary manner. The Supreme Court upheld the agency's decision that Synek's treatment constituted maintenance and that under the rules, maintenance was not compensable. The Supreme Court also held that the rules had been adopted pursuant to broad statutory language and were not facially or inherently arbitrary. Synek v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 272 M 246, 900 P2d 884, 52 St. Rep. 651 (1995), distinguishing Weis v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 232 M 218, 755 P2d 1385 (1988).

Insurer's Refusal to Pay for Unsupervised Exercise Reasonable: Plaintiff appealed from a Workers' Compensation Court order denying medical payments for exercise programs at an out-of-state health club and an in-state YMCA. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the insurer did not act unreasonably in refusing to pay for unsupervised exercise that did not constitute reasonable physical therapy. Chapman v. Cottrell, 259 M 329, 856 P2d 234, 50 St. Rep. 819 (1993).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Compensability of Domiciliary Care Costs — Carlson Test: Factors included in the test as to whether in-home domiciliary services are compensable, as set out in Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607 (1985), are: (1) the employer knows of the employee's need for medical services at home resulting from the industrial accident; (2) the preponderance of credible medical evidence demonstrates that home nursing care is necessary as a result of accident and describes with a reasonable degree of particularity the nature and extent of duties to be performed by family members; (3) services are to be performed under the direction of a physician; (4) services are of a type normally rendered by trained attendants and beyond the scope of normal household duties; and (5) there is a means to determine with reasonable certainty the approximate value of the services performed. In this case, claimant was able to return to work, and even though claimant may have suffered a permanent total disability, that fact did not automatically put the employer on notice that domiciliary care was required. Evidence required to prove permanent total disability is different from that required to justify domiciliary care. Absent evidence that claimant met any of the Carlson test criteria, denial of compensation for domiciliary care was proper. Mennis v. Anderson Steel Supply., 255 M 180, 841 P2d 528, 49 St. Rep. 961 (1992), distinguishing Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607 (1985), Larson v. Squire Shops, Inc., 228 M 377, 742 P2d 1003 (1987), and Hilbig v. Central Glass Co., 238 M 375, 777 P2d 1296 (1989).

Authorization Required for Change in Treating Physician: Under ARM 24.29.1403 (repealed 1993), claimant was not entitled to medical benefits for diagnostic work done on her back by four specialists because she neither requested nor obtained authorization from the insurer for her visits to the specialists. The rule required authorization from the insurer for changing a worker's treating physician or referring a worker to a medical specialist. Weaver v. Buttrey Food & Drug, 255 M 90, 841 P2d 476, 49 St. Rep. 897 (1992), distinguishing Chapman v. Research Cottrell, 248 M 353, 811 P2d 1283 (1991).

Future Liability to Continue Absent Intervening Injury: Evidence showed that Lapp continued to suffer neck pain after a 1979 industrial accident, and the insurer offered no evidence that Lapp suffered any job-related injury after reaching maximum healing. The fact that a claimant has reached maximum medical healing does not relieve an insurer from future liability for medical and compensatory benefits when there is no new intervening cause. Lapp v. Transp. Ins. Co., 254 M 237, 836 P2d 602, 49 St. Rep. 750 (1992).

Cutoff Date on Domiciliary Care Benefits — Remand for Determination of Further Benefits: When it was not clear why the Workers' Compensation Court placed a cutoff date on benefits payable for domiciliary care, the Supreme Court remanded for additional proceedings necessary to determine the extent of benefits allowed to claimant after the cutoff date. Hilbig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 375, 777 P2d 1296, 46 St. Rep. 1347 (1989).

Domiciliary Care Benefits Limited to Date of Employer's Knowledge of Need: The Workers' Compensation Court correctly established the date that an employer first knew of the need or demand for domiciliary care as the date that a pretrial conference was held (in which the claimant first requested care) because the record showed that medical reports prior to that date did not recommend home health care. Hilbig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 375, 777 P2d 1296, 46 St. Rep. 1347 (1989), distinguishing Larson v. Squire Shops, Inc., 228 M 377, 742 P2d 1003, 44 St. Rep. 1612 (1987).

Claimant's Liability for Initial Medical Costs: Claimant argued that because her claim was initially denied, she lacked medical benefits to make affordable the necessary testing to confirm the presence of an injury. However, under this section, the claimant bears the initial liability for medical expenses. Ballard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 235 M 447, 767 P2d 1327, 46 St. Rep. 128 (1989).

Severity of Injury as Constructive Notice of Necessity of Domiciliary Care: An employer may be put on notice of an employee's need for domiciliary medical services because of the severity of the injury. Larson v. Squire Shops, Inc., 228 M 377, 742 P2d 1003, 44 St. Rep. 1612 (1987).

Compensable Subsequent Injury — Benefits Receivable: When medical testimony showed a causal connection between an original injury and surgery performed 3 years later due to a subsequent injury, claimant was entitled to receive benefits payable because of medical treatment necessitated by the original injury, including any medical benefits reserved. Rightnour v. Kare-Mor, Inc., 225 M 187, 732 P2d 829, 44 St. Rep. 141 (1987), order and judgment of the Workers' Compensation Court after final settlement was reopened affirmed in Rightnour v. Intermtn. Ins. Co., 236 M 108, 768 P2d 871, 46 St. Rep. 220 (1989), and followed in Guild v. Rockwood Ins. Co., 229 M 466, 747 P2d 217, 44 St. Rep. 2139 (1987).

Payment for Medical Expenses Not Required: This statute is not authority for ordering workers' compensation insurer to pay claimant for medical expenses already paid by other health care providers. The statute requires the insurer to furnish reasonable services, medicine, and treatment. To order the insurer to pay claimant for medical expenses already paid is not furnishing services, nor is it reasonable. Shepard v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 219 M 124, 710 P2d 1355, 42 St. Rep. 1892 (1985).

Penalty — Medical Payments Treated as Compensation Benefits: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that it could not assess a penalty for unreasonable delay in payment of medical expenses because medical expenses are not "compensation benefits" within the meaning of the penalty statute. The Supreme Court reversed and held that for purposes of assessing a penalty for wrongful refusal or delay in payment, medical payments should be treated as a compensation benefit. It was irrelevant that payments were made directly to the medical providers and not to the claimant herself. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Unnecessary Out-of-Pocket Expenses of Nonclaimant Denied: The Workers' Compensation Court found that out-of-pocket expenses incurred by claimant's mother during claimant's hospital stay were not medically necessary and denied request for reimbursement. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that substantial evidence supported the verdict, and that the Supreme Court may not set aside the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court unless the findings are clearly erroneous. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Domiciliary Care as Medical Expense — Jurisdiction: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that domiciliary care provided by claimant's mother was necessary as a medical expense; however, the court ruled that it did not have jurisdiction to set a value on the services because they constituted "other treatment" that must be approved by the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry). The Supreme Court reversed and held that once the Workers' Compensation Court has acquired jurisdiction of a dispute under the Workers' Compensation Act, it has jurisdiction to try and decide all of the issues that arise between the parties, and in this case the Workers' Compensation Court should have fixed a dollar amount on the domiciliary care. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985), affirmed in Larson v. Squire Shops, Inc., 228 M 377, 742 P2d 1003, 44 St. Rep. 1612 (1987).

Prior Authorization to Change Physicians: A rule adopted by the Division of Workers' Compensation (now Department of Labor and Industry), under 39-71-703, requiring prior authorization to change physicians, was a valid rule, and an employer cannot be charged for the services of an unauthorized second doctor. However, the Workers' Compensation Court must consider the medical report and diagnosis of the second doctor. (See 1985 amendment note to this section. The amendment deleted employer's liability for treatment.) Garland v. The Anaconda Co., 177 M 240, 581 P2d 431 (1978). See also Linton v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 122, 749 P2d 55, 45 St. Rep. 68 (1988).

Compensation for Psychological Treatment: An insurer was ordered to pay the bill of a psychiatrist who treated a claimant for a continuing psychological problem aggravated by a compensable injury even though treatment was not approved by the insurer, employer, or the Division (now Department of Labor and Industry), because such services were "reasonable". A lump-sum settlement was also awarded to compensate claimant for his injuries. Schumacher v. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 175 M 411, 574 P2d 987, 34 St. Rep. 1112 (1977).

Salary Payments to Municipal Policemen After Disabling Injury: Section 7-32-4132 requires a municipality to pay an injured policeman's full salary during the period of disability or 1 year, whichever ends first. The Workers' Compensation Fund is not liable for any wage loss benefits during that period because the municipality pays the policeman in full and he has suffered no wage loss. 37 A.G. Op. 156 (1978).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Whole Person Injury — Maximum Benefits Payable: Although claimant was eligible for 280 weeks of benefits for loss of use of one arm at or near the shoulder, it was not error to award 500 weeks of permanent partial disability benefits because substantial credible evidence supported the finding that the injury was not limited to the arm and shoulder area, but affected the whole person. Symptoms included chronic pain and weakness, permanent soft tissue injuries, bicipital tendinitis, rotator cuff tendinitis, subacromial bursitis, and atrophy in the infraspinatus, teres minor, upper trapezius, and pectoralis. Anderson v. Hammer, 252 M 73, 826 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 165 (1992), distinguishing Obie v. Obie Signs, Inc., 143 M 1, 386 P2d 68 (1963).

Partially Permanently Disabled — Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Findings: The Supreme Court will not overturn the findings of fact of the Workers' Compensation Court if there is substantial credible evidence to support them in the record. Stuker v. Stuker Ranch, 251 M 96, 822 P2d 105, 48 St. Rep. 1071 (1991), followed in Burglund v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 279 M 298, 927 P2d 1006, 53 St. Rep. 1158 (1996), awarding benefits for possible loss of future earnings.

Temporary Total Disability for Paralysis and Head Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court erred in finding that a hotel manager was permanently partially disabled from spinal and head injuries that resulted in total lower body paralysis and diminished intellectual capacity. In reversing the decision, the Supreme Court held that the defendant had failed to present conclusive proof, required under this section (now repealed), that the hotel manager was ready or able to work in other occupations at the time of trial. The Supreme Court directed the Workers'

Compensation Court to enter a finding holding the manager to be permanently totally disabled. Parker v. Glacier Park, Inc., 249 M 225, 815 P2d 583 48 St. Rep. 687 (1991).

Workers' Compensation Court — Proper Following of Instructions on Remand: The defendant insurance company argued that the Workers' Compensation Court had exceeded its jurisdiction when on remand it increased the claimant's 35% permanent partial disability award to 60%. The insurance company alleged that the lower court was instructed to specify the grounds of its original award of 35% and that it was error for it to increase the award to 60%. The Supreme Court held that it had clearly stated when remanding the case that the Workers' Compensation Court was to redetermine the disability award, that the lower court had properly done so, and that the increase was supported by the evidence. Carroll v. CNA Ins. Co., 245 M 495, 802 P2d 618, 47 St. Rep. 2218 (1990).

All Statutory Factors Not Discussed in Determining Disability Award: The Workers' Compensation Court discussed only preinjury and postinjury earnings in determining its permanent partial disability award. The Supreme Court ruled that it was error to not specifically discuss all statutory factors and remanded the case for a redetermination of benefits. Carroll v. CNA Ins. Co., 240 M 151, 783 P2d 387, 46 St. Rep. 2014 (1989).

Injury to Finger and Back — Only Finger Injury Affecting Earning Capacity: A claimant elected to proceed under 39-71-703, which compensates a claimant for actual diminution in earning capacity. Evidence established that loss of earning capacity resulted from his finger injury and the resulting inability to effectively use his hand, but did not establish loss of earning capacity from his back injury. The lower court applied this section in determining compensation for loss of or injury to one hand and properly limited benefits to 200 weeks. Sterns v. Dudley, 228 M 45, 741 P2d 407, 44 St. Rep. 1329 (1987).

Back Condition and Ulcerative Proctitis Not Causally Related to Compensable Knee Injury: The Workers' Compensation Court found that appellant failed to prove that his ulcerative proctitis and alleged back condition were caused or aggravated by his compensable knee injury. There was substantial evidence in the record to support this finding. The Supreme Court affirmed the Workers' Compensation Court finding that appellant was entitled to 200 weeks permanent partial disability pursuant to 39-71-705 (now repealed) and not 500 weeks under 39-71-703. Byrd v. Ramsey Eng'r, 217 M 18, 701 P2d 1385, 42 St. Rep. 991 (1985).

Diminished Earning Capacity Benefits Applicable to Lost Ability to Compete — Limiting Factors Inapplicable: Claimant fractured his elbow in an industrial accident. As a result of the injury it was necessary for a surgeon to implant a prosthesis in the elbow. Claimant brought an action under 39-71-703 seeking workers' compensation benefits for lost earning capacity in lieu of indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed). The Workers' Compensation Court found that although claimant was earning more at the time he filed his claim than at the time of his injury, he could proceed under 39-71-703 because his ability to compete in the open labor market was impaired. The court then applied the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) to its award. Claimant appealed, contending the limiting factors were inapplicable. The Supreme Court held that claimant had established sufficient factual basis to elect compensation under 39-71-703 for loss of earning capacity even though he was performing the same job and earning more. The Supreme Court also held that under 39-71-709 (now repealed), the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) should be applied only if a claimant has withdrawn his election to proceed under 39-71-703 and claims indemnity benefits. The case was remanded for proper computation of compensation. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 198 M 105, 643 P2d 1192, 39 St. Rep. 796 (1982).

Reclassification — Pleading Requirement — Best Interests: Plaintiff was injured when a refrigerator he was lifting fell and smashed his hand and wrist. Plaintiff received temporary total benefits from December 7, 1976, until terminated on May 2, 1979. Plaintiff had heart surgery in 1977. In 1979 defendant terminated plaintiff's benefits claiming that he had no permanent disability from the accident and that his medical problems were nonindustrially related. The Workers' Compensation Court found that plaintiff's benefits were improperly terminated. Defendant alleged that because plaintiff failed to specifically plead for reclassification from temporary total disability to permanent partial disability, the Workers' Compensation Court could not reclassify him and award a lump-sum payment. The Supreme Court held that it was in the best interest of the plaintiff and judicial economy to resolve the entire matter. The Supreme Court declined to second-guess the Workers' Compensation Court's ruling as to the effect to be given to medical impairment ratings. Novak v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 195 M 219, 638 P2d 390, 38 St. Rep. 1803 (1981).

Calculation of Award for Whole Body Injury: A claimant who suffered a back injury and could not find steady employment was given medical impairment ratings of 15%, 15%, and 33% by three physicians, was given a 25% disability award (125 weeks) by the Workers' Compensation Court, received a proper award supported by the evidence, and was not entitled to 500 weeks of wage loss permanent partial disability in that the Legislature intended that for lesser degrees of partial disability shorter periods of compensation should be awarded. Head v. Missoula Serv. Co., 181 M 129, 592 P2d 507 (1979).

Election of Remedies: An election exists between the awards provided in 39-71-703 and this section through 39-71-708 even though an injury falls within a specific provision of this section through 39-71-708. Walker v. Truck Ins. Exch., 180 M 405, 591 P2d 181, 35 St. Rep. 1667 (1978).

Permanent Versus Partial Disability: The limitations on recovery under the specific injury statutes this section through 39-71-708 apply only to permanent partial disability and do not apply to or limit the amount of recovery for permanent total disability under 39-71-702. Jensen v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191, 35 St. Rep. 1066 (1978).

Permanent Total Disability for Extremity Injuries: A claimant who suffers an injury to an extremity is not limited to the benefits set forth in this section, if it is determined the claimant is permanently totally disabled from the injury. Jensen v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191 (1978).

Determination of Indemnity Award — Impairment Ratings: Many factors in addition to medical impairment rating may be properly considered in determining a claimant's disability, and such ratings do not limit compensation awards in all cases. Impairment ratings by physicians are but one item of evidence, and the Workers' Compensation Court had sufficient evidence to justify an award of 90% permanent partial disability of the hand even though the medical impairment ratings were 55% and 66%. Ramsey v. Argonaut NW. Ins. Co., 174 M 438, 571 P2d 384 (1977).

Present Earnings Irrelevant — Sufficient Evidence: An indemnity award is to compensate for possible loss of earning capacity in the future without regard to present earnings, and in this case there was sufficient evidence to justify the Workers' Compensation Court's award of 180 weeks of compensation. Ramsey v. Argonaut NW. Ins. Co., 174 M 438, 571 P2d 384 (1977).

Sufficiency of Evidence to Support Rating: Testimony by a physician indicating "perhaps a slight permanent partial impairment of function" does not support a fixed percentage rating at any figure, and it was error to convert such testimony into a percentage disability rating. Crittendon v. Butte, 171 M 470, 559 P2d 816 (1977).

Partial Loss or Loss of Use:

The District Court clearly erred in allowing a claimant 500 weeks of compensation for an injury to one eye since compensation had to be limited to 140 weeks as prescribed in this section for the total loss of an eye or some proportionate amount less. Johnson v. Indus. Accident Bd., 157 M 221, 483 P2d 918 (1971).

For permanent partial loss or loss of use of member a claimant may be granted as compensation the full amount allowable under this section that would result if the member was permanently lost or a proportionately less amount, but in no event may a claimant be granted a greater amount of compensation than that allowed for the loss of the entire member. Obie v. Obie Signs, Inc., 143 M 1, 386 P2d 68 (1963).

Indemnity Benefits: The words "indemnity benefits" coupled with "proportionate loss" anticipate estimated loss of future earning capacity irrespective of loss of wages and economic deprivation suffered by claimant. Jones v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 145 M 326, 400 P2d 888 (1965).

Proof of Additional Injuries:

This section does not limit recovery where there is evidence of subsequent accident resulting in additional injuries. Newman v. Kamp, 140 M 487, 374 P2d 100 (1962).

Where claimant had been granted compensation under this section for the loss of his entire hand at the wrist and claimant attempted to prove additional injury through his own testimony to the effect that, since his hand had healed, he had suffered from pains in his arm and shoulder, such testimony did not constitute a preponderance which would overturn the findings of the Board and the District Court based on objective credible evidence and there was no abuse of discretion in denying compensation for other injuries in addition to those resulting from the amputation. Becktold v. Indus. Accident Bd., 137 M 119, 350 P2d 383 (1960).

Act Does Not Provide Measure of Damages in Tort Action: In action by employee for negligence of employer who had not elected to be bound by the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act), the compensation provided by the Act is not to be taken as a yardstick to measure plaintiff's damages, since the compensation is not based upon a cause of action for tort and omits entirely the element of pain and suffering. Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 M 603, 69 P2d 764 (1937).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Temporary Total Benefits Improperly Characterized as Permanent Partial — Court Estopped From Denying Liability: State Fund characterized benefits as permanent partial disability payments deductible from claimant's eventual permanent disability award because of wages claimant received during the period in question. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the payments could not have been permanent partial disability payments because: (1) claimant had not reached maximum healing; and (2) as a proprietor or corporate officer, claimant's injury did not result in a total loss of wages. Given these circumstances, State Fund was properly estopped from denying liability for temporary total disability benefits. Ryles v. Springhill Ranch Eggs, 247 M 276, 806 P2d 525, 48 St. Rep. 196 (1991).

Thirty Percent Impairment Rating Affirmed — Mathematical Uncertainty: At the time of injury, claimant's reported earnings were similar to the amount reflected in his business tax returns. Recognizing that mathematical certainty was virtually impossible to find, the award of benefits based on a 30% impairment was appropriate. Ryles v. Springhill Ranch Eggs, 247 M 276, 806 P2d 525, 48 St. Rep. 196 (1991).

Likelihood of Eventual Fifty Percent Decrease in Earning Capacity — Sufficient Evidence: The workers' compensation claimant was a sales representative who drove over 750 miles a week. He earned $68,000 in 1987, 2 years after a traffic accident that exacerbated an existing neck injury from which he continued to suffer pain and increasing deterioration without responding to treatment. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to award the claimant 250 weeks of permanent partial disability benefits because the deterioration would likely require a change in employment that would result in a 50% decrease in his earning capacity. Hartman v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins., 236 M 141, 768 P2d 1380, 46 St. Rep. 248 (1989).

Diminished Earning Capacity Benefits Applicable to Lost Ability to Compete — Limiting Factors Inapplicable: Claimant fractured his elbow in an industrial accident. As a result of the injury it was necessary for a surgeon to implant a prosthesis in the elbow. Claimant brought an action under 39-71-703 seeking workers' compensation benefits for lost earning capacity in lieu of indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed). The Workers' Compensation Court found that although claimant was earning more at the time he filed his claim than at the time of his injury, he could proceed under 39-71-703 because his ability to compete in the open labor market was impaired. The court then applied the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) to its award. Claimant appealed, contending the limiting factors were inapplicable. The Supreme Court held that claimant had established sufficient factual basis to elect compensation under 39-71-703 for loss of earning capacity even though he was performing the same job and earning more. The Supreme Court also held that under 39-71-709 (now repealed), the limiting factors of 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) should be applied only if a claimant has withdrawn his election to proceed under 39-71-703 and claims indemnity benefits. The case was remanded for proper computation of compensation. Hafer v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 198 M 105, 643 P2d 1192, 39 St. Rep. 796 (1982).

Permanent Pain as Factor in Disability Award: Plaintiff, employed as a boilerman, severely injured his left arm in a fall onto a catwalk in 1977. He suffers from recurrent pain, and any prolonged activity causes him severe, debilitating pain in his left arm. The insurance carrier contended that although the disability is permanent, plaintiff was not entitled to 100% disability in the arm because he had some use of it. The Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court that the fact that the claimant can perform a few odd jobs for short periods of time does not preclude a finding that claimant is totally and permanently disabled in the arm. This is especially true where, as here, the evidence shows the claimant must work with a substantial degree of pain. Cleveland v. Cyprus Indus. Minerals, 196 M 15, 636 P2d 1386, 38 St. Rep. 2086 (1981).

Permanent Versus Partial Disability: The limitations on recovery under the specific injury statutes 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) apply only to permanent partial disability and do not apply to or limit the amount of recovery for permanent total disability under 39-71-702. Jensen v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191, 35 St. Rep. 1066 (1978).

Present Earnings Irrelevant — Sufficient Evidence: An indemnity award is to compensate for possible loss of earning capacity in the future without regard to present earnings, and in this case there was sufficient evidence to justify the Workers' Compensation Court's award of 180 weeks of compensation. Ramsey v. Argonaut NW. Ins. Co., 174 M 438, 571 P2d 384 (1977).

Election of Awards: A claimant may elect, depending upon the record established before the Workers' Compensation Court, a disability benefit paying the actual loss of earning capacity or an indemnity benefit paying all possible future economic loss. The court may, however, base its award upon the evidence when the claimant makes an incorrect election. McAlear v. McKee, 171 M 462, 558 P2d 1134 (1976).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Recovery Limited to Specific Injury Statute: Workers' Compensation Court decided that the claimant was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits and limited his recovery to benefits under this section and to such temporary total disability compensation benefits as he had received while convalescing. The decision was upheld since credible and substantial evidence appeared in the record in support of the Workers' Compensation Court. McGee v. Bechtel Corp., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156, 36 St. Rep. 220 (1979).

Permanent Versus Partial Disability: The limitations on recovery under the specific injury statutes 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) apply only to permanent partial disability and do not apply to or limit the amount of recovery for permanent total disability under 39-71-702. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 555 at beginning of (1) substituted "Injured workers who suffer" for "The department may award proper and equitable benefits for" and near middle, after "disfigurement", inserted "may be entitled to benefits"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: In (1), in two places before "benefits", deleted reference to "indemnity" and at end deleted "39-71-705, 39-71-706, or 39-71-707" and inserted "39-71-703"; and in (2), after "hospital services", changed "and" to "or".

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

All Statutory Factors Not Discussed in Determining Disability Award: The Workers' Compensation Court discussed only preinjury and postinjury earnings in determining its permanent partial disability award. The Supreme Court ruled that it was error to not specifically discuss all statutory factors and remanded the case for a redetermination of benefits. Carroll v. CNA Ins. Co., 240 M 151, 783 P2d 387, 46 St. Rep. 2014 (1989).

Permanent Versus Partial Disability: The limitations on recovery under the specific injury statutes 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 (39-71-705 through 39-71-707 now repealed) apply only to permanent partial disability and do not apply to or limit the amount of recovery for permanent total disability under 39-71-702. 1995 Amendments: Chapter 243 in (1), near middle of first sentence after "receive", inserted "or is receiving" and after "social security" inserted "retirement benefits or retirement benefits from a system that is an alternative to social security" and in second sentence substituted "payment of permanent partial disability benefits other than the impairment award" for "payment of wage supplement"; in (2), near beginning, inserted reference to eligibility under subsection (1) and after "to receive" deleted "social security"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 516 in second sentence of (1), after "for payment of", deleted "wage supplement".

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Saving Clause: Section 25, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1987 Amendment: In (1) substituted language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for "If a claimant is receiving total disability compensation benefits and the claimant receives retirement social security benefits or disability social security benefits paid to the claimant are converted by law to retirement benefits, the claimant is considered to be retired and no longer in the open labor market. When the claimant is considered retired, the liability of the insurer is ended for payment of such compensation benefits. This section does not apply to permanent partial disability benefits. Medical benefits are expressly reserved to the claimant"; and inserted (2) (see 1987 Session Law for text).

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Workers' Compensation Court Error in Amending Termination of Benefits Statute That Legislature Had Not Amended: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Legislature's failure to amend this section to disallow retired claimants from receiving partial disability benefits, in light of the subsequent amendment of 39-71-703, was an obvious oversight. The court concluded, without any reference to legislative history, that it was not the Legislature's intent to allow such benefits. However, by its decision, the court amended the termination of benefits statute that the Legislature either failed or declined to amend and, in the process, erred by inserting into the statute what had been omitted. The Supreme Court strictly construed the statutory language, concluding that this section (1987) did not provide for termination of benefits that were awarded pursuant to 39-71-703 (1991) when claimant retired. The case was remanded for a determination of the duration over which claimant was entitled to permanent partial disability benefits. Russette v. Chippewa Cree Housing Authority, 265 M 90, 874 P2d 1217, 51 St. Rep. 414 (1994).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Lump-Sum Advance Properly Denied — No Abuse of Discretion: Claimant, who is totally disabled, petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a lump-sum advance against permanent partial disability benefits that would otherwise be available to her at age 65. The court concluded that claimant did not establish by a preponderance of credible evidence that the lump-sum advance requested was in her best interest and denied the petition. The Supreme Court affirmed. The best interests of the claimant, the claimant's family, and the general public are the primary factors to be considered when evaluating lump-sum settlements. For industrial accident claims, periodic payments should be the rule and lump-sum settlements should be the exception. Workers' Compensation Court decisions denying lump-sum settlements will not be interfered with on appeal unless there is an abuse of discretion. Sullivan v. Aetna Life & Cas., 271 M 12, 894 P2d 278, 52 St. Rep. 296 (1995).

Discount to Present Value Applicable Only to Permanent Total Disability Payments: The discount to present value provided for in 39-71-741 applies only to permanent total disability payments. The discount does not apply to permanent partial disability payments even though the claimant is eligible for permanent partial payments because of his status as a permanently totally disabled claimant who has reached the age of 65 and has retired. Franck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 241 M 486, 787 P2d 1238, 47 St. Rep. 472 (1990).

Conversion of Temporary Total to Permanent Partial Benefits at Age Sixty-Five: Liberal construction of this section resulted in the conclusion that claimant was entitled to conversion of temporary total disability benefits to permanent partial benefits upon reaching age 65. Strict interpretation would have resulted in an absurdity whereby a worker past age 65 could recover compensation if partially disabled but not if totally disabled. Hunter v. Gibson Prod. of Billings Heights, 224 M 481, 730 P2d 1139, 43 St. Rep. 2352 (1986). (Annotator's note: The 1987 Legislature amended 39-71-710 by removing the sentence that stated the section did not apply to permanent partial disability benefits and by clarifying insurer liability for temporary total disability benefits for claimants eligible for social security retirement benefits.)

Early Retirement as Voluntary: Claimant seeking additional benefits argued that his retirement was not voluntary because the employer offered the plan to its employees rather than the plan being inspired by the claimant himself and that because the employer encouraged early retirement, subtle pressure was exerted. The Workers' Compensation Court denied benefits because claimant could have continued working, was adequately performing his duties, and was under no threat of being fired. The Supreme Court affirmed that retirement was voluntary and uncoerced, noting that retirement was offered to all employees with no special focus on claimant and that claimant had received $12,180 as consideration for his early retirement. 1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 inserted (1)(d) concerning objective medical findings; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: In (2), both before and after "a medical doctor or from", inserted "an evaluator who is", substituted "injury falls within the scope of chiropractic practice" for "claimant's treating physician is a chiropractor", and at end substituted "the mediation procedure in part 24 of this chapter" for "the procedure in subsection (3)"; deleted former (3) that set forth a procedure for making impairment ratings and reporting to the claimant, insurer, and Department and that stated when payment of impairment awards must begin (see 1989 MCA for text); in (3), at beginning, deleted provision that Department appoint impairment evaluators to render ratings and that it adopt rules on evaluator qualifications and exam locations and at end deleted provision allowing Department to seek nominations from Board of Medical Examiners and Board of Chiropractors for evaluators licensed under Title 37, ch. 12; deleted former (5) that stated that the cost of impairment evaluations was assessed to the insurer except that the cost was assessed to the claimant if he requested the evaluation; in (4), at beginning, deleted sentence providing that a party could dispute a final impairment rating by filing a petition with the Workers' Compensation Court within 15 days after the evaluator mailed the report and after "39-71-605" deleted "or to mandatory mediation"; and deleted former (7) that created a rebuttable presumption that an impairment rating was correct. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 558, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to injuries that occur on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: Chapter 161 at end of first sentence of (2) substituted "a medical doctor or from a chiropractor if the claimant's treating physician is a chiropractor" for "a physician of the party's choice"; and in third sentence of (4) inserted "except if the claimant's treating physician is a chiropractor, the evaluator may be a chiropractor who is certified as an evaluator under chapter 12" and at end of fourth sentence inserted "for evaluators licensed under Title 37, chapter 3, and from the board of chiropractors for evaluators licensed under Title 37, chapter 12".

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 161, L. 1989, provided: "This bill authorizes the board of chiropractors to adopt a rule for the certification of impairment evaluators within their profession. The board should consider the applicant's experience in treating industrial accidents and any academic training he may have in using the impairment rating guides recognized by the division of workers' compensation."

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

Administrative Rules

ARM 24.29.1415 Impairment rating dispute procedure.

Case Notes

Judge May Determine Percentage Impairment Rating: This section's requirement that "an impairment rating . . . must be expressed as a percentage" does not expressly state who must translate an impairment evaluation into a percentage and does not specifically require that the impairment evaluator be the person translating an impairment evaluation into a percentage. The section's statement that "an impairment rating . . . is a purely medical determination and must be determined by an impairment evaluator" cannot be used to import into the requirement that an impairment rating be expressed as a percentage and that it is the impairment evaluator who must do so. To say that the doctor must determine a percentage impairment rating is unreasonable because this section also requires the doctor to base the impairment rating on the current edition of the Guides to the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment published by the AMA, and the guides specifically state that there is no empiric evidence supporting assigning a percentage figure to an impairment rating, that a percentage assignment cannot be done reliably, and that use of a percentage implies a certainty that does not exist. In order to promote justice, the court will reject an interpretation leading to an unreasonable result in favor of an interpretation that produces a reasonable result. The statute allows the Workers' Compensation Judge to translate the impairment evaluator's determination into a percentage rating. This furthers the policy of the legislation as a whole and the legislative intent of compensating workers for physical injuries. S.L.H. v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 2000 MT 362, 303 M 364, 15 P3d 948, 57 St. Rep. 1543 (2000).

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 121 near end of (4)(c) inserted "for any reason except for the worker's incarceration as provided for in 39-71-744, resignation, or termination for disciplinary reasons caused by a violation of the employer's policies that provide for termination of employment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 22, 2001.

Chapter 292 in (1) at beginning inserted "Subject to the provisions of subsection (6)"; in (4) at beginning inserted exception clause; inserted (6) outlining when injured worker with physical restriction who has not reached maximum healing may return to modified or alternative position with different employer at same or lower wage rate; inserted (7) requiring time-of-injury employer or different employer to pay expenses related to modified or alternative position and prohibiting deduction from or charge to injured employee's wages; inserted (8) providing that in wages dispute, employer at time of injury is primary employer; inserted (9) authorizing injured worker to refuse modified or alternative position without penalty and requiring written notice to employee of right of refusal. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 292, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 2001, and applies to a claim for benefits for an injury occurring on or after July 1, 2001."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 276 inserted (4), (4)(a), (4)(b), and first sentence in (c) providing circumstances under which a worker is not eligible for temporary partial or temporary total disability benefits; and in second sentence of (4)(c), after "modified", inserted "or alternative". Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

Severability: Section 32, Ch. 276, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 34(2), Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "[Sections 7, 12 through 14 [section 13 is 39-71-712] and 29] are effective July 1, 1997, and apply to claims for injuries occurring on or after [the effective dates of sections 7, 12 through 14 and 29]."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (3) inserted second sentence concerning extension of payments; and substituted (5) concerning not crediting temporary partial disability award against permanent partial disability award or settlement under 39-71-703 for "Temporary partial disability may not be considered an element of permanent partial disability and may not be credited against any permanent impairment or any permanent partial disability award or settlement achieved after the injured worker reaches maximum healing." Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: In (1)(a), in first sentence near middle after "deceased", deleted "as the case may be", at end deleted "but the period during which the death benefit is paid shall be reduced by the period during or for which compensation was paid for the injury", and inserted last sentence concerning death benefits; inserted (1)(b) concerning recovery of overpayments and lump-sum payments; in (2), at end of second sentence, inserted "at the time of injury" and near beginning of third sentence changed "compensation for death" to "compensation benefit"; in (3), at end of second sentence, inserted "at the time of injury"; in (5), in second sentence after "paid to a", substituted remainder of subsection establishing payment period for death benefits to spouse and then to other beneficiaries for "widow or widower for life or until remarriage, and in the event of remarriage, 2 years' benefits must be paid in a lump sum to the widow or widower"; inserted (7) precluding cost-of-living adjustments; inserted (8) setting caps on death benefits for 1987 biennium; and made minor changes in phraseology.
Uncodified Provision: Section 92-704.2, R.C.M. 1947, was not codified in the MCA because it was a temporary provision no longer effective when the MCA became effective.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Cap on Benefits Payments as Temporary — Statutory Rate at Time of Injury Following Termination of Cap: The 1987 Legislature placed an arbitrary cap on the benefits payable to injured workers, as an exception to the regular benefit rate provided in 39-71-701(3)(1987). The Supreme Court construed the cap according to standard rules of statutory construction and held that according to the plain meaning of the words used, 39-71-701 was clear and unambiguous in establishing a temporary rather than permanent cap on benefit payments. Following expiration of the benefit cap on June 30, 1991, the maximum benefit rate for workers is set at the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 516, 885 P2d 428, 51 St. Rep. 1145 (1994) (Murer II), clarified in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III), that the 1987 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 1, 1987, and June 30, 1989, and expired on June 30, 1989; that the 1989 temporary cap applies to injuries that occurred between July 17, 1989, and June 30, 1991, and expired on June 30, 1991; and that the 1989 temporary cap cannot be applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to July 17, 1989.

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Exclusion of Periods of Forced Idleness From Calculation of Benefits: The Supreme Court reversed an award of survivorship benefits that was based on calculations including periods of forced idleness that resulted from equipment failures, finding that to include such periods unfairly penalized decedent. Sandahl v. James A. Slack, Inc., 225 M 208, 732 P2d 831, 44 St. Rep. 174 (1987).

Law at Time of Injury to Govern: Benefits payable for injury sustained on January 8, 1974, are governed by section 92-704.2, R.C.M. 1947. The Workers' Compensation Court did not err in finding the Division of Workers' Compensation (now State Fund) liable for benefits when the injury occurred within the time frame of that section although the resulting death occurred outside the time frame. The statutes in effect on the date of the injury are controlling. There is no merit to the Division's (now State Fund's) argument that it was denied due process as to the effect of section 92-704.2, R.C.M. 1947. Young Motor Co. v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 219 M 1, 710 P2d 58, 42 St. Rep. 1796 (1985).

Decedent's Spouse's Rights — Law at Time of Injury as Governing: Employee was killed in 1973. Insurer began paying benefits to his wife, and insurer terminated benefits following her remarriage. The Legislature enacted, 2 weeks after employee's death, this section's provision that in the event of the widow's remarriage, 2 years' benefits must be paid in a lump sum. The widow was not entitled to a lump-sum payment under this provision as it was not in effect on the date of employee's fatal injury. Benefits are determined by the law in effect on the date of an employee's injury. Iverson v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 198 M 340, 645 P2d 1366, 39 St. Rep. 1040 (1982). See also Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986).

Standard of Review in Workers' Compensation Cases — Conflicting Evidence: Conflicting evidence was given in this case claiming death benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act. One set of facts showed that death was caused by strenuous physical activity on the job prior to decedent's death, and the other testimony showed that decedent did nothing strenuous or unusual and that his activities on the job had no causal relationship to his death. The Workers' Compensation Court found the latter testimony more credible and entered findings accordingly. Where findings are based on conflicting evidence, the reviewing court's function is confined to determining whether there is substantial evidence supporting such findings. Following Jensen v. Zook Bros. Constr. Co., 178 M 59, 582 P2d 1191 (1978), substantial evidence supporting the findings existed here. It is not the court's function to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to support contrary findings. Stamatis v. Bechtel Power Corp., 184 M 64, 601 P2d 403, 36 St. Rep. 1866 (1979).

Lump-Sum Disability Payments: The court erred in awarding a lump-sum disability payment to the widow of a claimant who made no election to receive an indemnity payment prior to his death and who had no determination made that his healing period had ended since no compensation accrued to the claimant that remained unpaid. Hendricks v. The Anaconda Co., 173 M 59, 566 P2d 70 (1977).

"Proximate Cause" Defined: "Proximate cause" as used in statute means that cause which is natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new and independent cause produces death, without which it would not have occurred. It does not mean that injury must be sole cause of death but that injury must be substantial contributing cause in sense that death would not have occurred but for injuries. Head injury received in compensable industrial accident occurring more than 2 years previous to death was not proximate cause of death in view of evidence that deceased drank to excess before and after accident, that immediate cause of death was suffocation from vomit after drinking bout, and that even if deceased had taken six Nembutal tablets given on prescription of doctor to relieve headaches, it could not have caused or contributed to death. Breen v. Indus. Accident Bd., 150 M 463, 436 P2d 701 (1968), followed in Nave v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 54, 835 P2d 706, 49 St. Rep. 620 (1992).

Conversion of Monthly Payments Into Lump Sum — Application of Beneficiary Essential: The widow of a decedent worker and her two minor children were his beneficiaries under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). She remarried and thereafter made application for a lump-sum settlement of the amounts still remaining due, in the form of a letter, signing it in her name as it was before remarriage. The Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) granted the request. The guardian of the minors appointed after the death of the mother sued to recover the amount involved in the lump-sum settlement on the ground that the Board (now State Fund) acted without authority in making it. Since the mother at the time she signed the application for conversion, having then remarried, was no longer a beneficiary, the action of the Board (now State Fund) was void in the absence of an application for conversion signed by a beneficiary. Davis v. Indus. Accident Bd., 92 M 503, 15 P2d 919 (1932).

Happening of Contingency Destroying Right to Compensation: In determining the amount of a lump-sum settlement under 39-71-741, the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) must ascertain the present worth of the claimant's right to compensation, taking into consideration his expectancy of life, and in the case of a widow the added contingency of remarriage, the happening of either contingency destroying the right to continued monthly payments, and therefore the right of converting them into a lump sum. Cogdill v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 90 M 244, 2 P2d 292 (1931).

Case Notes

Waiver of Workers' Compensation Benefits Allowed — Distribution of Proportionate Share of Benefits: Decedent who died in the course of employment was survived by two children of a prior marriage and by the widow of a second marriage. Decedent's insurer and others with potential liability for death claims settled with the widow for substantial sums, but the children were not parties to the settlement. No workers' compensation claim was filed by the widow, though one was filed by decedent's employer. The compensation carrier began paying one-third of the compensation benefits to the widow and reserved two-thirds pending final determination of the children as beneficiaries. The widow advised the carrier that she did not wish to receive workers' compensation benefits and returned those she had been issued. The Workers' Compensation Court held that, as a matter of public policy, the widow could not waive death benefits and that the children's interest in the benefits would vest only if the widow died or remarried prior to the passing of 500 weeks after decedent's death. On rehearing, the court found the children to be stepchildren of the widow and therefore entitled to benefits, to be equally divided between the parties. The children appealed, contending that the widow should not be compelled to receive benefits she did not claim or intended to waive and that the children were each entitled to one-half of all available benefits. The Supreme Court held that under 1-3-204, the surviving widow could waive or abandon her right to benefits and that upon waiver the surviving children were entitled to no more than their proportionate share provided by law. In re Benefits of Gaither, 244 M 383, 797 P2d 208, 47 St. Rep. 1549 (1990).

Workers' Compensation Lump-Sum Advance — Guardian Ad Litem Appointments: A mother received a lump-sum workers' compensation advance payment. Her minor child had a separate, legally cognizable interest in present and future benefits, which might be prejudiced by any lump-sum payment to the mother; therefore, the Workers' Compensation Court should have either appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the child or made a finding stating why appointment was not necessary, and it was error to fail to do so. However, reversal was not required as there was a mutual benefit to mother and child in the payment of the benefits and the method of lump-sum advance repayment presented a very limited chance of financial loss to the child. Case Notes

Right to Permanent Partial Disability Benefits Following Death of Claimant: Justice Sheehy offered a brief and clearly well-documented explanation of the legal liability for payment of permanent partial disability benefits of a worker now expired. Citing Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10 (1981), and Grimshaw v. L. Peterson Larson Co., 213 M 291, 691 P2d 805 (1984), it was held that a worker's impairment rating is a medical component of a permanent partial disability rating and constitutes an irreducible minimum of payments that the worker is entitled to and that accrued at the time of his maximum healing. Because the date of accrual in this case was before the worker's death, his right to permanent partial disability benefits was properly an asset in his estate. Monroy v. Cenex, 246 M 365, 805 P2d 1343, 47 St. Rep. 2283 (1990).

Receiving Reduced Monthly Benefits After Settlement Not Evidence of Lack of Consideration: The claimant argued that after settling his claim with the State Fund, he received less in monthly benefits than he had prior to settling and that therefore the agreement should be void for lack of consideration. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the claimant had received other consideration, including the fact that after the settlement his benefits would continue to be paid to his estate. Hartfield v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 246 M 259, 805 P2d 1293, 47 St. Rep. 2001 (1990).

Disability Award to Widow: The widow of a claimant who had died from causes not related to the industrial injury and who was receiving total disability benefits at the time of death, and therefore, had made no election regarding partial disability benefits, was not entitled to a lump-sum payment. Hendricks v. The Anaconda Co., 173 M 59, 566 P2d 70 (1977).

Death From Cause Other Than Injury: This section means that if employee is receiving compensation as result of industrial injury and subsequently dies from causes other than injury, liability for further compensation by way of death benefits or continuing disability benefits is cut off. But statute does not terminate liability for compensation accrued prior to death and unpaid at time of death. Thus, compensation for permanent partial disability existing between time of injury and time of death is payable even after death. Breen v. Indus. Accident Bd., 150 M 463, 436 P2d 701 (1968).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (5), after "an insurer", deleted "subject to an agreement pursuant to 39-71-1102"; inserted (10) concerning an agreement with a preferred provider organization; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 628 near end of (1), after "unless", deleted "the physician specifies no substitutions or"; in (2), in two places, substituted "reimbursement rate" for "cost"; in (4), before "generic-name", deleted "physician specified no substitutions or that the"; inserted (5) limiting certain rates to the average wholesale price; inserted (6) limiting dispensation to a 30-day supply; inserted (7) requiring update of average wholesale prices; and inserted (9) providing that a worker not be required to obtain medications from an out-of-state mail service pharmacy. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 16, Ch. 628, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Effective Date: Section 4, Ch. 131, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1991."

2001 Amendment: Chapter 274 in (1) in first sentence after "paid for the first" substituted "40 hours or 5 days'" for "48 hours or 6 days'" and in second sentence at end substituted "6th day" for "7th day"; in (2) at end substituted "5-day waiting period" for "6-day waiting period"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 274, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 2001, and applies to a claim for benefits for an injury occurring on or after July 1, 2001."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 619 in (2), near beginning after "section", inserted exception clause; inserted (3) relating to augmentation of temporary total disability benefits with sick leave; and inserted (4) relating to effect of vacation leave on eligibility for benefits. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 619, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

1989 Amendment: In (1), in first sentence, substituted "No compensation may be paid for the first 48 hours or 6 days' loss of wages, whichever is less, that the claimant is totally disabled and unable to work due to an injury" for "No compensation may be paid for the first 6 days' loss of wages due to an injury" and at end of second sentence deleted "of wage loss"; in middle of (2), after "is not considered to", substituted "be entitled to compensation benefits" for "have a wage loss"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendment: In (1)(a) increased time period from 5 days to 6 days and substituted last sentence establishing eligibility at 7th day of wage loss for "If loss of wages continues for more than 5 days, compensation shall be paid from the date of injury"; and inserted (2) providing for no wage loss if worker is receiving sick leave benefits.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

No Denial of Full Legal Redress: Claimant was not denied full legal redress because of the requirement that a worker be disabled for more than 5 days to receive compensation. Claimant argued that if he had remained off the job for more than 5 days, he would have received full compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act, but because he missed only 2 days of work, the statutory requirement arbitrarily denies him his right to full legal redress. Claimant was not denied full legal redress because he has not been denied any compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act; he is entitled to benefits only under the Occupational Disease Act. Eastman v. Atl. Richfield Co., 237 M 332, 777 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 845 (1989), distinguished in Henry v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1999 MT 126, 294 M 449, 982 P2d 456, 56 St. Rep. 506 (1999).

1945 Amendment Unconstitutional: Chapter 213, L. 1945, is unconstitutional since the Legislature failed to follow constitutional mandate of having the bill printed for use of the members and that fact shows affirmatively on the journals. O'Bannon v. Gustafson, 130 M 402, 303 P2d 938 (1956).

Attorney General's Opinions

Supplementation of Workers' Compensation Benefits With Sick Leave Not Allowed: When a particular employment condition for public employees has been legislatively set, it may not be modified through collective bargaining without statutory authorization. The consequence of making payment of accrued sick leave benefits to an employee is that, effective July 1, 1987, the employee's eligibility for workers' compensation benefits is forfeited under this section. Therefore, a state agency is precluded from complying with a collective bargaining agreement that provides for supplementation of workers' compensation wage loss benefits with sick leave when entitlement to that compensation arose on or after July 1, 1987. 44 A.G. Op. 33 (1992), distinguishing 42 A.G. Op. 69 (1988).

Timing of Eligibility — Day of Wage Loss Defined: Pursuant to this section, a claimant is eligible for workers' compensation starting with the 7th day of wage loss. In the case of municipal and county employees, a day of wage loss is the loss of wages for 8 hours of work. 42 A.G. Op. 69 (1988).

Severability: Section 26, Ch. 516, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: Substituted section (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former section that read: "(1) Compensation shall run consecutively and not concurrently, and payment shall not be made for two classes of disability over the same period except that indemnity benefits under 39-71-705 through 39-71-708 and temporary total disability benefits may be paid concurrently. However, subject to the provisions of 39-71-741, this section does not prevent:

(a) the payment of a lump-sum advance settlement against projected future permanent partial indemnity benefits while a claimant is receiving temporary total disability benefits; or

(b) a settlement of a combination of different classes of disability benefits into a lump sum or into a combination of periodic and lump-sum payments.

(2) A controversy between a claimant and an insurer regarding a settlement authorized under this section is a dispute for which the workers' compensation judge has jurisdiction to make a determination."

1985 Amendments: Chapter 374 in (1) at end of first sentence, inserted exception clause.

Chapter 502 in (1) inserted all language after first sentence allowing payment of lump-sum advance settlements or payment of settlement of combination of periodic and lump-sum amounts; and inserted (2) establishing Workers' Compensation Court jurisdiction over disputes under this section.

Case Notes

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Prohibition Against Concurrent Payment of Different Classes of Benefits Inapplicable to Benefits Resulting From Separate Injuries: The Workers' Compensation Court correctly determined that Reeverts was permanently partially disabled from her original injury in 1984 and entitled to 500 weeks of permanent partial disability benefits but held that her entitlement to those benefits was terminated by a separate injury in 1989. The court cited this section as a basis for its decision prohibiting the payment of different classes of benefits at the same time. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the prohibition applies to payment of two classes of benefits resulting from the same industrial injury and does not prohibit concurrent payment of benefits for different injuries. Reeverts v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 266 M 509, 881 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 894 (1994).

Concurrent Payment of Disability and Rehabilitation Benefits Allowed: Plaintiff injured his back during the scope and course of his employment. Defendant accepted liability and began paying total disability benefits. Plaintiff entered a rehabilitation program, for which he began receiving rehabilitation benefits under Title 39, ch. 71, part 10. During his training, defendant wrote plaintiff that since his condition had stabilized, his benefits would be reduced to permanent partial benefits based on his impairment rate. Plaintiff appealed to the Workers' Compensation Court, which ruled claimant was entitled to receive benefits based on his impairment rating while concurrently receiving permanent total disability benefits during his retraining. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the term "classes" of disability referred to in 39-71-737 refers to all of the various benefits provided by the Workers' Compensation Act that are not otherwise specifically excepted. The rehabilitation benefits are distinguishable from all other benefits pursuant to 39-71-1003. The court held that the concurrent payment of two classes of benefits provided under Title 39, ch. 71, part 7, is prohibited (but see 1985 amendment notes for this section) and that the benefits provided by part 10 are not affected. (See 1985 amendment note under 39-71-1003.) Plaintiff was entitled to total disability benefits and rehabilitation benefits during his rehabilitation program. Rehabilitation benefits are totally separate from and not counted against benefits provided in Title 39, ch. 71, part 7. When plaintiff has completed his rehabilitation program, he will be entitled to his partial disability benefits. Grimshaw v. L. Peter Larson Co., 213 M 291, 691 P2d 805, 41 St. Rep. 2123 (1984).

Classes of Disability: The meaning of the term "classes of disability" as used in the section (and as this act read in 1927) refers to the different types of disabilities, to wit: temporary total, permanent total, temporary partial, and permanent partial disability. Dosen v. E. Butte Copper Min. Co., 78 M 579, 254 P2d 880 (1927).

Case Notes

Worsening of Carpal Tunnel Syndrome After Payment for Operations: State Fund paid for early 1988 carpal tunnel surgical procedures but refused to pay for further late 1992 and early 1993 surgeries, claiming that a second injury occurred in the worker's independent poultry business not covered by State Fund. The Workers' Compensation Court erred when it agreed with State Fund. State Fund offered no substantial evidence that maximum healing had been reached or that a second event or exposures caused the necessity for the second set of surgeries. In addition, the medical testimony showed that the claimant suffered worsening symptoms caused by the originally occurring carpal tunnel syndrome. Caekaert v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 105, 885 P2d 495, 51 St. Rep. 1202 (1994), followed, with regard to applicability of the last injurious exposure rule, in Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 285 M 76, 945 P2d 433, 54 St. Rep. 1051 (1997).

Reduction or Termination of Benefits: The Workers' Compensation Court retains jurisdiction to reduce or terminate disability payments to meet changing conditions under this section. Walter v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 181 M 109, 592 P2d 497 (1979).

Aggravation of Preexisting Condition: The language of this section indicates that the Legislature recognized the possibility that aggravation of an injury may occur after the normal period of compensation has expired, as occurred when an injury to one part of the employee's body resulted in the aggravation of a preexisting condition in another part of the body. Strandberg v. Reber Co., 179 M 173, 587 P2d 18, 35 St. Rep. 1742 (1978), distinguished in Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985).

Retaining Jurisdiction: When there was a question regarding a loss of earning capacity, awarding nominal disability benefits and retaining jurisdiction in the event there should be a subsequent loss of earning capacity were the proper ways for the worker to be protected. Ronshaugen v. Nat'l Ben Franklin Ins. Co., 166 M 214, 531 P2d 1348 (1975).

Deferring Payments Prohibited: Compensation shall be paid "during the period of disability", and there is no provision for deferring payments where there has been a delay in asserting them. Infelt v. Horen, 136 M 217, 346 P2d 556 (1959).

Continuing Jurisdiction of Board:

Where the evidence indicated that 200 weeks would be a reasonable period for the injured to recover and rehabilitate himself, an order granting payments for 200 weeks was not arbitrary. The statutory provisions for continuous review and revision of disability protect the claimant. Malmedal v. Indus. Accident Bd., 135 M 554, 342 P2d 745 (1959).

This section and 39-71-204 must be construed together and under them no case in which compensation has been awarded shall be finally closed until the maximum period of payments for the disability has expired, except in case of "any final settlement" which becomes final after expiration of the time specified in 39-71-204 and cases of compromise settlements. The board cannot divest itself of this continuing jurisdiction by designating an order for payment of compensation for a period less than the statutory maximum as "final". Meznarich v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 78, 53 P2d 82 (1935).

Compensation for Full Period of Injury — Continuing Jurisdiction of Board: An award of compensation should be for the full period of disability, not exceeding the maximum, and the continuing jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Board (now State Fund) may be invoked if the disability (on the facts considered) ceases or otherwise changes. Lunardello v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 94, 53 P2d 87 (1935); Meznarich v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 78, 53 P2d 82 (1935).

Reconsideration of Case: Where claimant petitioned for a rehearing on the ground that his original claim and proof of injury did not conform to the facts, and advanced an entirely new theory of the nature of the injury, the petition was properly dismissed, this section granting power to the Board (now State Fund) to make adjustments of compensation to meet changed conditions not contemplating reconsideration of a case on such grounds. Shugg v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 100 M 159, 46 P2d 435 (1935).

Case Notes

Lower Court — Wide Discretion in Determining Lump-Sum Proposals: The Supreme Court affirmed a lower court's decision employing a presumption favoring periodic payments. The court stated that it would afford lower courts wide discretion in reviewing lump-sum petitions because the lower courts occupy the best position to familiarize themselves with the needs of the claimant and the probable results of granting or denying the proposal. In reaching a decision, the courts must consider the best interests of the claimant, the claimant's family, and the public. Hernandez v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 210, 770 P2d 502, 46 St. Rep. 302 (1989).

Question of Equal Protection Not Reached: Claimant argued that the lower court's decision: (1) rested on the classification of individuals; and (2) held that persons with business acumen could receive lump-sum payments and those without business acumen could not. The Supreme Court found that the lower court had considered the interests of the claimant, the claimant's family, and the public, based its decision on the particular facts of the case, and concluded that the presumption favoring periodic payments applied. The court held that there existed no issue in the case before it of whether or not a classification based on possession of business acumen would survive equal protection analysis. Hernandez v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 236 M 210, 770 P2d 502, 46 St. Rep. 302 (1989).

Periodic Payments Preferred — Purpose: The purpose behind usually paying workers' compensation in periodic rather than lump-sum payments is to preclude an employee or his dependent from imprudently wasting his means of support and thereby becoming a burden upon society. Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162, 38 St. Rep. 1572 (1981).

Lump-Sum Settlement as Exception to General Rule: The intention of the Legislature in enacting the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) was that the periodical payment plan provided by this section should be the rule, and the lump-sum settlement authorized by 39-71-741 the exception. Davis v. Indus. Accident Bd., 92 M 503, 15 P2d 919 (1932).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 310 substituted (1) relating to what benefits may be converted to a lump sum, and how, for former (1) through (3) (see 1997 Session Law for former text); deleted (6) that required the Department to approve or deny a lump-sum settlement in writing, subject to the other provisions of this section, and to notify claimant of the approval or denial; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 310, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 243 in (1)(a), after "Benefits", inserted "under this chapter" and after "whole" inserted "or in part"; at beginning of (2)(a) deleted "If an insurer has accepted initial liability for an injury"; inserted (2)(a)(i) and (2)(a)(ii) concerning acceptance for initial liability and agreement to a lump-sum conversion; at end of (2)(b) deleted "or $20,000, whichever is less"; in (2)(c), in second sentence, substituted "lump-sum conversion" for "settlement"; in (2)(d), after "Upon approval", deleted "the agreement constitutes"; in (4), after "under", substituted "this section" for "subsection (3)"; at end of (5)(b) deleted "rounded to the nearest whole number"; in (6), in first sentence after "department", substituted "shall" for "has full power, authority, and jurisdiction to allow", after "approve" substituted "or deny in writing" for "or condition", and after "settlements" deleted "for any type of benefits provided for under this chapter" and deleted former second and third sentences that read: "All such compromise settlements and lump-sum payments are void without the approval of the department. Approval by the department must be in writing"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 243, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1991 Amendment: In (1)(c), at end, deleted "or by any court"; deleted (1)(d) and former (2)(d) that read: "The parties' failure to reach an agreement is not a dispute over which a mediator or the workers' compensation court has jurisdiction"; in (2)(a), after "for an injury", deleted "permanent total and", after "permanent partial" substituted "disability" for "wage supplement", and after "whole" inserted "or in part"; deleted former (2)(b) that read: "(b) the conversion may be made only upon agreement between a claimant and an insurer"; inserted (2)(b) relating to the limitation on the total of lump-sum conversion in part; in (2)(c), after "the department may", deleted "approve an agreement if:

(i) there is a reasonable dispute concerning the amount of the insurer's future liability or benefits; or

(ii) the amount of the insurer's projected liability is reasonably certain and the settlement amount is not substantially less than the present value of the insurer's liability" and inserted language at end relating to disapproval of a settlement determined to be inadequate; in (2)(d), at end, deleted "or by any court"; deleted former (3) that provided: "(3) (a) Permanent partial wage supplement benefits may be converted in part to a lump-sum advance.

(b) The conversion may be made only upon agreement between a claimant and an insurer.

(c) The agreement is subject to department approval. The department may approve an agreement if the parties demonstrate that the claimant has financial need that:

(i) relates to the necessities of life or relates to an accumulation of debt incurred prior to injury; and

(ii) arises subsequent to the date of injury or arises because of reduced income as a result of the injury.

(d) The parties' failure to reach an agreement is not a dispute over which a mediator or the workers' compensation court has jurisdiction"; in (3), in first sentence after "converted", inserted "in whole or in part" and substituted "lump sum" for "lump-sum advance", in second sentence, after "all lump-sum", deleted "advance payments" and inserted "conversions in part that are awarded", and in fourth and fifth sentences, after "lump-sum", deleted "advance"; in (3)(a)(iii), after "self-employment venture", deleted "as set forth in 39-71-1026; and" and inserted "that is considered feasible under criteria set forth by the department; or"; inserted (4) relating to conversion of lump-sum benefits under subsection (3); in (5), after "lump-sum", substituted "payment" for "advance"; in (6), in first sentence, inserted "Subject to other provisions of this section", after "settlements" inserted "for any type of benefits provided for under this chapter", and after "or lump-sum" substituted "payments" for "advances"; in (7), at beginning of first sentence, deleted "Subject to 39-71-2401" and in middle, after "lump-sum", deleted "advance under subsection (4)" and in second sentence, after "or a lump-sum", substituted "payment" for "advance"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 15, Ch. 574, L. 1991, was a severability section.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 64, Ch. 613, L. 1989, provided that in the provisions of the Montana Code Annotated, the terms "division of workers' compensation", "division", and "workers' compensation division" are changed to "department of labor and industry" or "department", meaning the "department of labor and industry". Such change was made in this section.

1987 Amendment: Substituted section (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former section that read: "(1) The biweekly payments provided for in this chapter may be converted, in whole or in part, into a lump-sum payment. Regardless of the date of the injury or of a prior lump-sum payment, a lump-sum conversion of permanent total biweekly payments awarded or paid after April 15, 1985, must equal the estimated present value of the total unpaid permanent total biweekly payments, assuming interest at 7% per year, compounded annually, unless the conversion improves the financial condition of the worker or his beneficiary, as provided in subsection (2)(b). If the estimated duration of the compensation period is the remaining life expectancy of the claimant or the claimant's beneficiary, the remaining life expectancy must be determined by using the most recent table of life expectancy in years as published by the United States national center for health statistics.

(2) The conversion can only be made upon the written application of the injured worker or the worker's beneficiary, with the concurrence of the insurer, and approval of the conversion rests in the discretion of the division as to the amount of the lump-sum payment and the advisability of the conversion. It is presumed that biweekly payments are in the best interests of the worker or his beneficiary. The approval or award of a lump-sum conversion by the division or the workers' compensation judge must be the exception, not the rule, and may be given only if the worker or his beneficiary demonstrates that his ability to sustain himself financially is more probable with a whole or partial lump-sum conversion than with the biweekly payments and his other available resources. The following procedure must be used by the division and the workers' compensation judge in determining whether a lump-sum conversion of permanent total biweekly payments will be approved or awarded:

(a) The difference between the present discounted value of a lump sum and the future value of the biweekly payments cannot be the only grounds for approving or awarding a lump-sum conversion.

(b) A lump-sum conversion that improves the financial condition of the worker or his beneficiary over what would have been reasonably expected had the worker not been injured or died can be approved or awarded only if the lump-sum conversion is limited to the purchase price to the insurer of an annuity that would yield an amount equal to the biweekly benefits payable over the estimated duration of the compensation period. The worker or his beneficiary must demonstrate the financial condition that would have been reasonably expected, taking into consideration his age, education, work experience, and probable job promotions and pay increases.

(c) If the existing delinquent or outstanding debts are used as grounds for a lump-sum conversion, the worker or his beneficiary must demonstrate through a debt management plan that a lump sum for that purpose is necessary to sustain himself financially.

(d) If a business venture is used as grounds for a lump-sum conversion, the worker or his beneficiary must demonstrate through a business plan that a lump sum for that purpose is necessary to sustain himself financially. The business plan must at least show the feasibility of the business, given the market conditions in the intended market area, and the cash that will be available to him on a biweekly basis after start-up costs and other business expenses are considered throughout the expected life of the venture.

(3) If the division finds that an application for lump-sum conversion does not adequately demonstrate the ability of the worker or his beneficiary to sustain himself financially, the division may order, at the insurer's expense, financial, medical, vocational rehabilitation, educational, or other evaluative studies to determine whether a lump-sum conversion is in the best interest of the worker or his beneficiary.

(4) The division has full power, authority, and jurisdiction to allow and approve compromises of claims under this chapter. All settlements and compromises of compensation provided in this chapter are void without the approval of the division. Approval of the division must be in writing. The division shall directly notify every claimant of any division order approving or denying a claimant's settlement or compromise of a claim.

(5) A controversy between a claimant and an insurer regarding the conversion of biweekly payments into a lump sum is considered a dispute for which the workers' compensation judge has jurisdiction to make a determination."

1985 Amendment: In (1) inserted all language after first sentence (see 1987 amendment note for text); in (2) inserted all language after first sentence (see 1987 amendment note for text; inserted (3) allowing Division to order additional studies to determine if lump-sum conversion is in worker's best interest; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Applicability — Retroactive Effect: Section 6, Ch. 471, L. 1985 (section 1 of which extensively amended this section's tests for granting a lump sum), provided: "This act applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to injuries incurred and lump sums awarded or paid prior to the effective date of this act [April 15, 1985] if a lump sum is awarded or paid for the injury or the award or settlement is reopened and redetermined after the effective date of this act. The mere passage of this act is not grounds for reopening any case."

INJURIES OCCURRING AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Reopening Workers' Compensation Settlement for Mutual Mistake — Statute of Limitations: Workers' compensation claimant was held to have discovered in October 1986 that back surgery was a possibility when at that time his doctor discussed with claimant the possibility of surgery and advised claimant to consider it. Furthermore, in that month, claimant's attorney for a social security disability claim notified the administrative law judge of the doctor's conclusion, and the judge's decision in claimant's favor was based in part on a possibility of surgery. Therefore, the 2-year statute of limitations for a claim based on mutual mistake (assuming that there was one) expired in October 1988 because a full and final compromise settlement approved by the Workers' Compensation Court was made without knowledge that surgery might well be necessary. The claim was barred because claimant's petition to reopen the compromise settlement was filed in July 1990. Rath v. St. Labre Indian School, 249 M 433, 816 P2d 1061, 48 St. Rep. 758 (1991).

Lump-Sum Application Procedure as Improper Delegation of Legislative Authority and Unconstitutional Deprivation of Access to Courts: Under this section, as amended in 1987, no application for a lump-sum conversion may be made to the Department of Labor and Industry unless the conversion is agreed upon by the claimant and the insurer. If they fail to agree, there is no dispute over which a mediator or the Workers' Compensation Court has jurisdiction. The effect of the amendment places a tilt in favor of the insurer or the claimant, either of whom can withhold consent for a conversion for any reason or for no reason. In cases when a claimant agrees with an insurer, the legislature has thus improperly and unconstitutionally delegated to the insurer an absolute discretion as to whether a lump-sum conversion of permanent partial wages settlement benefits will be converted. This not only deprives the Workers' Compensation Court of jurisdiction but it also deprives the Supreme Court of its appellate power, the only appeal allowed by law, amounting to an abrogation of the principle that judicial power cannot be taken away by legislative action and negating the constitutional mandate that insurers and claimants have the right of access to the courts. (This decision does not affect cases that occurred prior to the effective date of the 1987 amendment.) Ingraham v. Champion Int'l, 243 M 42, 793 P2d 769, 47 St. Rep. 650 (1990).

INJURIES OCCURRING PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION

Lump-Sum Advance Properly Denied — No Abuse of Discretion: Claimant, who is totally disabled, petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a lump-sum advance against permanent partial disability benefits that would otherwise be available to her at age 65. The court concluded that claimant did not establish by a preponderance of credible evidence that the lump-sum advance requested was in her best interest and denied the petition. The Supreme Court affirmed. The best interests of the claimant, the claimant's family, and the general public are the primary factors to be considered when evaluating lump-sum settlements. For industrial accident claims, periodic payments should be the rule and lump-sum settlements should be the exception. Workers' Compensation Court decisions denying lump-sum settlements will not be interfered with on appeal unless there is an abuse of discretion. Sullivan v. Aetna Life & Cas., 271 M 12, 894 P2d 278, 52 St. Rep. 296 (1995).

Lump Sum Approved for Purchase of Apartment Building: After finding the investment to be active rather than passive and noting claimant's pressing need and lack of debilitating physical limitations, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of a lump sum for the purchase of an apartment building as being in claimant's best interests. Crittendon v. Terri's Restaurant & Lounge, 247 M 293, 806 P2d 534, 48 St. Rep. 203 (1991), distinguishing Daniels v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 230 M 407, 750 P2d 455 (1988), and Komeotis v. Williamson Fencing, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153 (1988).

Posttrial Appraisals Not Violative of Right to Fair Hearing: After trial on the question of a lump-sum award, the Worker's Compensation Court requested appraisals on the heating, plumbing, and electrical systems of the apartment building that was the subject of the award, which State Fund contended was a deprivation of its right to examine opposing witnesses and allowed claimant to prove her case after trial. However, because the court reviewed claimant's evidence twice and reached its conclusion granting the lump sum without benefit of the posttrial appraisals, State Fund was not deprived of its right to a fair and impartial hearing. Crittendon v. Terri's Restaurant & Lounge, 247 M 293, 806 P2d 534, 48 St. Rep. 203 (1991).

Failure to Inform Claimant of Right to Attorney Not Constructive Fraud: The claimant argued that at the time he settled his claim, he was not informed that he could retain an attorney to handle his claim and that this failure constituted constructive fraud. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in finding that no constructive fraud existed because the claimant was articulate, had negotiated an earlier settlement with the State Fund, and was well aware of the significance of a sound economic future for himself and his family. Hartfield v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 246 M 259, 805 P2d 1293, 47 St. Rep. 2001 (1990).

No Unilateral Mistake of Law if Other Party Unaware of Misapprehension: The claimant argued that he had entered into the settlement believing that he was not entitled to receive benefits after age 65. The Supreme Court ruled that there can be no relief for a unilateral mistake of law unless it can be shown that the other party knew of the misapprehension. Hartfield v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 246 M 259, 805 P2d 1293, 47 St. Rep. 2001 (1990).

Discount to Present Value Applicable Only to Permanent Total Disability Payments: The discount to present value provided for in this section applies only to permanent total disability payments. The discount does not apply to permanent partial disability payments even though the claimant is eligible for permanent partial payments because of his status as a permanently totally disabled claimant who has reached the age of 65 and has retired. Franck v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 241 M 486, 787 P2d 769, 47 St. Rep. 472 (1990).

Lump-Sum Award Denied — Insufficient Proof It Would Alleviate Psychological Problems: The claimant argued that a lump-sum award would allow him to invest in a business, which would restore his sense of self-worth since he was no longer able to perform the physical labor he had done prior to his injury. There was conflicting testimony on whether the payment would relieve the claimant's depression. The Supreme Court held that it was not an abuse of discretion to deny the single payment. Reinhard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 240 M 370, 784 P2d 398, 46 St. Rep. 2202 (1989).

Conversion to Lump Sum — Written Application by Claimant and Concurrence of State Fund Required: This section requires written application by the worker with the concurrence of the State Fund in order to effectuate conversion of biweekly benefits to a lump-sum payment. (Decision based on 1983 statutory language applicable to a pre-1985 injury; but see 1987 statutory changes applicable to later injuries.) Hilbig v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 375, 777 P2d 1296, 46 St. Rep. 1347 (1989).

Amount Awarded Insufficient to Meet Need: Claimant originally sought a lump sum to pay for a car that was repossessed before he could pay it off. He then financed a new car for a higher amount than he had originally requested. His attorney failed to amend the petition to request the higher amount needed to finance the new car. It was an abuse of discretion for the Workers' Compensation Court to limit the lump-sum award to an amount that was insufficient to meet the need that the court identified as proper. Claimant should be allowed the larger amount in a lump sum. Hedegaard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 290, 776 P2d 1225, 46 St. Rep. 1275 (1989).

Weekly Recoupment of Lump Sum Allowed: An insurer is entitled to a weekly recoupment of a lump-sum advance prior to a final settlement of claimant's claim. Claimant is not entitled to double recovery of both a lump-sum advance and the biweekly payments. Hedegaard v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 238 M 290, 776 P2d 1225, 46 St. Rep. 1275 (1989), followed in Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Scribner, 253 M 236, 833 P2d 166, 49 St. Rep. 485 (1992).

Effect of Inflation on Award of Lump Sum: Claimant asserted that where a sound business proposal was coupled with evidence demonstrating health benefits from a lump-sum conversion, the rule against inflation as justification for granting a lump sum did not apply. However, the lower court's decision not to grant the lump sum because inflation might cause a future "pressing need" was consistent with previous dispositions in Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986), and LaVe v. School District, 220 M 52, 713 P2d 546, 43 St. Rep. 165 (1986). Komeotis v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153, 45 St. Rep. 1098 (1988).

Partial Conversion Denied — Depression Properly Considered: Claimant petitioned for lump sums of $10,000 to cover medical expenses and to purchase a reliable vehicle and $110,000 to purchase and operate rental property. Experts testified the rental property plan was financially feasible and would lessen claimant's severe depression but also revealed that claimant's physical and educational deficits would hamper his ability to care for the rentals and that other vocational options might ease his depression. The lower court granted the $10,000 request but denied the $110,000 request. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the lower court may have understated the severity of depression but that rehabilitation and counseling could provide claimant with activity to alleviate his depression. It was within the lower court's discretion to conclude that claimant failed to overcome the presumption for periodic payments. Komeotis v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 232 M 340, 756 P2d 1153, 45 St. Rep. 1098 (1988), distinguishing Polich v. Whalen's O.K. Tire Warehouse, 194 M 167, 634 P2d 1162 (1981), Utick v. Utick, 181 M 351, 593 P2d 739 (1979), and Legowik v. Montgomery Ward, 157 M 436, 486 P2d 867 (1971).

Denial of Lump Sum for Backhoe Business — Too Speculative: Claimant's request for a lump sum to start a backhoe business was denied as too speculative and claimant's business role too tangential to justify risking a substantial portion of claimant's benefits. Evidence showed: (1) there were discrepancies in business income potential; (2) data used in the plan was outdated and did not reflect recent construction industry declines; (3) claimant's husband, who was to run the business, had little experience in the field; (4) there were already some 30 backhoe businesses in the area; and (5) the plan made no provisions for labor costs or depreciation. Daniels v. EBI/Orion Group, 230 M 407, 750 P2d 455, 45 St. Rep. 310 (1988).

Denial of Lump-Sum Housing Allowance: All of claimant's evidence justifying a lump sum for housing included property large enough to run a business, but a lump sum for the business was denied as speculative. The District Court properly denied the housing lump-sum request as inappropriate and agreed to reconsider the request on more appropriate evidence of nonbusiness-related housing. Daniels v. EBI/Orion Group, 230 M 407, 750 P2d 455, 45 St. Rep. 310 (1988).

Lump Sum for Business Venture Affirmed: A lump-sum payment of benefits for a proposed business venture was affirmed where: (1) claimant presented an extensive economic analysis of her proposed business and testified about steps she had already taken to start the venture; (2) her expert testified about projected market and earnings of the business over the first 3 years; and (3) her attorney pointed out that her permanent partial disability benefits would expire at age 40. There was substantial evidence that the venture was in claimant's best interest despite the state fund expert's conclusion that the venture was highly speculative. Lauderdale v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 229 M 188, 745 P2d 690, 44 St. Rep. 1883 (1987).

No Retroactive Application of Lump-Sum Discount: The 7% statutory discount provision of lump-sum conversions of future permanent total disability benefits and procedural requirements cannot be applied to a workers' compensation injury that occurred prior to April 15, 1985. Odenbach v. Buffalo Rapids Project, 225 M 96, 731 P2d 1297, 44 St. Rep. 67 (1987).

No Retroactive Application of Lump-Sum Conversion of Biweekly Workers' Compensation Benefits or Discount to Present Value Conversions — Prospective Application Not Violative of Equal Protection: The lump-sum conversion of biweekly workers' compensation benefits and discounting to present value conversions added to this section by 1985 amendment may not be constitutionally applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to April 15, 1985, the effective date of the amendment. However, prospective application of the procedure set out in subsection (2) of this section is not violative of the constitutional equal protection guaranties because the amendments merely codified in detailed form prior case law allowing a conversion and represented no significant change from the law as it existed prior to April 15, 1985. Buckman v. Mont.

Deaconess Hosp., 224 M 318, 730 P2d 380, 43 St. Rep. 2216 (1986), followed in Komeotis v. Williamson Fencing, 225 M 356, 736 P2d 93, 44 St. Rep. 298 (1987).

Amendment of Method of Computing Lump-Sum Award — Best Interests of Claimant as Threshold Test: Although 1985 amendments to this section created new criteria for establishing the need for a lump-sum award and allowed discounting of lump-sum payments, the threshold test for a lump-sum award remained that of the best interests of the claimant. When the claimant did not demonstrate that a lump-sum award was in his best interests, he lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of the methodology of computation of lump-sum awards. Stelling v. Rivercrest Ranches, Inc., 224 M 313, 730 P2d 388, 43 St. Rep. 2212 (1986).

Denial of Lump Sum for Purchase of House to Avoid Raise in Rent: Absent any age or health reasons necessitating purchase of a house, testimony by appellant that he wished to avoid future escalation of rent payments was not adequate to meet the burden of advancing substantial credible evidence of a "pressing need" to purchase a house. Therefore, denial of a lump-sum award for this purpose was proper. (1985 amendment not applicable to this case) Belton v. Carlson Transp., 220 M 194, 714 P2d 148, 43 St. Rep. 286 (1986). See also Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 226 M 432, 736 P2d 123, 44 St. Rep. 781 (1987).

Authority of Division of Workers' Compensation (Now State Fund) Limited to Allowing or Disallowing Settlement: The Division (now State Fund), under this section, has no authority to unilaterally rescind, alter, or amend the terms of a settlement agreement. It can only allow or disallow a proffered settlement agreement. Bowen v. The Anaconda Co., 220 M 185, 714 P2d 142, 43 St. Rep. 278 (1986).

Denial of Lump-Sum Payment for Investment: Claimant LaVe advanced two principal reasons for requesting a lump-sum payment of permanent total disability benefits: (1) her outstanding debts; and (2) her wish to invest the money and receive a return which would be greater than the weekly benefits. The Supreme Court, citing Kent v. Sievert, 158 M 79, 489 P2d 104 (1971), held that her desired investment was not reason by itself to award a lump-sum payment; otherwise, any claimant desiring a lump-sum award could secure one by proposing to invest it. This would defeat the statutory intent of 39-71-741, as lump-sum awards are to be the exception, not the rule. The court also noted that LaVe had received lump-sum advances approximate to her outstanding debts. Given these facts, the Supreme Court held that the Workers' Compensation Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the lump-sum payment. LaVe v. School District, 220 M 52, 713 P2d 546, 43 St. Rep. 165 (1986).

Lump-Sum Payment Discounted to Present Value — Not Authorized Under Former Version of Section: Claimant was to receive a lump-sum payment, but it was error for the Workers' Compensation Court to hold that the payment could be discounted to its present value before awarding it. The Supreme Court examined the legislative history of 39-71-741 (prior to its 1985 amendment) noting that from 1915 to 1975 the section specifically provided for a discount to present value, but the provision was removed by 1975 amendment. The court further held that a lump-sum award may be either a full or partial lump-sum payment, but such an award may not be discounted to present value. Willis v. Long Constr. Co., 213 M 203, 690 P2d 434, 41 St. Rep. 2050 (1984), followed in Madill v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 280 M 450, 930 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 4 (1997).

Lump-Sum Payment Not Appropriate — Claimant Did Not Submit Written Plan: The claimant is not entitled to a lump-sum payment of future disability payments as he has failed to submit a written plan setting forth the reasons for the lump-sum request and his plan for using the lump sum if granted. Claimant bypassed this statutory procedure, and this was sufficient grounds for the Workers' Compensation Court to deny his request for a lump-sum payment. Moilanen v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 214 M 367, 694 P2d 485, 42 St. Rep. 25 (1985).

Consideration of Claimant's Wife's Income Held Proper: In evaluating the need for a lump-sum benefit and the best interests of the parties involved, the court held in a pre-1985 amendment case that it was proper for the Workers' Compensation Court to consider the income of claimant's wife. Ruple v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 209 M 276, 679 P2d 1252, 41 St. Rep. 704 (1984).

Lump Sum to Start Business Venture Denied: In requesting a lump-sum settlement the claimant testified that he was current on his monthly bills and could meet his projected monthly expenses. He requested the lump-sum settlement to start a business venture involving the consignment of used vehicles. Because the trial court was in a better position to evaluate the claimant's proposal, its denial was upheld. Bundtrock v. Duff Chevrolet, 199 M 128, 647 P2d 856, 39 St. Rep. 1211 (1982).

Permanent or Temporary Disability — Effect on Lump-Sum Benefits: The claimant's argument that the trial court's refusal to find him permanently disabled adversely affected the amount of a lump-sum settlement was without merit. Whether a claimant is entitled to a
